So many articles and reports about this genocide have been written and as many denials have been voiced. And last Sunday, in an apparent reaction to Mr Nasution's statement, the Vietnamese Embassy here also released a denial claiming it as "a slanderous campaign of the United States with the complicity of China in an attempt to vilify Vietnam and conceal the crime of using toxic chemicals committed by the United States themselves in their war of aggression against the peoples of Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea." But none of these denials have been convincing and to deny is much easier than to find the facts because denials need no proofs. The UN team, which was said to have failed to get any proof of the biochemical weapons victims after it was sent to Thailand in 1981, received samples of residue and photographs of the Soviet planes and helicopters used in the biochemical warfare and of the victims but at last failed to make any conclusion because it could not ascertain the actual sources of the samples.

Biochemical weapons are dangerous to mankind and their use has been banned. But the world seems to have taken this kind of genocide as trivial maybe because it victimizes a small group of people whose whereabouts are not clear in the geography books. Reports said that the same weapons being used in Afghanistan and Ethiopia were very difficult to prove until one day investigating teams complained that "it is too late." The world seems to be more interested in talking about the strategic arms than this yellow rain just as the primitive people living in a remote village talk about the danger of tigers which have never killed anyone than mosquitoes which claim lives all the times.

A leader of the Lao people in the refugee camp may ask, "why are no countries, no people, caring about the genocide of my people in Laos from the poisonous rains?" But most people may think this question is not so mindboggling as nuclear warfare. That is why nobody has raised this problem at the recent disarmament talks in New York. They are waiting until this rain falls on the noncommunist world. Maybe.

SUBROTO BRIEFS SUHARTO ON OPEC DEVELOPMENTS

BK270930 Jakarta Domestic Service in Indonesian 0700 GMT 27 Jul 82

[Text] Minister Coordinator for Economy, Finance and Industry Wijoyo Nitisastro, together with Mining and Energy Minister Subroto and Pertamina's President Director Yudo Sumbono, today reported to President Suharto at the Bina Graha building on problems connected with developments in OPEC, particularly the recent Vienna meeting.

Acting as spokesman, Minister Subroto told newsmen that the OPEC countries agreed to maintain the 17.5 million barrels per day maximum production level as adopted in Quito, Ecuador. This means that allegations made by the Western press that OPEC was divided because of their differences on the production level were not true.

The mining and energy minister also disclosed that in the last few months during the third quarter, pending the advent of the fourth quarter of this year, it is expected that there will be an increase in demand for oil. This will act to increase OPEC's output.

For this purpose, Subroto said, the OPEC monitoring committee will meet again next August to urge OPEC members to maintain the Quito decision on the maximum production level of 17.5 million barrels per day.

Minister Subroto also reported on his visit to Canada which has resulted in the signing of agreement on the use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON GHAZALI-THACH TALKS

BK281225 Kuala Lumpur Domestic Service in English 1130 GMT 28 Jul 82

Tan Sri Ghazali reiterated the principles of the International Conference on Kampuchea sponsored by the United Nations will not be sacrificed in finding a political solution to the Kampuchean problem. The minister said that certain ideas have been presented to the Vietnamese foreign minister, Nguyen Co Thach, during their discussions in Kuala Lumpur over the past 4 days. Both sides agreed to maintain communications on this issue. Among the details still to be worked out include the composition of the parties to the conference and its agenda.

Tan Sri Ghazali said he got the impression of the visit that Vietnam wants to be friendly with ASEAN. It has the desire to accommodate ASEAN's wishes. Though there was disagreement on fundamental issues like the withdrawal of foreign forces from Kampuchea, the positions of both sides have been made clear. The minister has stressed to Mr Thach that Vietnam should take the opportunity of the formation of the Government of Democratic Kampuchea to find a political solution to the Kampuchean issue.

Tan Sri Ghazali leaves for Indonesia tonight to brief Indonesian leaders on the outcome of his talks with Mr Nguyen Co Thach. The Vietnamese foreign minister is now in Bangkok.

AFP Report

BK281149 Hong Kong AFP in English 1121 GMT 28 Jul 82

[By N.G. Nair]

[Excerpts] Kuala Lumpur, July 28 (AFP) -- The idea of a new international conference to facilitate a solution of the Kampuchean problem emerged in the discussions here between Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach and Malaysian Leaders. Malaysian Foreign Minsiter Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie, who saw Mr Thach off at the airport, told newsmen later that the international conference idea was "not lifted from the Ho Chi Minh City proposals" made by the three Indochinese foreign ministers after their recent meeting. He said the holding of another international conference, however, was not inconsistent with the ICK declaration, which permitted various avenues to be explored to bring about a political solution of the Kampuchean problem.

Asked about the Vietnamese stand that the situation in Kampuchea "is irreversible," Mr Thach said it was "irreversible" in regard to return of the ousted Pol Pot regime. "What would be reversible is the military presence of Vietnam in Kampuchea" which would be ended once the Chinese threat was removed, he said. Mr Ghazali, referring to these remarks, said this reflected a change in Vietnam's stand.

The Malaysian foreign minister said that he had kept the other ASEAN capitals fully informed of the course of the discussions with Mr Thach here.

Mr Ghazali said the dialogue with Vietnam would be continued. "Mr Thach and I have agreed to keep the line between Kuala Lumpur and Hanoi open. I would also be meeting him again in New York during the General Assembly session in September," he said.

SK281302 Kuala Lumpur International Service in English 0800 GMT 28 Jul 82

[Text] The Vietnamese foreign minister, Mr Nguyen Co Thach's 4-day visit to Malaysia has failed to bring both nations any closer on the question of Vietnam's aggression against and military occupation of Kampuchea. The Malaysian Foreign Ministry has stated simply that there is no change in the perception of the problem on either side and no agreement on the approach. The position of both countries on the issue remained the same and the only point of agreement was that both Malaysia and Vietnam should maintain contacts and continue the present dialogue.

Even before Mr Thach had arrived in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia had expressed the view that Vietnam's recent acts and statements did not give cause for optimism and that the Vietnamese foreign minister's visit was not expected to change any policies, perception or posture. But still the channel of communications would be kept open and the acceptance by the Malaysian prime minister, Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir Mohamed, of the invitation to visit Vietnam is an indication that high level contacts would be maintained.

Vietnam has been appraised of the Malaysian point of view and it is hoped that Mr Nguyen Co Thach would have felt the joint resolve and determination of Malaysia and its ASEAN partners not to reward military aggression in the region. Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie reiterated the Malaysian view that the durable peace in Kampuchea can only be realized through a political solution to the conflict based on the declaration of the International Conference on Kampuchea.

To begin with, there must be a total and unconditional withdrawal of all Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea. Vietnam's offer of a partial withdrawal has been rejected by ASEAN. A partial or a substantial withdrawal means nothing. To quote the Singapore prime minister, Mr Lee Kuan Yew, it could mean 1 percent or even 99 percent.

A UN supervised general election would then be held to enable the Kampuchean people to determine what kind of government they want. Kampuchea would then become a neutral nation and such neutrality would ensure the exclusion of any big power interference in the internal affairs of Kampuchea. Such a proposal would enable the Vietnamese to withdraw honorably from Kampuchea and help that poor nation to work towards the betterment of its own people.

The Vietnamese foreign minister explained several aspects of the communique released recently in Ho Chi Minh City which called for an international conference on Kampuchea comprising the Indochinese states, ASEAN and the permanent members of the Security Council. This proposal had not elicited any positive ASEAN response because we feel that the International Conference on Kampuchea has met and decided on a future course of action. Vietnam should accept and implement these proposals if indeed it is interested in improving the well being of Kampucheans and the security of the region. It is useless for Vietnam to argue that it is in Kampuchea to prevent the massacre of the Kampuchean people at the hands of Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge or to remove the so-called Chinese threat to the region.

Hanoi appears to have forgotten the principle that Kampuchea exists for the Kampucheans. If indeed Vietnam wants to be positive, it should help in the international efforts to secure a free, united, truly independent and neutral Kampuchea.

MARCOS ISSUES DIRECTIVES ON NATURAL RESOURCES

The president also said the government is determined to aid financially the distressed copper industry. However, Mr Marcos cautioned the labor sector against seeking high wage increases. The president also said government financing institutions will support both the copper companies and its 40,000 workers. He also indicated that other mining firms are interested to invest in the industry, but may not be so if labor becomes restive. The president reiterated that labor should be reasonable and not rock the boat by asking too much increase in wages at this time.

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS 'DISTORTED' BBC DOCUMENTARY

[Text] The Philippine Government is protesting at the British Broadcasting Corporation's television documentary shown last week over BBC network in England. The documentary was described as showing a distorted view of the country's political and economic conditions. Media Affairs Minister Gregorio Sendana accused the BBC crew that visited Manila late last year of unprofessionalism and unethical conduct in getting official news sources and events. The documentary, according to Minister Sendana, was a film about the Philippine development under the administration of the president. Through the use of deceit for news materials, Minister Sendana said the film showed nothing but out-and-out antigovernment program that partly centers on an opposition politician [sentence as heard]. The opposition politician has narrated and scripted portions of the documentary for propaganda aims at the expense of his own countrymen.

The media affairs minister demanded an official protest and equal time in the BBC network through the showing of another documentary that will present an objective view of the Philippine situation.

PRC EMBASSY OFFICIAL BRIEFED ON TEXTBOOK ISSUE

[Text] Tokyo, Jul 29, KYODO -- A high-ranking Education Ministry official Thursday expressed regret to representatives from the Chinese Embassy here over the misunderstanding among Chinese people caused by changed descriptions of the war in China in Japanese textbooks.

According to ministry sources, Isao Suzuki, director general of the Education Ministry's Elementary and Secondary Education Bureau, invited Chinese Minister-Counsellor Wang Xiaoyun to the ministry Thursday evening to ask for China's understanding of the process of school textbook authorization. In his explanation, Suzuki told Wang that he was very sorry that descriptions in Japanese school textbooks had caused the misunderstanding at a time when Japan-China friendship relations should be further deepened.

Suzuki told Wang that Japanese school textbooks included material about the purposes of the Japan-China joint communique and the Japan-China friendship treaty. He told the Chinese representative that Japan's fundamental posture toward the sense of the communique and the treaty had not shown any change and that the posture would be maintained in the future. Suzuki also told Wang that the textbooks contained descriptions of the damage to China by Japan.

In response, Wang was believed to have pointed to specific references about China which China claims to be distortions of the facts. He also made inquiries about the authorization process for school texbooks.

Tang Jiaxuan, first secretary of the Chinese Embassy, and Yukihiko Hishimura, deputy vice-minister of the Education Ministry were present at the discussion. Preliminary explanations of the textbook issue were conveyed to China's Foreign Ministry Wednesday by Japanese Embassy officials in Beijing.

Education Minister Heiji Ogawa, meanwhile, indicated his ministry would not reverse the textbook revision which touched off the current controversy. In the revised textbooks, Japan's "invasion" of China before World War II becomes an "advance" into that country. Descriptions of Japanese military atrocities in Nanjing are also toned down. Ogawa told a House of Councillors committee meeting Thursday afternoon that "it is regrettable that this unforeseen thing has occurred."

He said there has been no change in Japan's repentance for inflicting extensive damage on China. Ogawa said China would understand the Education Ministry's "true motive" if the government explains it fully. He said the textbooks make it clear that Japan initiated the war in China and that they also include the purport of the Japan-China joint communique. The education minister also said the government is not considering any revival of militarism.

JAPANESE, AUSTRALIAN MINISTERS HOLD TRADE TALKS

[By KYODO staff correspondent Shiro Yoneyama]

[Text] Canberra, Jul 28, KYODO -- Japan's trade minister warned Wednesday, Australia's moves to curtail imports of Japanese steel may result in a reduction of Japan's iron ore imports from Australia.

Shintaro Abe, minister of international trade and industry, denied a local report Japan will be cutting back on coking coal imports from Australia by as much as 30 percent in the September quarter. "It's not true," Abe told a news conference. "Demand for coal will go up, not go down." Abe will be attending a two-day ministerial conference here.

The Japanese Cabinet minister indicated that coal imports from the western United States will not be forthcoming due to higher cost and difficulties in shipping it to Japan. "The Australians appear nervous about the plan" to buy coal from the United States, he added. But Abe cautioned the Fraser government against reducing steel imports from Japan -- about 500,000 tons last year -- a move which he said is detrimental to free trade. "Such steps may force Japan's iron ore imports from Australia to decline."

The chronic labor problem is a nagging issue to Japanese companies interested in investing in Australia, said the MITI chief who conferred with members of the Japan Chamber of Commerce and Industry in Sydney before flying into Canberra. But he noted that Mitsubishi Motor's operations in Australia have been doing well.

Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Minister Kichiro Watanabe stressed at a separate news conference that the Tokyo government is not discriminating against Australia in beef trade. Ministry officials said Japan will hold separate talks with the United States and Australia in October on beef imports.

Hiroshi Yukawa, the parliamentary vice minister of the Economic Planning Agency who will be attending the two-day conference in lieu of agency Director General Toshio Komoto, said Japan's economic recovery has been far slower than expected. Ominous signs of sluggish domestic economy include poor housing starts and a low level of plant and equipment investment by Japanese companies, chiefly by small and medium-sized ones which comprise a large portion of the country's enterprises, he said. "I can't tell you definitely that the Japanese economy is picking up," Yukawa added. He expressed the hope the Reagan administration would rectify the high interest rate policy which he charged has slowed down the recovery of other economies.

MITI Chief Abe said that the government should prepare measures to stimulate domestic demand in an effort to promote trade with Japan's trading partners, including Australia.

Coal Trade Discussed

[By KYODO staff correspondent Shiro Yoneyama]

[Text] Canberra, Jul 29, KYODO -- Australia told Japan, Thursday it has lifted a 1 Australian dollar per ton export duty on coal to help revitalize the once prosperous coal industry. Trade and Resources Minister John Douglas Anthony notified his Japanese counterpart, Shintaro Abe, of the major change in his country's coal export policy.

Abe, the minister of international trade and industry, reacted favorably to the Australian decision which officials of both governments said would help rebuild Australia's reputation as a stable coal supplier. Tomio Tsutsumi, director of MITI's Americas-Oceania Division, said the move was "a big turnaround" in Australia's coal export policy and represented the Canberra government's reconsideration of the disputed export tax.

"The dollar 1 reduction should be of significant assistance to the Australian exporters of this coal," Anthony said in a statement. "While it will give an immediate benefit to established exporters, in the longer term the bulk of the benefits will accrue to new projects -- a factor that will, of course, be automatically taken into account when the feasibility of such new projects is being assessed."

The exemption is projected to affect an estimated 28 million tons of coal for export between this month and June, 1983. Anthony said the exemption will cover "all vessels which started loading after midnight last night."

In a related development, the regional New South Wales government announced that it had decided to freeze coal royalty rates for a one-year period. The current royalty on coal, Australian dollar 1.70 per ton, has been in effect since February 1, 1981. "The NSW government has taken this step as part of its plan to grant some short-term assistance to the coal industry which was under considerable pressure in overseas markets," State Premier Neville Wran said. Coal is Australia's biggest export commodity which earned the country Australian dollar 2.3 billion last year.

Queensland Premier Bjelke-Petersen also said his state government is "undertaking a review of the demands being placed on the coal industry at a time of difficult world market conditions." "The review," said the premier in a statement, "is designed to set the pathway for continued expansion."

Meanwhile, other key cabinet ministers of both countries held separate talks on agricultural products, global political tension, mutual representation of banks and other bilateral issues.

Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi expressed his deep regret about a division in the western alliance caused by America's expanded sanctions against the Soviet Union to protest the Russian interference in Polish affairs. "The sanctions will not work unless we all cooperate together," Sakurauchi said in a meeting with his Australian counterparty Anthony Street. The sanctions, Western Europe and Japan have charged, have delayed the completion of a natural gas pipeline project connecting western Siberia with Western Europe and a Russo-Japanese oil and natural gas project off Sakhalin.

Street emphasized that Australia will not carry out an embargo against such readily available commodities as grain. Primary Industry Minister Peter Nixon told Agriculture-Forestry-Fisheries Minister Kichiro Tazawa the Australian drought is very severe and predicted a huge drop in crop production unless there is rain within the next two to three weeks. Tazawa explained to Nixon that demand for meat in Japan will not grow rapidly in the face of the domestic recession. Tazawa said the two countries will hold consultations later this year on Australia's beef exports to Japan for fiscal 1983 and thereafter.

Japanese Finance Minister Michio Watanabe called for his Australian counterpart, John Howard, to help realize an early mutual representation of banks in the two countries. Howard said the Japanese proposal is under study by the Australian Government.

After the morning session of opening day talks in the seventh ministerial committee meeting, the Japanese Cabinet ministers witnessed the swearing-in ceremony of Sir Ninian Stephen as Australia's governor general. The ministerial meeting will wind up two days of talks at Lakeside International Hotel in this capital city Friday.

As the Cabinet ministers of both countries opened the conference earlier Thursday, Australia expressed "increasing concern" about Western pressure on Japan for new steps to reduce trade deficits.

Foreign Minister Tony Street said market access of Australian agricultural produce and other products is also "of long standing concern" in both a multilateral and bilateral context. Warning against growing protectionism in the face of the global recession, he noted in a keynote address "increased and concerted pressure on Japan by the United States and the European Community for new measures to redress the substantial trade deficits. " Such pressures, Street said, "carry with them implications of increasing concern to Australia ... Australia is naturally concerned when others sort out their problems in a series of bilateral deals which ignore our vital trading interests."

Beef, Grain Trade

[By KYODO staff correspondent Shiro Yoneyama]

[Excerpts] Canberra, July 30, KYODO -- Australia expressed concern Friday about a gradual decline of its beef export share in the Japanese market and sought a Japanese promise to give Canberra a fair share for the future. The request was conveyed to Agriculture-Forestry-Fisheries Minister Kichiro Tazawa by Deputy Prime Minister and Trade and Resources Minister John Douglas Anthony.

Tazawa told Anthony the Japanese Government cannot make such a promise but stressed that Tokyo will be fair to all beef exporting nations. Despite the agriculture minister's promise to treat Australia equally, Anthony pointed out that his country's share in the Japanese market has been steadily declining in recent years. A Japanese ministry official said Australia's share declined to 67 percent last year from 75 percent in 1978 while Japan's beef import quota rose to 116,000 tons from 102,400 tons.

Anthony also called on Japan to enable the Australians to make a bid for grain exports, said Minoru Tsukada, director of the ministry's International Affairs Department. Tazawa noted that the government has given top priority to a five-year program to dispose of surplus rice, the country's main staple food. The program will be completed next year. The Australian deputy premier expressed the hope that fishery talks between the two countries will arrive at a "favorable conclusion" when asked about prospects of Japanese fishing operations.

In a separate meeting with Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi, Anthony expressed his appreciation for Japan's support for Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser's fight against rising protectionism. Sakurauchi suggested that Australian businessmen take advantage of the Offices of the Trade Ombudsman (OTO) designed to handle complaints about Japan's trade practices. The foreign minister made the suggestion when Anthony asked for removal of Japan's nontariff barriers which he charged have become more cumbersome than ordinary trade barriers.

Japan Steel Exports

[By KYODO staff correspondent Shiro Yoneyama]

[Text] Canberra, July 30, KYODO -- International Trade and Industry Minister Shintaro Abe warned Friday an Australian decision to limit Japan's steel exports will have global impact and adversely affect Australia's iron ore exports to Japan. Abe made the warning in a meeting with Industry and Commerce Minister Philip Lynch who explained to the Japanese Cabinet minister the local steel industry's financial difficulties.

If Canberra were to curtail Japan's steel exports to Australia, Abe said, "it will have worldwide impact and will take on a symbolic significance." Abe indicated that Australia's relief measure, if implemented may benefit the local steel industry but will damage it badly in the long run.

Lynch explained to his Japanese counterpart that the Australian steel industry was confronted with sluggish demand and a sharp rise in steel imports. He also told Abe the Broken Hill Pty, Co. Ltd. or BHP, the nation's major steel industry, is in deep financial throes. "But the matter is very complicated and a final decision has not been made" on whether to restrict steel imports, Lynch was quoted as saying.

Australian officials pointed out that steel imports nearly doubled in the past two years to some 740,000 tons in the Australian fiscal year 1981-1982, accounting for 12 percent of the market. Japan's exports of seamless (oil well) pipes, welded and butt-welded steel pipes and other steel products reached 570,000 tons last year. But Japanese officials contend strong demand for Japanese steel products is due to pipeline projects and increased auto output.

"BHP's problem is, in a sense, a microcosm of Australia's general malaise," the country's leading daily, THE AGE, commented recently. Without elaborating what kind of tactics the Canberra government will employ to aid the steel industry, Lynch pleaded to Abe, "The local steel industry needs a short-term breathing space." But Abe responded that the U.S. steel industry was still suffering from the wounds caused by the trigger price policy and that the Japanese steel industry is increasing investment despite unfavorable market climates.

Prior to his meeting with Lynch, Abe had met with National Development and Energy Minister John Carrick and shared common concern about developments in the Middle East. Japan, which purchases some 60 percent of its oil imports from the region, has been advocating the need for a dialogue between oil producers and importers, the MITI chief told Carrick. Carrick called for the need to develop alternative energy sources and conserve energy, which Abe readily agreed, said officials who attended the session.

Finance Minister Michio Watanabe told Deputy Prime Minister John Douglas Anthony in a meeting that mutual representation of banks of both countries in each other's country is beneficial for Australia and Japan. Anthony said he will take note of the Japanese request. The seventh ministerial meeting was winding up two days of talks Friday and conference sources said a joint communique would not be issued.

Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi and Agriculture-Forestry-Fisheries Minister Kichiro Tazawa held separate meetings with Anthony [words indistinct] plenary session.

Talks Conclude

[KYODO staff correspondent Shiro Yoneyama]

[Text] Canberra, July 30, KYODO -- Australia and Japan ended two days of top-level talks Friday with a pledge to enhance bilateral economic relations and fight rising protectionism.

Australian Foreign Minister Anthony Street said the seventh Australia-Japan ministrial committee meeting was "one of the most successful" and called for continued dialogue with the Japanese Government. The two countries agreed, Street, the co-chairman said, the coming GATT meeting offereing "an opportunity to come to grips with many of the world's economic problems."

Japanese co-chairman, Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi, said the meeting was very productive and helped Canberra and Tokyo reaffirm a strong economic and political bond.

Street told reporters Industrial Relations Minister MacPhee will pay a visit to Japan later this year to discuss industrial relations which have often been a sore point in bilateral economic ties due to continuous industrial strife in Australia.

Deputy Prime Minister John Douglas Anthony told KYODO News Service the meeting was "the best one we ever had." Asked about Australia's decision to abolish a dollar one per ton levy on coal, he replied it shows "how much we value the Japanese market." Anthony was instrumental in establishing the ministerial committee 12 years ago.

SK291540 Pyongyang KCNA in English 1533 GMT 29 Jul 82

[Text] Pyongyang, July 29 (KCNA) -- The U.S. imperialist aggressors, hell bent on preparations for a new war in Korea, sent the high-speed, high altitude reconnaissance plane "SR-71" deep into our airspace east of Kosong, Kangwon Province of our country, at around 11:22 on July 29 and committed espionage against our country, letting it fly up to the air above the coastal sea off Unggi, the northernmost tip of North Hamgyong Province.

Such espionage acts of theirs are becoming all the more undisguised, coinciding with the frantic war exercises staged by them in South Korea in succession following the adventurous nuclear war exercise codenamed "Global Shield-82" carried out by them in the Pacific region contiguous to our country with the mobilization of their strategic air force units in the United States proper and abroad and mass destruction weapons.

Entering July the U.S. imperialist aggressors infiltrated spy planes on 17 occasions into the eastern and western airspace of our country and the airspace across our military boundary. Such continued military provocations of the U.S. imperialist war maniacs have brought the situation in our country to the utmost pitch of strain and gravely menace peace in Korea Today.

This once again clearly shows that the U.S. imperialist aggressors are the very one increasing tension in Korea. If they persist in their adventurous military provocations, defying our repeated warnings, they will eventually be denounced and punished as aggressors and harassers of peace.

NODONG SINMUN: SOUTH SUBORDINATE TO U.S.

The world's people have increasingly supported our people's struggle to force U.S. troops to withdraw from South Korea. Until today, in the 37 years since the Japanese imperialists were defeated, the South Korean people have not extricated themselves from the yoke of imperialism and have had imposed on them the destiny of a colonial slave. Since the 15 August liberation, the U.S. imperialists, who occupied South Korea in place of the Japanese imperialists, have exercised a policy of military aggression and colonial subordination in South Korea and adopted it as a springboard from which to dominate the whole of Korea and invade the Far East and Asia.

In ruling over South Korea, the U.S. imperialists have adhered to a crafty neocolonial policy, on the one hand fabricating a puppet regime and installing a policy of aggression by making a cat's-paw of it and, on the other hand, subordinating to them the political, economic and military sectors of South Korea under the mask of a supporter.

The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught: Seizing all power in South Korea, the U.S. imperialists have thoroughly subordinated all sectors in South Korea, including the political, economic and the military sectors, to their aggressive purpose. As a result, South Korea has been converted into the complete colony and military base of the U.S. imperialists.

To conceal and justify their policy of colonial subordination toward South Korea, the U.S. imperialists fabricated a puppet regime in an illegal way and have conducted propaganda to the effect that South Korea is an independent country. An independent country should possess sovereignty and the genuine right of regulating and conducting its domestic and foreign policy. The puppet regime has no such sovereignty and individuality.

The so-called South Korean Government is nothing but a shield defending the U.S. imperialists' military occupation and their colonial rule. It plays the role of a tool which faithfully executes the U.S. imperialists' policy of aggression.

Under the occupation of the U.S. imperialist aggressors, South Korea is a U.S. imperialists' colony in which everything is thoroughly subordinated to the United States. The real ruler in South Korea is the U.S. imperialists. The U.S. imperialists are not only placing South Korea under their military rule by stationing tens of thousands of their aggressive armed forces in South Korea, but they are infringing upon the South Korean people's sovereignty by legally fixing the relationship of master and stooge through various treaties and accords concluded with puppets. The substantive organ of political domination in South Korea is the U.S. Embassy. Seizing political power over South Korea, the U.S. Embassy indicates the direction of the puppet government's domestic and foreign policy while controlling and supervising the execution of these policies. Grasping the right of personnel management, the U.S. imperialists have put South Korea under their thumb through the formation of political forces favorable to colonial rule.

The U.S. Embassy in South Korea is, in fact, acting like the office of governor-general during the era of Japanese rule. The "Republic of Korea" is not at all different from the puppet Manchurian government which the Japanese imperialists once fabricated in the eastern region of China. For this reason, the U.S. Washington POST described the South Korean Government as a false body pretending to have independence under U.S. domination. The U.S. UPI news agency once said: The activities of the puppet South Korean Government have been conducted by a vast field organ under the direct control of the U.S. State Department.

The relationship between the United States and South Korea is that of a suzerain state and a colony. Moreover, the United States does not regard South Korea as an independent country. This relationship of master and servant has been confirmed by Gleysteen, former U.S. ambassador in South Korea, who once said: To speak of the equal relationship between the United States and South Korea is unrealistic. Genuine equality never exists in relations between the two countries.

The U.S. imperialists are thoroughly subordinating the puppet South Korean Government. If necessary, they are exercising the enormous right of replacing one stooge in power with another. It is no secret that the U.S. imperialists masterminded the 16 May military coup d'etat -- plotted to thwart the spirit of reunification which spread like wildfire in South Korea after the 19 April people's uprising and to maintain colonial rule. The October incident and the 12 December military coup d'etat were schemes to throw away Pak Chong-hui, who became worthless after being worked hard for 18 years, and to replace him with Chon Tu-hwan.

South Korea is thoroughly subordinate to the U.S. imperialists militarily as well as politically.

The prerogative of military command is one of the important symbols of an independent country. Every country, if independent, exercises the prerogative of military command. And independent country without the prerogative of military command does not in fact exist. A country without the prerogative of military command, though it has its own military, is not an independent country. Today not the puppets but the U.S. imperialists have the prerogative of military command over the approximately 700,000-strong puppet army. Based on the Taejon accord in 1950 and the South Korea-U.S. agreed minutes in 1954, the U.S. imperialists have grasped and exercised their right of command over the operations of the puppet army, air force and navy and the right of determining the size of the puppet army and the level of its equipment.

Through the establishment of the South Korea-U.S. Combined Forces Command in 1978, the U.S. imperialists reconfirmed their prerogative of military command over the puppet army and the right of command over its operations. Today the commander of the U.S. aggressive troops in South Korea is seizing every command prerogative ranging from the formation of the units of the puppet army to operations, personnel management, drills, training, equipment management, the supply of military munitions, and transfer of units. As a result, the puppet South Korean army is in a situation in which it cannot use even a drop of gasoline, to say nothing of weapons and ammunition, without the approval of the U.S. imperialists.

It goes without saying that, to maintain colonial rule in South Korea and accelerate preparations for war, the U.S. imperialist aggressors are monopolizing the prerogative of command over the puppet South Korean army. This was shown by the Voice of America, which reported the massacre perpetrated by the puppet South Korean Army in Kwangju. It reported that the Combined Forces Command took measures allowing some of the South Korean military forces to free them from the chain of command for the purpose of quelling the turmoil. Given the fact that it is in a situation in which foreign aggressive troops are grasping the prerogative of military command -- the most important element in exercising sovereignty -- and have everything under their thumb, how can South Korea talk about an independent country?

Economic self-reliance is the material basis of political independence. When it depends on foreign forces economically, a country will be subordinated to another country. A people who are subordinated economically to another country cannot extricate themselves from the destiny of colonial slaves. South Korea is thoroughly subordinated economically to the U.S. imperialists. Through various subordinating accords, including the accord for economic-technological aid concluded with the South Korean puppets, and monopolized the U.S. imperialists have dominated and monopolized the South Korean economy for their aggressive purpose. They have seized the lifeline of the South Korean economy, adopting aid as the basic method.

The aid of the U.S. imperialists is a means realizing their crafty neocolonial rule -- causing an illness and then offering a cure. Since the 15 August liberation, the U.S. imperialists have plundered the people's property amounting to $120 billion, about 10 times as much as the total amount of aid offered to South Korea. Through the U.S. Agency for International Development stationed in South Korea, the U.S. imperialists have participated in establishing the puppet government's economic policy and in drawing up its budget. They have controlled and supervised the execution of its economic policy. Through the South Korea-U.S. Joint Investment Council, the U.S. imperialists have subordinated the South Korean economy to them, managing the U.S. loans and monopoly capital permeating into South Korea. Through the South Korea-U.S. Council for Economic Cooperation, the U.S. imperialists have determined and controlled all industrial, financial and monetary policies of the puppet government. The puppet government cannot manage its economy by itself nor can it draw up its own budget without the consent of the council.

Be seizing the right of supplying crude oil, the U.S. imperialists have completely subordinated to them the fuel, power, petrochemical, and transportation sectors of South Korea. Through the supply of raw materials, they control production activities. As a result, the South Korean economy cannot maintain itself without the aid of the U.S. imperialists. If the supply of crude oil from the United States stops, South Korean business activities must cease.

The colonial subordination of the South Korean economy is all the more aggravating due to the U.S. imperialists' maneuvers to militarize the economy. The U.S. imperialists are concentrating their investment in the sectors linked to a military purpose, annually increasing military expenditures while sacrificing other sectors. All of South Korea's resources are used for a military purpose. The nature of the colonial subordination of the South Korean economy is resulting in the bankruptcy of the national economy. The small and medium business firms representing the national economy in South Korea have been continuously bankrupted because of the tyranny of comprador and foreign capital. Owing to its economic bankruptcy, South Korea was suffering from foreign debts amounting to $35 billion at the end of 1981.

Agricultural productivity has continuously decreased. South Korea, once the granary of our country, has been reduced to the land of chronic famine. The aggravating militarization and subordination of the economy by the U.S. imperialist aggressors is plunging the South Korean people's life into abject poverty and ruin.

South Korea is the ideological and cultural colony of the U.S. imperialists. Through local ruling agencies, such as the U.S. Embassy in South Korea and the U.S. International Communication Agency, the U.S. imperialists are backing up their colonial subjugation policy for South Korea ideologically and culturally by dominating and controling South Korea's education, press, culture, arts and religion.

What is basic in the U.S. imperialists' ideological and cultural infiltration is the spread of an anticommunist ideology, U.S.-worshipping flunkeyism, bourgeois ideas and an American lifestyle. As a result, the cultural tradition developed during the long period of 5,000 years and the good morals and manner of our people have been violated, national nihilism has been promoted, cultural inheritance has been destroyed and plundered, the national culture has been violated and social evils have become prevalent.

All these facts prove that South Korea is a complete colony which is thoroughly subjugated to the U.S. imperialists politically, militarily, economically and culturally. The U.S. imperialists' reference to an independent nation is a sheer lie and a figleaf designed to cover up their colonial subjugation of South Korea.

The U.S. imperialists' colonial subjugation has been executed based on their policy of military occupation. The U.S. imperialists have occupied South Korea militarily, supported the puppet regime and its fascist terrorist rule and converted South Korea into a military nuclear base. The people whose country is occupied by aggressive troops are not free. Nor can they live in peace. The U.S. forces have blocked the patriotic advance of the people toward the achievement of freedom, democracy, national sovereignty and the country's reunification. They are the most barbarous of imperialist aggressive troops, occupying South Korea to maintain a colonial order. Our people have a clear memory of how the U.S. imperialist aggressive troops suppressed the struggle of the South Korean people to achieve freedom and independence, such as the all-out September strike, the people's October struggle, the nation-saving 2 February struggle, the (Saildo) farmers' riot, the Cheju Island Sasang uprising and the struggle against the May unilateral election, and of how many people were killed by bullets fired by them.

The U.S. imperialist aggressor forces, even today, are indiscriminately infringing upon the life and property of the residents of South Korea while repeatedly perpetrating murder, burglary, plunder, arson and rape.

The people are suffering intolerable national contempt, with their dignity and sovereignty trampled underfoot by the aggressors. The U.S. imperialists' occupation of South Korea and their policy of aggression are the cause of all the misfortune and pain of the South Korean people. They are the basic factor disturbing peace in Korea and the main obstacle to our nation's reunification.

As long as the U.S. imperialists' policy of colonial subjugation is being implemented in South Korea, the South Korean people cannot escape disaster. Only when the aggressors withdraw from South Korea and an end is put to their colonial rule and their policy of interference in domestic affairs of Korea, can the South Korean people escape the situation of slavery today, can democratization of society and the nation's reunification be achieved and peace maintained and consolidated in Korea.

The masters of Korea are the Korean people. The domestic problems in Korea can be solved only by our people. The U.S. imperialists have no basis for remaining in South Korea. The U.S. imperialists' occupation of South Sorea and interference in the domestic affairs of our country are totally unjust and cannot be justified. They run counter to the Korean armistice agreement, which foresees the withdrawal of all foreign troops from South Korea and the peaceful solution of the Korean issue -- and to the 3-point principles declared at home and abroad through the 4 July North-South joint communique as the common program for reunification of the fatherland between the North and the South. They cannot be consistent with the UN charter which respects the nation's self-determination or with the resolution of the 30th UN General Assembly demanding the withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Korea.

Our era is one of independence, when several hundred millions of people of the world have restored their sovereignty and entered the road of creating a new life after being freed from the chains of colonialism they suffered for several hundred years. In this rewarding era, our people, who have a long history of some 5,000 years and a brilliant cultural tradition, cannot be forced forever into colonial slavery with half of the nation's land seized by the U.S. imperialists, who have only a 200-year bloody history. This is clear to everyone.

The anti-U.S. trend for democratization is at its high point in South Korea today. Fierce anti-U.S. flames have blazed demanding the withdrawal of the U.S. imperialists aggressors from South Korea in Kwangju, Pusan, Chunchon, Seoul and other places throughout South Korea -- such as the arson at the U.S. cultural center and the burning of the Stars and Stripes. These are an expression of the strong intention and firm will of the South Korean people to put an end to the U.S. imperialists' colonial rule and intervention in domestic affairs and to live independently.

The world's people who treasure national sovereignty and peace raise their voices to denounce the U.S. imperialists' occupation and colonial rule of South Korea and demand the withdrawal of the U.S. aggressors from South Korea. It is an unavoidable trend of the times for the U.S. imperialists to withdraw from South Korea. They should withdraw from South Korea at an early date, taking along all their aggressor forces, in accord with the demands of our people and the world's peace-loving people. They should take their interfering hands off Korea.

If the U.S. imperialists continuously pursue the policy of aggression and war, remaining in South Korea and acting as masters, they will face greater resistance by our people and the world's people. In order to eliminate the U.S. imperialists' colonial rule in South Korea, we should bind the hands and feet of the stooges of the U.S. imperialists -- vicious executors of the policy of colonial subjugation -- at the same time we make the U.S. imperialists withdraw.

The Chon Tu-hwan clique is a most filthy, treacherous group which the U.S. imperialists brought forth to overcome the crisis of their colonial rule.

The Chon Tu-hwan clique, covering South Korea with a dragnet and repressing the patriots in order to execute the U.S. imperialists' policy for colonial subjugation, is selling the nation's dignity and sovereignty while imploring the U.S. imperialists to peramently remain in South Korea. It is inspiring antagonism among the people by creating anticommunist confrontation, fostering division and aggravating tension. Only when the Chon Tu-hwan clique is eliminated can the anti-U.S. national salvation struggle to make the U.S. imperialists withdraw be successfully carried out.

It is our people's unanimous desire and greatest national task to destroy the barriers of division and establish a reunified state with unity between the North and South, rejecting outside forces and restoring national sovereignty in South Korea. The proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo made by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song at the historic sixth congress of our party is a most reasonable and realistic measure for acheiving our people's ardent desire to reunify the fatherland. All the Korean people should rise as one in the struggle to achieve this proposal at an early date. The anti-U.S. struggle for independence and the establishment of nationwide sovereignty by reunifying the fatherland and eliminating the U.S. imperialists' colonial rule over South Korea is a nationwide task. This can be successfully realized only with unity between the patriotic forces of the North and the South. All the patriotic forces of the North and South who oppose division and subjugation and pursue reunification and independence should make the U.S. imperialists withdraw from South Korea and should rise as one in the struggle to achieve the nationwide cause of the fatherland's reunification, in firm unity under the banner of the great national united front.

Our people's demand for the fatherland's reunification is firm. No aggressor force can frustrate our people's will to live in a reunified fatherland without any aggressor or outside forces. The Korean people will, without fail, achieve the historic cause of the fatherland's reunification with the united strength of the North and the South after eliminating the U.S. imperialists' colonial rule over South Korea.

KCNA NOTES LIAO CHENGZHI LETTER TO TAIWAN

[Text] Beijing, July 27 (KCNA) -- Liao Chengzhi sent a letter to Chiang Ching-kuo of Taiwan on July 24 in connection with the reunification question, according to a XINHUA report. Liao Chengzhi in his letter recalled that over the past three years, the Communist Party of China has repeatedly proposed talks with the Kuomintang of Taiwan to bury the hatchet and work jointly to accomplish the great cause of national reunification. He said: The peaceful reunification of the motherland would be a great achievement to be recorded in history. Taiwan is bounded to return to the embrace of the motherland eventually, an early settlement would be in the interests of all. The peaceful reunification is entirely an internal affair of China. Those outsiders who talk glibly about it have designs on our Taiwan.

The Kuomintang and the Communist Party twice cooperated and on both occasions they made tremendous contributions to the country and the nation. Since you are presiding over the administration of Taiwan, you have unshirkable responsibility for the realization of cooperation for the third time. For the sake of your party, I would think that if you would take up the historical responsibility and resolutely take part in peace talks to accomplish national reunification as required by time and tide, the two parties would be able to co-exist for a long time to come, supervising each other while joining in the glorious efforts to revitalize China.

If it is convenient to you, I would pack and set out for a visit to Taipei.

FURTHER REACTION TO JAPANESE TEXTBOOK ISSUE

Rallies, Hearings Held

SK300125 Seoul THE KOREA HERALD in English 30 Jul 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] Rallies, public hearings and seminars were or will be organized by many private organizations in Seoul to protest Japan's distortion of historical facts related to Korea in its textbooks for students and discuss countermeasures.

An estimated 300 members of the Korea Senior Citizen's Association Songbuk branch yesterday held a rally in front of the entrance of Piwon (Secret Garden) in Seoul yesterday and denounced the distortion in the textbooks and following remarks of Japanese Cabinet members. In the rally, the senior citizens urged the Japanese Government to promptly correct the distortion and withdraw the damaging remarks. They dissolved voluntarily after the rally.

Ko Choi-chu, 69, director of the KSCA Songbuk branch, said, "The old men remember vividly the ruthlessness of the Japanese during their 36-year colonial rule of Korea from 1910 to 1945. They cannot hide historical facts as long as we witnesses of the truth live."

A similar rally was held by 200 members of the KSCA Chongno and Chunggu District offices at the Pagoda park in Chongno, Seoul, at noon. The senior citizens attempted to hold a street demonstration outside the park at around 12:30 p.m. but were stopped by police interference. They gathered at the park again and continued the rally, returning home at 12:45 p.m.

The Council for Research of Korean History, comprised of seven historical academic circles including the Chindan Society and the Institute of History Education, yesterday held a seminar at the Korean Research Center in Seoul and discussed Japan's falsification of history concerning Korea. Five other academic circles under the council are the Korean History Society, the Korean Society for Archeological Study, the Korean Society of Art History, the Society for Research of Korean History and the Korean Historical Society. The participants, most of whom are prominent historians in Korea, examined the change in describing the colonial rule of Korea in Japanese textbooks from 1945 to now and held discussions on ways to correct the distortion. They agreed in that the Japan's distortion of historical facts will gravely affect the relationship between the two countries.

Yi Hyon-chong, newly elected chairman of the council, said after the seminar that academic circles will stress the study of the history of Korean-Japanese relationship and expand the opportunities for the exchange of research papers and other materials with Japanese scholars, if necessary. Yi said to what extent the Korean historians will study the relationship history will be decided depending upon whether the works to correct the distortion will be under way or not in Japan. Chairman Yi, concurrently chairman of the Korean National History Compilation Committee, denounced the Japan's distortion of history by saying "Histroy should be a way for scholars to describe honestly the contents in textbooks for students." He said the involved Japanese textbooks will be continuously examined by Korean scholars. Japanese scholars will also examine Korean textbooks, too, Yi added.

The Korean Federation of Education Associations yesterday issued a statement, denouncing the Japan's distortion of historical facts. The KFEA said in the statement that the 280,000 teachers in Korea urged Japan to correct the distortions in the textbooks and to apologize for the remarks made by Japanese cabinet members to justify it. "Japan will become a permanent enemy of all Asian peoples unless it corrects it falsification and distortion of historical facts," it said. The statement also urged the Japanese educationalists to protest against the Japanese Ministry of Education which was reported to have instructed the distorted description to textbook publishing companies.

Kwangbok-ho, an association of independence fighters, the KFEA, and the Institute of History Education and some other private organizations also supported the organization of the public hearing.

Rep. Yi Kon-ho of the Democratic Justice Party, Rep. Yi Yun-ki of the Democratic Korea Party, Rep. Cho Il-che of the Korea National Party and nine other persons from universities and mass media will hold a discussion on ways to rectify the distortion.

Meanwhile, Korean side representatives of several bodies for Korean-Japanese cooperation including the Korean-Japanese Friendship Association said they will send letters to their Japanese counterparts soon to demand the correction of the distortion.

Japanese Consulate Threatened

SK300507 Seoul YONHAP in English 0324 GMT 30 Jul 82

[Text] Pusan, Korea, July 30 (YONHAP) -- A South Korean man apparently in his 50's has threatened to blow up the Japanese Consulate in this southern port city through a phone call, it was learned Friday.

A Korean employee who answered the phone Thursday afternoon told police that the man, who identified himself as "an activist of the Korea Democracy Defense Union," said he would explode the office building unless the Japanese consul general publicly apologized for the "distorted" revisions of Japanese history textbooks by Aug. 1. In response, Pusan police increased the number of guards at the consulate to more than 20, including plainclothesmen.

On Thursday morning, a switchboard operator at the Japanese consulate reported to police that she found a shattered window pane on the floor of the switchboard room, apparently broken by a stone thrown from outside the night before.

Loan Cancellation Urged

[Text] Seoul, July 29 (YONHAP) -- A Seoul daily recommended Thursday that the Korean Government seriously consider the withdrawal of its request for Japanese loans totaling four billion U.S. dollars in connection with the recent attitude of Japan on historical "distortions" in high school textbooks. "It is meaningless to seek economic cooperation from Japan if it does not show signs of repentance for its distortion of the occupation of the Korean Peninsula," the TONG-A ILBO said in an editorial.

"The government should work out proper counter-measures if Japan continues such an unfriendly and unamicable attitude toward Korea," it asserted, noting that Tokyo's intention to not correct the books is causing public indignation among the Korean people. The TONG-A, one of the most influential newspapers here, maintained that it is hard to understand why Japan has acted in this way when it is widely known worldwide that the Japanese revisions are wrong, a fact that is admitted by Japanese intellectuals and the news media.

The paper further said that the Korean people are very displeased that Japan does not show a more positive attitude towards Korea on the issue, since it has pledged to carefully listen to similar criticism raised by China. "Such an attitude reveals Japan's two-faced policy of servility to the strong and arrogance to the weak," it said.

TONG-A also held Japan responsible for the delay in a solution of the disputed loan issue between the two countries, which has dragged on for over a year.

Cultural Exchange Fund Sought

[Text] Seoul, July 30 (YONHAP) -- The Seoul-side of the Korea-Japan Parliamentarians' Union plans to set up a "Korea-Japan cultural exchange fund" by early September in an effort to support various activities, including the organization of a joint research committee to correct "distorted" descriptions in Japanese textbooks regarding past relations with Korea.

Rep. Yi Sang-ik, secretary general of the union's Seoul side, said Friday that the Korean and Japanese sides of the union agreed last year to raise one billion won and one billion yen, respectively, in cultural funds to finance mutual youth exchanges and the textbook correction project.

Yi said both sides agreed in principle to correct the textbook errors through a joint committee of the two countries' pertinent specialists, including historians and linguists, and he added that the collection of relevant materials and research activities have already made considerable progress. Yi said the projected joint committee will concentrate on writing accurate histories of the two countries from the ancient period to the present.

In addition, the 10th joint conference of the union, scheduled for Sept. 7-8 in Tokyo, will address the textbook correction issue on the formal agenda of its cultural affairs subcommittee in order to work out a detailed plan for corrections, Yi said.

'Mindan' Protest

SK300112 Seoul THE KOREA TIMES in English 30 Jul 82 p 1

[By Song Hyo-pim]

[Text] Tokyo -- The Korean Residents Association in Japan urged the Japanese Education Ministry Thursday (July 29) to correct distortions of historical facts in the newly revised Japanese textbooks with sincerity. In a written protest to the ministry, the association, "Mindan," also denounced the Japanese Government for its policy of screening the textbooks, which are put out by private publishing companies.

The protest was conveyed to the ministry by leading officials of the Korean Residents' body headed by Chang Chong-myong. They pointed out in the protest that most of the 700,000 Koreans living in Japan now had been deported to Japan for forced labor by the Japanese militarists in the past. "At present, a total of 80,000 Korean children are studying at Japanese schools. But the Japanese textooks are written only for the purpose of beautifying Japan without telling the truth," they contended. In particular, they demanded that the revised description of the Japanese "advance" into Korea be changed to their "invasion of the Korean Peninsula."

They also called for the Education Ministry to replace the expression "a large-scale anti-Japanese riot" for the March 1 independence movement with a "nationide independence movement against Japan."

The Korean residents' leaders further demanded that the ministry put down clearly the Japanese massacre of Koreans numbering tens of thousands at the time of the Kanto earthquake in the textbooks.

CHEA SIM SPEAKS AT REVOLUTIONARY YOUTH MEETING

BK290947 Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian 0400 GMT 29 Jul 82

[Text] On 28 July Comrade Chea Sim, member of the KPRP Central Committee Political Bureau, chairman of the National Assembly and chairman of the KUFNCD National Council, attended the first biannual meeting of the Kampuchean Revolutionary Youth Committee held in Kompong Speu.

On his arrival, he was warmly greeted by Comrade Khieu Sarun, secretary of the Kompong Speu Provincial Party Control Committee; Comrade Sam Sundoeun, vice chairman of the Kampuchean Revolutionary Youth Organization; and those attending the meeting.

In the morning, Comrade Chea Sim listened attentively to Comrade Khieu Sarun's speech and a report on youth activities in many localities, particularly in Voar Sa commune and Chhuk District of Kampot Province.

In the evening, the comrade chairman of the National Assembly made a speech welcoming the meeting and wishing it success in all aspects. The comrade also outlined the successes achieved in every field by the party, the people and the army during the first 6 months of 1982. The comrade expressed high appreciation for the great achievements made by Kampuchea's revolutionary youth during the first 6 months by successfully implementing the resolutions of the fourth party congress, as well as those of the third and fourth plenary sessions of the party Central Committee, and circular No. 226 of the party Central Committee concerning the promotion and setting up of the Kampuchean revolutionary youth organizations.

Comrade Chea Sim also discussed a number of important tasks that all youth must understand and successfully carry out in the second half of the year and in the future, with the aim of effectively contributing to the defense and reconstruction of the Kampuchea fatherland. The comrade stressed that youth are the right hand of the party and are guided by the party, therefore they must be well versed in the resolutions of the party congress and the party Central Committee and must take measures to effectively disseminate the resolutions of the third party congress, as well as the declaration of the sixth conference of Kampuchea-Vietnam-Laos foreign ministers.

The comrade also exposed the perfidious maneuvers of the Chinese Beijing expansionists in collusion with U.S. imperialism and other international reactionaries aimed at destroying the Kampuchean revolution. The comrade added that our youth must be well aware of and must publicize among our youth and people the true nature of the so-called Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea -- a farce propped up by reactionaries in the Chinese ruling circles, in collusion with Washington, aimed at restoring and enabling the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Od Than regime to return and massacre our people again.

On behalf of the party Central Committee, Comrade Chea Sim promised to pay attention and provide every kind of support and assistance to the Kampuchean revolutionary youth who are the school and seedbeds for producing successors to the revolution.

Finally, the comrade appealed to all youth to love each other and help one another so as to provide a solid force capable of carrying out all the requirements of our party and people. We want to have a clean society with enough to eat, with no illiteracy, with durable peace, and with progress in every field -- a society built by our people with the youth playing the vanguard role.

Comrade Chea Sim returned safely to Phnom Penh at 1700.

Communique Issued

[Communique of the first conference of the LPDR, PRK and SRV public health ministers, dated 28 July]

[Text] 1. With a view to enhancing, promoting and expanding the spirit of militant solidarity, fraternal friendship and special relations among the peoples of Laos, Kampuchea and Vietnam, as well as to further strengthen the cooperation among the three countries in the public health area, and in response to an invitation from the Acting Public Health Minister of the LPDR, Prof Vanalet Latsapho, the acting public health minsiter; Dr Yit Kimseng, public health minister of the PRK; and Prof Dang Hoi Xuan, public health minister of the SRV held a conference in Vientiane from 26 to 28 July 1981. The opening ceremony of the conference was attended by guest of honor Comrade Phoumi Vongvichet, member of the LPRP Central Committee and deputy prime minister of the LPDR. Comrade Phoumi Vongvichit received and held talks with the delegates to the conference in a cordial atmosphere.

2. The three public health ministers highly appreciated the successes of the fourth congress of the KPRP, the fifth congress of the VCP and the third congress of the LPRP.

3. The three ministers informed each other of the work and achievements carried out or scored in the public health field by their respective countries. They also exchanged views on their respective domestic and international public health situations, and discussed ways of strengthening the solidarity and all-round cooperation among the three countries.

4. The three ministers wholeheartedly praised and hailed the quick revival of the new public health system of the PRK, which has achieved a great success in serving the heroic Kampuchean people in a brief period of time. The acting public health minister of the LPDR and the public health minister of the SRV expressed regret over the absence from certain health congresses of the PRK Public Health Ministry's representative, who could make a worthy contribution to public health work. The three ministers expressed satisfaction with the successes scored by the public health cadres of the three countries in the public health sector over the past few years. These initial successes have been considerable contributions to the economic and social development for the defense and building of their respective countries. The three ministers expressed satisfaction with the development of militant solidarity and fraternal and positive cooperation in the public health branch of the three countries at the national as well as the provincial levels, a development which guaranteed the various successes scored over the past few years.

The three ministers expressed gratitude to various fraternal socialist countries, first and foremost the Soviet Union, various friendly countries, international organizations and private organizations for their effective assistance.

5. The three ministers, clearly accepting that health care is a responsibility of the entire society, have unanimously agreed that under the leadership of the party and government of each country the public health cadres must promote and expand their activities with initiative while encouraging the positive contribution of the people.

In the field of public health work in the years to come, the three ministers have emphasized the following basic points:

A. Building a public health network in accordance with specific circumstances of each country.
B. Promoting first aid and basic health services.
C. The gradual elimination of various basic contagious diseases.
D. Providing health care for mothers and children.
E. Promoting training for cadres and scientific studies.
F. Responding to the basic medical requirements of the people.
G. Protecting the environment.
H. Providing education in hygiene for the people.

6. In studying general problems and a common goal for all the people's health in the year 2000, the three ministers highly appreciated and supported the Soviet peace initiatives and considered those initiatives to be a precious contribution to the achievements of peace, tranquillity and prosperity of mankind. The three ministers expressed deep concern over the absured efforts of the (?Reagan) administration in its arms race and in the preparation for new forms of nuclear, chemical and biological warfare, which constitute a threat to the future of mankind. The three ministers denounced various adventurous, criminal acts of the imperialist, expansionist and Zionist governments which have waged wars in the Middle East, Asia, Africa and Latin America. These wars have created disturbances in the international atmosphere of peace, concord and cooperation among nations, thereby sabotaging the implementation of the public health plans in various countries. The three ministers resolutely denounced and denied the slanderous and deceitful propaganda of the U.S. Government and its collusion with other governments in accusing Vietnam of using chemical and poisonous subatances in Kampuchea and Laos. Such aforementioned dark schemes will certainly not be able to cover up the vicious aftermath of the criminal, chemical warfare actually carried out by the U.S. Government in the second Indochinese war against the three peoples of Laos, Vietnam and Kampuchea.

7. The three ministers have unanimously agreed that under the present circumstances, to successfully fulfill the difficult tasks in the public health branch of each country and to overcome common major public health problems of the three countries, it is necessary to step up cooperation among the three countries' public health branches in all areas of activities.

8. The conference proceeded in an atmosphere of fraternal friendship and special solidarity, and has reached unanimity on all questions. The conference is firmly convinced that despite many difficult and complex problems, the three countries will certainly achieve glorious successes in the public health work.

9. The public health ministers of the PRK and the SRV expressed gratitude to the LPRP Central Committee, the LPDR Government, the acting public health minister of the LPDR and his co-workers for the warm, fraternal welcome accorded them during their stay in the beautiful and heroic Vientiane capital, and for all favorable and effective conditions for the work and the success of the conference.

REPORTAGE ON VISIT BY SRV FOREIGN MINISTER THACH

BK291130 Bangkok Voice of Free Asia in Thai 1000 GMT 29 Jul 82

First, in a good atmosphere, both sides expressed our views regarding solutions to various problems. Each side was informed of the other side's position. More time will be needed for consultations and a resolution of the problems.

Second, we informed our visitor of our desire and good intentions for a successful solution of the Kampuchean problem in accordance with UN resolutions. We told him that sincere promotion of understanding and an improved political climate by both sides will help considerably in the efforts to solve the problems existing between the two sides. He said he is willing to eventually withdraw all of his troops providing that all sides take into account the legitimate rights of all countries concerned. We agree with this because it corresponds with the substance of the International Conference on Kampuchea.

Third, he said he does not want a confrontation with Thailand or ASEAN any longer because confrontation will only create conflicts and bring losses to both sides. We agree with this because it is similar to the belief held by Thailand and ASEAN.

Fourth, we discussed bilateral relations. He expressed a view favoring an improvement in bilateral relations. We told him that we have the same view. We feel that both countries should hlep to create peace in this region and solve solvable problems.

This is what I wish to report to the mass media today. I feel that the meeting proceeded in good atmosphere and that he proceeded in a manner that showed he seeks understanding from us. He requested a meeting with the secretary general of the National Security Council and invited me to visit Vietnam, to which I said I have no objections. [end recording]

Further on Talks

[By The Chongkhaditkit]

ACM Sitthi told reporters he made the statement after Thach had said his country would like to negotiate normalisation with Beijing to get rid of what he called "the China threat" and enable total withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea. Thach told ACM Sitthi: "Vietnam is prepared to withdraw all its forces if the legtimate interests of all parties concerned are taken into consideration." Both foreign ministers agreed on the need for neutrality of Kampuchea.

In an unexpectedly cordial atmosphere, the two foreign ministers talked about Prince Norodom Sihanouk, president of the recently established Democratic Kampuchea Coalition Government. Sitthi asked Thach not to object to Sihanouk, reminding him that the prince had helped Vietnam in the past, and had tried to get North Vietnam membership in the United Nations.

In his soft-line approach, Thach did not mention the threats of subversion or "hot pursuit" against Thailand which he reportedly voiced earlier in his tour of Southeast Asia. To get rid of the "Chinese threat" and permit total withdrawal, Thach said Vietnam would like to negotiate with China. ACM Sitthi informed him that China had the same desire.

"If Vietnam shows it is sincere about wanting to totally withdraw its forces, China will be ready to negotiate for normalisation of relations," ACM Sitthi assured him.

Prasong on Meeting

BK300253 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 0000 GMT 30 Jul 82

[Text] National Security Council Secretary General Squadron Leader Prasong Sunsiri granted an interview to newsmen yesterday evening on his meeting with Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach. He said they had frank talks on several issues, including problems which had not been raised during the meeting yesterday at the Foreign Ministry. He said no accusations were made during the meeting with the Vietnamese foreign minister.

The National Security Council secretary general told the Vietnamese foreign minister that all existing problems, including border security, the refugees and other safety issues, have to be solved as a package, and not individually, because they are all related to the Kampuchean issue. The Vietnamese foreign minister acknowledged this position. Vietnam, meanwhile, presented several proposals which were accepted by the National Security Council secretary general for further study. The secretary general, however, indicated to Vietnam that the Kampuchean problem must be solved through the implementation of the UNGA resolution, that is, a complete withdrawal of Vietnam from Kampuchea.

The National Security Council secretary general reported that Nguyen Co Thach had told him that from now on there would be no verbal accusations between Thailand and Vietnam. He told the Vietnamese foreign minister that Thailand and Vietnam are friends and not enemies, and that if Vietnam is sincere, it should help Thailand solve the problems instead of creating more problems for Thailand.

Thach Press Conference

[Text] Bangkok, July 30 (AFP) -- Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach, warning of a perceived 4,000-year-old threat to the region from China, said today Vietnam was "leaving the door open" to possible Soviet bases on its territory. But Mr Thach stressed Vietnam would prefer the "neutralization" of all of Southeast Asia and understood the concern of its non-communist neighbors over Hanoi's 150,000-plus troops in Kampuchea.

Winding up a two-week four-nation regional tour, he said Vietnam would "meet entirely" the call of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) for a total withdrawal from Kampuchea. "We'll meet entirely your concern," he told a pre-departure news conference here, "but will you meet ours with the same strength?"

Mr Thach was understood to mean Vietnam wanted the ASEAN states -- Thailand, Singapore, Malaysia, the Philippines and Indonesia -- to work toward persuading China to sign a non-aggression treaty with Vietnam. Such a treaty, he said, was absolutely necessary to end the threat Vietnam had endured for "at least 4,000 years of our existence."

Mr Thach said China was bent on subversion as well as setting neighboring countries against the pro-Soviet Indochinese governments in Laos, Vietnam and Kampuchea. But the threat was also aimed against Burma and the ASEAN states "because they have suffered (Chinese-backed guerrillas during these 30 years," he added.

Mr Thach noted that Hanoi had not allowed the Soviet Union to set up bases in Vietnam, though the Soviets have access to the former United States naval base at Cam Ranh Bay and nearby Danang air field. "In the future, we leave the door open. All options are open," he said. "And we have the right to give the bases, as the Philippines has given the Americans bases."

The U.S. Defense Department has often cited Soviet access to Vietnamese bases as a key factor in projecting armed Soviet might toward the tense Indian Ocean region and the Pacific. Last month, a Defense Department spokesman told a congressional committee that the Soviet thrust in the region had established a capability to choke off vital Southeast Asian sealanes.

Mr Thach said "both sides were very satisfied " with his talks here yesterday with Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila and Prasong Sunsiri, head of the powerful Thai National Security Council. "We have agreed that one hand clapping could not solve the problem," he said, expressing the need to settle all differences on the basis of respect "for the legitimate interests" of all concerned countries.

Shortly before leaving for home, Mr Thach met Ambassador Massamba Sarre of Senegal, chairman of the ad hoc committee of the United Nations-sponsored International Conference on Cambodia, in the ambassador's capacity as a representative of Senegal. But Mr Thach stressed to reporters that Vietnam continued to reject any role for the United Nations in the Cambodian conflict so long as the world body recognized the ousted Khmer Rouge government of former Premier Pol Pot. "I have declared very clearly many times, no United Nations as long as Pol Pot is there," he said.

Turning to the new anti-Vietnamese Cambodian coalition government in Kampuchea, Mr Thach declined to be drawn on whether Vietnam saw Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the coalition leader, as a possible partner in a future settlement. Screwing his face up in apparent scorn, he quoted Malaysian Foreign Minister Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie as saying Prince Sihanouk hoped to gain control of the coalition and "then drop Pol Pot".

But Mr Thach reiterated that the conference on Southeast Asis proposed by the Indochinese states could discuss everything including, he implied, who would represent Kampuchea. "Our proposal for an international conference is up for discussion," he said, "that means it could only be with two hands clapping," a reference to Vietnam's boycott last year of the U.N.-sponsored conference.

After meeting Mr Thach, Ambassador Sarre of Senegal said the Vietnamese had invited both him and his foreign minister to visit Hanoi in their capacity of Seneglese representatives at dates yet to be set. In a telephone interview, Mr Sarre compared Mr Thach's attitude to the UN body to that of a wallflower who "doesn't want to join the dance, but doesn't mind correcting the steps from outside." Mr Sarre said Mr Thach had not spoken of inviting other members of the UN-sponsored ad hoc committee to Hanoi, as reported yesterday by Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi but he considered Mr Thach's attitude very "positive."

NATION REVIEW Editorial

BK300157 Bangkok NATION REVIEW in English 30 Jul 82 p 4

[Text] We congratulate Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach for playing his hand as a superb poker player. He knew the cards he was holding and played them not for what they were worth but for how much bluffing mileage he could get.

He tilted against a windmill in Singapore -- talking about increased communist insurgency and "hot pursuit" into Thailand -- then went to Rangoon to make his visit a nonevent, then in Kuala Lumpur he changed his schedule to stay an extra day for consultations with Foreign Minister Ghazali Shafie, and came to Bangkok to play his tune in a minor key. If we may mix metaphors some more, Bangkok was the culmination and highlight of his diplomatic tour de force.

Vietnam's top diplomat must have really caught our Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila on the wrong foot when he appeared wearing the hat of conciliation instead of one of confrontation. At least in words, Thach seems to have made several concessions which, if they were backed up by deeds, could result in finding a political solution to the Kampuchean tragedy -- the only end-result that ASEAN has been striving for during the past three years. When Sitthi told the press "our anticipation was incorrect" it was more of a confession that Thailand did not expect to meet a diplomat a little more wily than Machiavelli.

A diplomacy based on fallacy is quite evident when he said that Hanoi appreciates Thai concern about Vietnamese troops along her border and so Vietnam will make the good will gesture of withdrawing troops away from the Thai border. But across our (?eastern) border, there are no Vietnamese troops but only those of the Khmer coalition government. Practically it may be impossible to pull back non-existent troops, but we will credit Thach with a good will gesture because of the very fact that he did say it.

But Thailand, along with her ASEAN partners, and about 100 other nations who voted in the UN General Assembly, is committed to the complete withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea and Thailand will be very happy, as will be others, if the Vietnamese want to pull out step by step. After all the withdrawal of 180,000 troops from Kampuchea back to their homeland is not something that is logistically possible within a short time. At the meeting yesterday, Thailand has already made this point quite clear.

It has been the contention of Vietnam -- and Thach has repeated it several times during his current trip -- that his country's forces are in Kampuchea because of the Chinese threat. China has offered several times to talk this matter over after her 'first lesson' of 1979 and it is time for Hanoi to take up this matter and eliminate the 'Chinese threat' either by bilateral talks, which would be the best, or through an international conference the modus vivendi of convening which already exists. We whole-heartedly welcome Thach's professed intention of ending any confrontation between ASEAN and Vietnam since this has been -- because of Vietnam's Kampuchean escapade -- a destabilizing factor in this region.

What is even more welcome than all this, in our opinion, is Thach's acceptance of the Thai suggestion that he meet with the head of the team from the International Conference on Kampuchea, Massamba Sarre, with the hint that he will invite that team to Hanoi. Whether all this materializes or not is quite unimportant, but the very fact that he took this line with the Thai authorities speaks volumes. The Ho Chi Minh City communique also envisages an international conference and to find a median between the ICK and what Hanoi has in mind should prove to be simple. He said that he was prepared to meet Sarre on a personal basis which was the same note sounded by Hanoi saying that Willibald Pahr would be welcome there only as Austrian foreign minister and not as chairman of ICK -- yet the Kampuchean question was discussed.

From being a bull in a china shop in Singapore, Thach in Bangkok seems to have some genuine concessions to make and Thailand must make full effort to follow up this line even though there may be only frustration at the end of the line. Thach meets the press today and we hope he does not wear another hat this time.

ICK PANEL TO HELP REPATRIATE KAMPUCHEAN REFUGEES

[Text] The ad hoc committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea has promised to try to implement a proposal by Japan calling for the repatriation of Khmer refugees under the supervision of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

The pledge was given by Committee Chairman Mr Massamba Sarre during a meeting with secretary-general of the National Security Council [NSC], Sqd-Ldr Prasong Sunsiri, at the NSC yesterday.

Prasong said he told Mr Sarre that ASEAN, and particularly Thailand, wanted to solve the Kampuchean problem through political means rather than through confrontation with Vietnam. He said he also told Mr Sarre that ASEAN and Vietnam are still friends, but that their relations were strained because of the Vietnamese invasion and occupation of Kampuchea which ASEAN can never accept because it is against the United Nations Charter. He added that he told the ad hoc committee chairman that ASEAN -- and perhaps the international community -- is willing to recognize a legitimate government in Kampuchea, even if it is the Heng Samrin regime, provided such a government is elected by the Kampuchean people following the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from the country.

Sqd-Ldr Prasong said that Mr Sarre was informed of Thailand's objections to Hanoi's proposal of a safety zone along the Thai-Kampuchean border because there is no conflict between Thailand and Kampuchea. The problem of refugees was also discussed, said Sqd-Ldr Prasong, adding that he told Mr Sarre that Thailand cannot shoulder the refugee burden alone without the help of the international community. He complained of the growing tendency by third countries to accept fewer and fewer refugees, thus leaving behind a large number of unwanted refugees in this country.

Both men also discussed the fate of some 300,000 Khmer refugees living in encampments along the Thai-Kampuchean border and agreed that a Japanese proposal, calling for the repatriation of these refugees under UNHCR supervision, should be followed up.

HANOI SAYS PRC PITTING ASEAN AGIINST INDOCHINA

BK291125 Hanoi Domestic Service in Vietnamese 1430 GMT 28 Jul 82

[Article by (Dao Nguyen): "Beijing Plots To Maintain Confrontation Between ASEAN and Indochina"]

[Text] While slandering the friendly visit to a number of ASEAN and Southeast Asian countries by the SRV foreign minister, Beijing and Washington have attempted to incite ASEAN countries to oppose the peace initiatives proposed by the Indochinese foreign ministers conference and the agreement reached by Vietnam and Kampuchea to partially withdraw Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea. They have claimed that there is nothing new or of benefit to ASEAN in these proposals, and that the Vietnamese troop withdrawal is merely a rotation of troops. They urged the ASEAN countries to be on the lookout.

Why have Beijing and Washington slandered these peace initiatives of the three Indochinese countries? Firstly, it is because these initiatives once again clearly manifest the good will for peace of the three Indochinese countries. They have been warmly welcomed by both domestic and international opinion. The Indonesian foreign minister noted that these proposals are not a hollow statement, but a positive act aimed at contributing to building peace and stability in Southeast Asia. The Austrian foreign minister also contended that these are positive peace proposals that can be used as a basis for a regional international conference to solve differences between ASEAN and the Indochinese countries through dialogue and negotiation. Secondly, it is because Beijing and Washington are very concerned about the trend toward negotiations between ASEAN and the Indochinese countries. They want to maintain confrontation between these two groups in this region and cunningly turn the conflict between the three Indochinese countries and China into a conflict between the Indochinese and ASEAN countries. They want to replace the trend toward negotiations to solve differences in the region with a trend toward confrontation between ASEAN and Indochina. This is a national policy of inciting other people to fight each other designed by the creator of Beijing's expansionism.

It is regrettable that a number of ASEAN countries are unaware of this sinister scheme and have been inveigled into the trap laid by the reactionaries in the Beijing leadership. Some countries have quietly been transformed into capable tools of the Beijing scheme to create confrontation between Indochina and ASEAN. They have not only helped the Pol Pot remnant troops, but have also plunged deeply into the Beijing's gambit of dubbing the genocidal Khmer Rouge as the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea to oppose the peoples of Kampuchea and the other Indochinese countries.

Deng Xiaoping, leader of the reactionary force in the Beijing leadership on 15 September [no year given] -- after Pol Pot, Ieng Sary and Khieu Samphan had been overthrown in Kampuchea -- openly stated in a meeting of the CCP Central Committee that it was time that we -- implying Beijing -- let Thailand and ASEAN fight against Vietnam and Indochina.

However, not all public opinion in the ASEAN countries has been blind to the sinister scheme of Beijing. While Beijing has been cooking up the phony story that Vietnam is muttering threats against ASEAN, many people in the ASEAN countries have realized that threat to their countries comes from China. They have also pointed out that China will benefit the most if the Southeast Asian countries are in conflict with Vietnam and the other Indochinese countries.

It is not accidental, however, that while Beijing and Washington are persistently inciting the ASEAN countries to oppose the peace initiatives of the foreign ministerial conference of the three Indochinese countries and the friendly visit to Southeast Asian countries by the SRV foreign minister, the Indonesian paper SINAR HARAPAN on 21 July should affirm that one can predict without hearing Beijing's response that Beijing will automatically slander these peace initiatives and the current friendly visit of the Vietnamese foreign minister.

Progressive public opinion in the ASEAN countries contends that it is necessary to negotiate comprehensively and concretely with Vietnam and the other Indochinese countries. This is the sole solution which can restore peace, security and stability in the region. Continuing confrontation with Vietnam and other Indochinese countries and rejection of the peace proposals of the sixth foreign ministerial conference of three Indochinese countries are neither sensible nor appropriate. Such confrontation only benefits Beijing expansionism, but brings neither benefit to the ASEAN countries nor peace and stability to the Southeast Asian region.

[Text] The (Le Zhi) township is a new township in Cao Loc District, Lang Son Province. It was formed by merging the former (Qing Bao) and (An Lu) townships. The (Le Zhi) township consists of 33 villages, which belong to 5 agricultural cooperatives and 38 production teams. The people in the township are mainly of the Ling Bai and Yao nationalities, and the Ling nationality constitutes the majority. To safeguard rural security and defend the motherland's border area, all agricultural cooperatives in (Le Zhi) township have organized people's armed forces.

Across the border from (Le Zhi) township are rural villages of Ningming County, Guangxi, China. The Contour 400 area, now illegally occupied by Chinese troops, is located 600 meters inside the boundary of Lang Son province.

(Dai Zhu Ren), secretary of the (Le Zhi) township party committee, and (Xu Shi Fang), a representative of the National Assembly, accompanied reporters to the foot of a hill in the Contour 400 area. Pointing to three mountains which had been heavily bombarded by artillery fire, they told reporters: Our troops fought against invading Chinese troops in these mountains. At that time, the Chinese suffered heavy casualties there. So Chinese artillery shelled the mountains day and night. The Chinese resorted to "human wave" tactics and seized the mountains by strength of numbers.

Pointing to the numerous horizontal lines on the mountains, (Xu Shi Fang) said: Those are trenches dug by the Chinese troops and roads they have built. The Chinese troops frequently fire on nearby Vietnamese villages to obstruct the productive activities of Vietnamese border inhabitants. A river in the township leads to the Chinese side. The people had built a dam here, but it was demolished by intruding Chinese troops. As a result, the rice crop on more than 100 hectares of farmland has withered. In June and July last year, frenzied shelling by the Chinese forced the people in (Jian Tong) and (Han Qu) to move elsewhere. In (Jian Tong) alone, 28 houses including 3 kindergartens were destroyed. Three children were killed, many people were wounded, and more than 33 draft cattle were killed. The Contour 400 area has always been Vietnamese territory. Illegally occupied by Chinese troops, they now call it Faka Mountain.

(Xu Shi Fang) said: The name Faka Mountain is adopted by the Beijing authorities, based on the pronunciation by our people of the Ling nationality. According to legend, once the mountain had no name. One day, the thunder god struck the mountain with shattering thunderbolts, and since then the local people have called it Faka Mountain, meaning a mountain stricken by heaven. Beijing's psychological war propaganda machine claims that Faka Mountain, which owes its name to our people of Ling nationality, is Chinese, to deceive and agitate the Chinese people. In fact, Faka Mountain is located inside Vietnamese territory, 600 meters from the Vietnam-China boundary line. Our border villages, such as (Liang Ping), (Kun Fa) and (Yao Men) are adjacent to the Contour 400 areas. The Chinese people on the Guangxi border, especially those of Ling nationality, all know that the mountain is Vietnamese territory. On the basis of its history and geographic location, Faka Mountain is definitely Vietnamese territory and has nothing to do with China.

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, July 29 -- The Council of State of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam has decided to confer the Gold Star order, Vietnam's highest decoration, on Fidel Castro Ruz, first secretary of the Communist Party of Cuba, president of the Council of State and president of the Council of Ministers of the Republic of Cuba.

The decision, signed by President of the Council of State Truong Chinh, says that the decoration is made in acknowledgement of the outstanding contributions of Fidel Castro Ruz, the respected leader of the working class and people of Cuba, an eminent fighter of the world communist and national liberation movement, to the consolidation and development of the fraternal friendship, militant solidarity and all-round cooperation between Vietnam and Cuba.

NHAN DAN Congratulates Castro

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, July 30 -- NHAN DAN's editorial today warmly congratulates Fidel Castro and wishes for closer Vietnamese-Cuban militant solidarity, in connection with a decision of the Council of State to confer on the Cuban leader the Gold Star order, the highest Vietnamese honour.

This, the paper says, is an expression of our high appreciation of and our great admiration for the revolutionary cause of the heroic Cuban people. It also spells out our warm feelings and sincere gratitude to the Communist Party, the government and the fraternal people of Cuba for their constant solidarity and support and their devoted, internationalist assistance. The decoration of Fidel Castro bespeaks our respect for and gratitude to this esteemed leader of the working class and the entire people of Cuba; this outstanding fighter of the international communist movement and the national liberation movement; this great, close friend of the Vietnamese people who has tirelessly worked for the consolidation and development of the fraternal friendship, militant solidarity and comprehensive cooperation between Cuba and Vietnam.

The paper recalls Fidel Castro's great services to the Cuban revolution, and says: For 23 years now Cuba has heroically held aloft the banners of national independence and socialism on the Western hemisphere, in defiance of aggression and sabotage by U.S. imperialism. The Cuban people, closely united around their party and government headed by Fidel Castro and with their devoted labour in socialist construction and national defence, have obtained great achievements, thereby enhancing their position and prestige in the international arena and contributing largely to the world's revolution.

Vietnam and Cuba, NHAN DAN goes on, are brothers motivated by the same revolutionary ideal and fighting in the same trench against imperialism.

Their militant solidarity has consolidated and developed ceaselessly for their own good, in the interests of the entire socialist community, and for the benefit of all forces of revolution, peace, national independence, democracy and social progress in the world.

The paper quotes Fidel Castro's famous declaration that the Cuban people are ready to even shed their own blood for Vietnam, and once more expresses gratitude for Cuba's full support and assistance during the anti-U.S. struggle in the past and in socialist construction and national defense at present.

NGUYEN THO CHAN PRAISES SOVIET EXPERTS, ASSISTANCE

He wrote: The Vietnamese-Soviet friendship labour emulation movement is gaining momentum at all the construction sites and factories where Soviet experts and workers are working. They have focussed efforts on helping Vietnam improve technology and labour organization so as to increase productivity and save materials, while stepping up the training of Vietnamese technicians and workers.

Thanks to the effective assistance of Soviet experts and the efforts of Vietnamese workers, the building tempo has increased remarkably in all key projects of the five-year plan including projects of gas and oil company, the Thang Long bridge, the enlargement of the Lam Thao superphosphate factory, the Bim Son cement works, the Hoa Binh hydro-electric power plant, the Pha Lai thermal-electric plant, and several coal mines. Production or building programs at these establishments have been surpassed by from two to 10 percent in 1981 and the first half of this year.

Overcoming difficulties, the Soviets working in the gas and oil industry have helped their Vietnamese colleagues fulfill the plans, discover more gas reserves and exploit the first gas deposit in the country. Soviet experts working at the coal mines have also fulfilled their emulation contracts with Vietnamese workers and technicians in opening up new mines on or ahead of schedule. In particular, I.T. Kongrachenko, a technical adviser in mining, has made important contributions to the drafting and execution of contracts on the supply and delivery of materials and equipment in due time and with the proper categories.

In their daily work, the Soviet workers and experts have always demonstrated a high sense of responsibility and set examples of simplicity and modesty. They have guided Vietnamese workers in every detail of their work, and given timely encouragement to those with an innovative spirit in production.

TAP CHI CONG SAN DISCUSSES ECONOMIC LEADERSHIP

BK290729 Hanoi TAP CHI CONG SAN in Vietnamese Jun 82 pp 59-66

[Text] After the working class and laboring people have seized state power, the scope of the party's leadership becomes very extensive, encompassing the political, economic, cultural, military, diplomatic and other fields. In the stage of socialist construction, however, economic leadership remains the focus of all party activities. This is because the economy is the basis of politics and the foundations of the efforts to resolve the problems concerning the people's life, to strengthen national defense and to consolidate and develop the socialist system.

Whether the economy of a country develops rapidly or slowly, successfully or unsatisfactorily is a problem closely related to the party's leadership.

I

The party leads the economy but does not directly manage it. Economic construction and development is a cause of the masses. For this reason, to lead the economy, it is important that the party satisfactorily implement the system of THE PARTY PROVIDING LEADERSHIP, THE PEOPLE EXERCISING MASTERY, AND THE STATE TAKING CARE OF MANAGERIAL WORK.

To exercise economic leadership, the party should study and decide on a general revolutionary line, a line for economic development, a socioeconomic development strategy, 5-year and annual economic development plans, national economic policies, economic management systems, policies regarding economic management reforms.... Of these factors, the party's line is the most decisive. Depending on the actual situation in each stage, the party may decide to adopt a number of specific strategies, such as the grain strategy, the raw materials strategy, the energy strategy.... It may also advocate developing a number of important economic sectors such as agriculture, heavy industry, light industry, communications, transportation, capital construction, home trade, foreign trade, and so forth.

The national economy operates according to objective economic laws. Therefore, the party must hold fast to these laws. At the same time, it must take into account the country's characteristics so as to determine the correct economic lines and policies. We must fully understand the leading role of the basic socialist economic law in the system of socialist economic laws, because it reflects most eminently the essence and objective of the socialist production system, determines the developmental trend of social production and governs the application of other economic laws. Holding fast to this law means that in all of our economic activities, we must aim to step up production, attach utmost importance to economic efficiency, reduce production costs to the minimum and make the most profits so as to meet more satisfactorily all the needs of society.

A number of other laws in the system of socialist economic laws also play a very important role. The law of developing the national economy in a planned and balanced manner calls for the institution of a planning system suitable for each state so as to ensure a rapid pace of development for the national economy, to mobilize all potentials and to promote production, thereby responding to the demands of society. In light of our country's present conditions, which is characterized by the still prevalent small-scale production and the existence of many economic elements, the most suitable planning system would be a system combining planning with the use of market relations, which associates the concentration of planning work at the central level with the promotion of the role of the localities and basic units in planning, and which coordinates planning with economic accounting and socialist business. At a time when our social labor productivity is still too low, our economic system is still irrational, and our economic system is still characterized by bureaucratic practices and subsidization, the law of constant increase in labor productivity requires that the economy be urgently reorganized, the economic management system be updated and, simultaneously, utmost importance be attached to science and technology to save manpower and increase labor productivity. To apply satisfactorily the law of distribution according to labor, we must adopt a rational policy regarding accumulation and consumption, and urgently study ways to reform prices and wages so as to associate harmoniously the three economic interests (those of the entire society, of collectives, and of individual workers) and to encourage all people to zealously engage in productive labor....

Aside from the system of socialist economic laws, a number of other economic laws such as the law of value, and so forth, still have an effect on our country's economy. We should closely combine the transformation of old production relations and the building of new socialist production relations with the development of productive forces to ensure that production relations are always compatible with the productive forces, thereby stimulating the development of production. We should combine skillful application of the law of planned and balanced development with the law of value in order to manage the socialist economy. Recent realities in our country as well as the experiences of many fraternal countries have showed that the tendency to belittle or disregard the law of value is erroneous. Practice has also proved that it is utterly wrong to allow state-operated production and business establishments to carry on operations at any cost, thus compelling the state to perpetrually compensate for their losses, which prevents the economy from developing.

Along with holding fast to the economic laws, the party should correctly apply the two basic principles of economic leadership, namely unifying political leadership with economic leadership and democratic centralism. Unifying politics with economy means that the party must ensure its absolute leadership in the economic field, adopt correct political viewpoints in resolving economic problems, closely coordinate political and ideological education with economic work, and gear all economic activities to supporting political tasks. In the present conditions, correctly and effectively applying the principle of democratic centralism means to completely abolish bureaucratic centralism and, simultaneously, to overcome the phenomenon of dispersion to achieve appropriate centralization and to vigorously carry out decentralization so as to bring into play the spirit of collective mastery and the boundless creative power of localities, basic units and the masses in economic building and management.

To exercise economic leadership, apart from holding fast to the various economic laws, the party must have strong ties with the masses, always follow closely the status of production, the people's life and developments in the mass movement, be responsive to the economic life, and promptly discover the new, support the right and rectify the wrong. The party should build and implement the system of THE WORKING PEOPLE'S SOCIALIST COLLECTIVE MASTERY IN THE ECONOMIC FIELD. It must link the masses' responsibilities with their right to mastery and simultaneously enhance their sense of and capacity for mastery, thereby enabling the masses to clearly see that they truly are the masters in reality.

The essence of the masses' collective mastery in the economic field and the ways for the various mass organizations, especially the trade unions, to participate in economic management, should be concretized and institutionalized. Measures must be adopted to prevent and deal with acts violating the masses' collective mastery in the economic field.

Party cadres and members, especially in the basic units, must show eagerness and behave in an exemplary manner in front of the masses. They must listen to the masses' suggestions and promptly respond to their legitimate demands and aspirations. Those party cadres and members who have committed serious errors and have lost the trust of the masses should be dealt with, replaced and expelled from the party.

The mass organizations, which serve as a link between the party and the masses, should update their work style, do away with bureaucratic operational methods and guard against losing contact with the masses. They must restore the party's tradition of mass motivation, matintain close relations with the masses and enlighten and convert each person and each family, therefy enabling the masses to clearly understand and satisfactorily implement various economic policies of the party and the state.

The party exercises economic leadership through the state, and the state is an instrument for the working people to implement their collective mastery in the economic field. For this reason, the party should apply itself to BUILDING THE STATE and strengthening the economic management apparatus. For its part, the state should simultaneously exert its right to administrative management and implement business management methods in the economic field. We should overcome the position of the party undertaking the state's work. At the same time, we must intensify control over state organs and economic organizations in implementing the party's policies and resolutions regarding economic affairs.

The party must see to it that the National Assembly and people's councils exercise their powers in making decisions on important economic problems of the entire country and each locality, and in supervising the economic activities of the administrative organs at all levels. We should stress that the functions of the Council of Ministers and its Standing Committee are to concretize the party's line, elaborate state plans and organize their implementation; to decide on general policies and systems; to guide the coordination of activities among various sectors and echelons; and to control and supervise the implementation of these policies and systems by the various ministries and local people's committees.

We must pay attention to strengthening the organs for research into economic strategies, economic management and economic information, and production and business organizations, especially the basic units. On the basis of organizing production association, we should gradually streamline the ministries responsible for economic management and improve the structure of various ministries by abolishing bureaus, reducing the number of departments, cutting down the number of cadres serving as deputy chiefs, and implementing the system of one-man leadership. We must strengthen the associations of interbranch handicraft cooperatives at the central and other levels, as their important role deserves, and define more clearly the functions of these organs in economic management and economic relations with foreign countries.

We should also improve and strengthen the local economic management apparatuses by streamlining and suiting them to the volume of work in their localities. We should reduce the number of municipal and provincial government services since the existence of a ministry at the central level does not necessarily mean that a related service must be set up at the municipal or provincial level. The strengthening of the district-level apparatus should be carried out in conjunction with the efforts to streamline the apparatus and to improve the leadership at the provincial level.

We must study the promulgation of practical policies to streamline the staff of the administrative apparatus. For example, we can freeze the wage funds of an organ for a period of time. If the organ concerned can reduce its staff but still manages to fulfill its tasks, its wage funds will not be sliced. We should continue to pay the redundant workforce of various organs and enterprises for a certain period of time to allow them to take the initiative in reorganizing their staff in a more rational manner. If conditions permit, management and administrative organs and institutes for scientific research should shift to operating according to the system of economic accounting.

We must strengthen the economic legal system and step up research on and the promulgation of economic legislation. We must promptly examine and revise irrational and outmoded systems, regulations and procedures which cause trouble and inconvenience in economic management. We must satisfactorily propagandize and explain laws and develop a lifestyle and workstyle in accordance with the law. The inspection, economic arbitration, control and judical organs should intensify their economic inspection activities so as to promptly expose and judiciously try all breaches of economic laws and contracts.

The state should take firm measures in its struggle against negative practices and severely punish cadres and personnel who take advantage of their positions and powers to commit unlawful acts. It should resolutely punish hoodlums, embezzlers, bribe-takers, speculators and smugglers, and ensure political security and public order and safety, thereby enabling the masses to apply themselves to production and work with confidence.

Cadres decide everything. Therefore, to exercise economic leadership, the party should firmly control and constantly improve cadre work. It should evaluate and select cadres on the basis of the results of their work and their work plans. It should appoint and promote cadres according to their sectors, professions and capacity, in the right place and at the right time. It should pay attention to promoting local and specialized cadres. In selecting and appointing cadres in charge of various sectors and economic organizations, aside from the quality requirement, the party should also attach importance to their capacity for organizational and managerial work and refrain from playing undue attention to their technical knowledge and academic titles.

At present, it is an urgent and important task to strengthen at all costs the contingent of managers in various production and business establishments, enterprise associations, corporations, and districts. This is aimed at providing each of these units with a team of cadres capable of abolishing bureaucratism and subsidization and implementing the socialist business system.

Long-term programs and plans shouldbe adopted for the training of cadres, whose composition and quality must be ensured. In the immediate future, importance must be attached to the training of production andbusiness managers, administrative and economic managers, and other professional cadres. Practical plans should be formulated to build a contingent of reserve cadres. All incumbent cadres, especially those serving as heads of organs or units, should be entrusted with well-defined responsibilities for the training of reserve cadres. Cadres slated for various positions, especially the key ones, should undergo a necessary probationary period.

A policy should be adopted to make it mandatory for newly graduated cadres to work in basic units for a certain period of time. Permission to transfer should be granted to those cadres from the upper level who wish to serve in a basic unit, and to those in administrative organs who wish to be reassigned to a production unit or to go back to their former sectors or professions so as to work and live near their spouses -- if certain units are ready to accept them.

The assignment and management of cadres should be revised by closely combining work management with personnel management and according more power to all sectors, levels and basic units in cadre management. Regulations concerning cadre work must be scrupulously implemented. Collective democracy must truly be really ensured in the selection and assignment of cadres and formalism, arbitrariness and unprincipled practices in this task must be opposed.

All party committee echelons and heads of organs and units must personally take charge of cadre work and must devote their efforts to meeting, discovering, selecting and training cadres. The staff system of cadre work must be strengthened and its quality must be improved; low-quality, conservative, narrow-minded or prejudiced people should not be allowed to conduct cadre management.

To carry out these functions satisfactorily, it is important to develop a scientific, practical and specific work system and work style and to oppose conservatism, formalism, subjectivism and precipitancy. Words must be matched by deeds. Work must be done in an organized and principled manner; arbitrariness must be opposed. A system concerning the issuance and implementation of decisions should be formulated and promulaged at an early date. We must resolutely refrain from issuing decisions when satisfactory preparation has not been made and necessary procedures have not yet been performed. We must pay attention to organizing information work satisfactorily and promoting democracy in the process of preparing for the issuance of a decision. Once a decision has been issued, we must devise work programs and plans to implement it and must simultaneously intensify control of and uphold discipline in the implementation of our decision. We must improve the quality of conference, during which we must conduct discussions in a truly democratic spirit and draw unequivocal conclusions.

II

To exercise economic leadership in all respects -- from deciding on lines and policies and organizing managerial work to assigning cadres and controlling all activities of the state apparatus in the economic field -- the party may use many staff organs, including the state's economic organs. But it still needs an "economic general staff" of its own composed of its economic departments and sections.

In preparing for the issuance of a decision, the party may use various state organs. However, it is not advisable for the party to rely solely on these organs. It needs the assistance and advice of another organ in tackling, studying and considering a problem before it discusses the decision to be taken. Moreover, there are economic problems concerning many sectors and which the party committee echelons cannot turn over exclusively to any particular sector for study. Instead, they must assign the task of organizing the study of such problems to the various economic departments of the party. Only in this way can the forces of all sectors be mobilized and the intellect of many economic and technical cadres be tapped to resolve these problems. Besides, while the use of state organs to assist the party in its research work does have an advantage in that it helps the latter maintain close contact with reality, this practice involves a drawback due to the fact that these state organs often are so busy with their routine managerial work that they hardly have enough time to conduct a penetrating and serious study of the problems turned over to them. For this reason, there ought to be two sets of organs -- party organs and state organs. Only if these organs work together and complement each other can their research efforts yield good results.

With regard to the cadre problem, when the number of economic cadres is small, the party committee echelons may rely on the organization sections of the party committee echelons to manage these cadres. However, when their number becomes too large and the various economic and technical sectors have become more developed, the management of cadres should be decentralized and the party committee echelons should rely on their economic sections to manage economic cadres while their organization sections occupy themselves primarily with general managerial work. Moreover, only by relying on their economic sections to manage economic cadres can the party committee echelons implement the principles of work management and personnel management, thereby keeping their cadres work right on target.

Concerning control work, the party committee echelons cannot rely on state organs to carry out this task, because, in principle, control organs must be separated from management organs. The reason for this is that one cannot play ball and be the referee at the same time. Of course, state organs also perform control duties, but this control centers on specific matters whereas the party's control work focuses mainly on the implementation of lines and policies. In this task, the party committee echelons also cannot rely on the party's control sections, which are exclusively responsible for controlling the implementation of democracy and discipline within the party. The party committee echelons need their own economic sections to help in exercising economic control.

Still, we have yet to mention party and ideological work in various sectors and economic establishments. Here the party also needs an economic section to assist it in performing its supervisory and control duties in order to combine party building with economic development and ensure the party's leadership in all economic sectors.

Some people feel that in many places the party has successfully exercised its economic leadership for some time and has encountered no obstacles despite the absence of an economic section. Facts, however, tell a different story. We all know that the economic line laid down by the third party congress has been amended and perfected by the fourth party congress. In implementing this line, our economy has scored undeniable achievements. Generally speaking, however, the economic situation throughout the country, as well as in each locality, is developing slowly and imbalances and bottlenecks still persist. This situation stems from many causes. However, as far as leadership is concerned, an important cause was the absence of economic sections in the party committee echelons. If such sections had existed, then the cause would have been our failure to strengthen them sufficiently to assist the party committee echelons in studying and laying down specific positions and policies, satisfactorily managing economic cadres and controlling the implementation of the party's economic positions and policies.

Some are also of the opinion that economic sections are needed only at the central level because this level is responsible for laying down lines and policies. They feel that in the localities, which have only a executive function, such sections are not needed, at least for the time being. This line of thinking is wrong. Naturally, economic leadership in the localities differs from that of the central level in its scope. In principle, however, wherever the party comittee echelons exercise economic leadership, they need a staff organ for economic affairs. The fact is that evry locality has to study and concretize the economic line, positions and policies laid down by the central level so as to implement them in its area. It also has to assign cadres to economic work, control the implementation of the economic line, and so forth.

It should be added that party committees at various echelons are elected for a fixed period. Their composition, therefore, may change and some of their members may be entrusted with economic affairs in one term and with other tasks or not be reelected at all in the next. For this reason, if the party committee echelons do not have the assistance of the economic sections -- which are stable specialized organs capable of understanding the development processes of the economic situation and accumulating economic knowledge and experience -- they can in no way satisfactorily exercise economic leadership.

Therefore, the existence of the economic sections as well as the other specialized sections of the party is an objective necessity directly related to the existence of the party committee echelons.

Because of this necessity, the party should organize and strengthen economic sections. Depending on the specific needs of each locality and each period of time, the party may set up one, two or several economic sections, the staff of which should be compact, small and of good quality. Cadres of these economic sections must have good revolutionary qualities and a good understanding of the party's line and policies. At the same time they must be experienced in managerial work, well versed in cadre work and equipped with economic and technical knowledge. Just like the propaganda-training and organization sections, the economic sections are specialized organs of the party committee echelons. Therefore, the party committee echelons should appoint party committee-level cadres to take exclusive charge of these sections and should not let these comrades assume simultaneous administrative duties and vice versa.

Concerning the duties of the economic sections, a directive of the party Central Committee Secretariat has clearly clearly pointed out that we must, first, follow the research process or organize research to help the central level or party committee echelons prepare for the issuance of economic decisions; second, help all sectors and levels acquire a thorough understanding of various decisions and follow through and control their implementation; third, assist the central level or party committee echelons in managing cadres in various economy sectors according to specific regulations; and, fourth, follow party work in various economic sectors. For a long time now, however, there have been conflicting views on this matter. Some people have given emphasis to the research duty, on the grounds that the party still needs many concrete positions and policies. Some have underlined the control duty for the reason that many decisions have not yet been implemented. Others have preferred to consider cadre work as the foremost task, due to the fact that cadres decide everything.

All of these opinions are right in some respects. Basically, however, we should understand that each duty has its own importance and we should not regard one as being more important the others. Mentioning the research duty first does not mean that it is more important than the control duty. It means, rather, that to exercise leadership the party must do research work first to lay down lines and policies. Control and implementation then follow. On the other hand, it is because cadre work involves both research and control activities. Moreover, the three duties are closely related as far as their substance and methods are concerned. With regard to the former, after doing research and laying down a position or policy, we must follow through and control its implementation. Through this control effort we shall discover new problems which we must study in order to emend our position or policy. Concerning the method, we must conduct surveys and carry out control work when we study a problem. When we examine a problem, we must do research and suggest solutions.

Concerning research work, three kinds of problems may be the pbjects of this activity. Specific problems such as the direction of a sector's development or specific policies and measures should be the objects of state organs' research efforts, while the party's economic sections merely contribute suggestions. With regard to economic problems related to several sectors or which cannot be turned over exclusively to any state organ for resolution, the party Central Committee and its lower committee echelons may entrust an economic section with the main responsibilities for organizing research on these problems with the participation of other sectors concerned.

As for the major and more important problems, such as making preparations for party congresses at various levels, the Central Committee and lower party committee echelons shall organize subcommittees for research under the charge of key comrade leaders.

Concerning control work the best way is for the economic sections to constantly follow and supervise the activities of various economic sectors, seek out and promote positive elements and promptly detect and rectify erroneous practices instead of allowing errors to be committed first and organizing inspection and dealing with them afterward. In following the work of the economic sectors, if the party committee echelons see that a certain problem needs checking, they may, depending on the importance of the problem and its ramifications, assign the checking task to various economic sections or set up provisional inspection teams under the economic sections to look into the problem with the participation of the sectors concerned.

The aim of control work is to keep abreast of the situation, discover problems, rectify shortcomings and change the situation. Therefore, when carrying out control work we must correctly assess the situation; identify strengths and weaknesses; objectively analyze their causes; determine responsibility; and devise measures to overcome them. The important thing is that once control work has been completed, we must follow up and supervise the implementation of the suggestions of the control organ to see which suggestions have been heeded and which have not. In the latter case, we must continue our efforts to resolve the problem.

Cadre work involves many different tasks ranging from research and control to cadre management. In carrying out this work, there must be a clear-cut division of labor and cooperation between the organization and economic sections of the party committee echelons. The organization section is primarily responsible for conducting research and assisting the party committee echelons in laying down lines and policies regarding cadres. The economic section will only contribute suggestions. The economic section is responsible for controlling the implementation of cadre policies and cadre management in various economic sectors. For its part, the organization section will contribute suggestions and coordinate general work.

[Text] Australia and 16 other countries have expressed their concern to Iranian authorities over the treatment of people practising the Bahai religion in Iran. The minister for foreign affairs, Mr Street, said the joint approach was made in the form of a note delivered in Tehran. The note sought a response from the Iranian authorities to an approach earlier this year, in which Australia also participated, seeking assurances that the human rights of the Bahais in Iran would be respected. Mr Street says Australia's support for the latest approach reflects its grave and continuing concern about their plight.

PRIME MINISTER ASSAILS FRENCH POLICIES

[Text] Port Moresby, July 29 (AFP) -- Recent action by France posed a threat to world and regional peace, said Papua New Guinea Prime Minister Sir Julius Chan today.

In support of this statement he cited the detonation of a nuclear device in Mururoa, French Polynesia, the decision to release on bail a Frenchman charged with the murder of a New Caledonian independence leader, and a report that French technicians had helped Argentina install and maintain Exocet missiles during the war over the Falkland Islands.

Sir Julius said, "We so often hear France talk of how it is a civilised culture, yet they are in the forefront of global arms producers. By now they are well aware of the Pacific's concern about nuclear explosions... Yet they have shown no sympathy towards our protests."

"And not so long ago, it appeared as if a peaceful move toward self-rule was in the wind in New Caledonia, but now tensions seem to be rising and the French appear unable or unwilling to keep the Europeans in New Caledonia under control."

MALAYSIAN FOREIGN MINISTER GHAZALI ARRIVES

Upon arrival Ghazali refused to give a press statement except saying that his visit was to exchange views with his counterpart on the result of his talks with Vietnam Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach had during his visit to Kuala Lumpur presented the proposals of the three communist countries Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia on the question of settlement of the regional problem. [sentence as received] The talks were said to have bogged down but Malaysia was reported to have promised to study the Vietnamese proposal.

On Friday Malaysia's Ghazali will pay a courtesy call on President Suharto and Vice President Adam Malik. Before returning to Kuala Lumpur Friday afternoon Foreign Minister Ghazali is scheduled to present 250,000 Malaysian riggits in aid for the victims of the Galunggung eruption.

IRANIAN EMISSARY MEETS SUHARTO, MAKES COMMENT

[Text] Jakarta, July 30 (ANTARA) -- Ayatollah Amini, a special envoy of the Iranian second strongman, Ayatollah Montazeri, revealed here Thursday that his country will this year change its stand and favour Indonesia over the East Timor issue when it is taken up at the United Nations.

Speaking at a press conference at the Iranian Embassy, Amini said the stand taken by Iran opposing Indonesia in the previous UN sessions on East Timor stemmed from the uncertainty in the early stage of the Islamic revolution in that country. But now when situation has return to normal the Iranian Government has had time to review the decision and made the change, he explained.

He said his talks with President Suharto earlier that day had given him an impression that the friendly relations between the two countries will grow stronger in the future. He described the talk as very fruitful, saying more such talks in the future will be useful to improve mutual understanding.

Amini said his mission to Indonesia and a number of other countries is to explain the Iranian in the Gulf war and Lebanon crisis and to express its view with regard to the coming nonaligned summit scheduled in Baghdad. Iran is against holding the conference in Baghdad, the capital city of Iraq with which it is now in war.

"I believe President Suharto fully understood our explanations on those issues", he said adding, "we're are against war and we are peace-loving people and we have no ambition to grab others' land". Therefore, Iran is fully in favour of the nonaligned ideals and remains one of its members, because "we believe in the lofty goals of the movement".

Amini said although his delegation was sent by a religious leader, his political statement represents the political stand of his country. Montazeri is chairman of the Qom Religious Supreme Council. He is regarded as second only to Ayatollah Khomeyni, the spiritual leader of Iran. Religious and political leaders in Iran have since the triumphant Islamic revolution worked hand in hand. There is no line spearating ulemas from the government authorities because the government administration is actually under the blessing of ulemas, he said. "Therefore, anything I say represents the government policies," he said.

Amini is scheduled to leave the country for Sri Lanka on Friday. He has been to Bangladesh before visiting the country.

OBSERVER URGES MORE DYNAMIC FOREIGN POLICY

[Text] Jakarta, July 30 (ANTARA) -- The Indonesian OBSERVER newspaper Friday editorially suggested that Indonesia "can no longer afford to maintain a low profile in foreign affairs, voiceless and colourless, without a sense of direction and thus allowing herself to be pushed and pulled hither and thither in regional and global conferences."

It stated that at the moment regional and global political development could not be ignored any longer. "A low profile image which Indonesia has maintained so far will have to be discarded," it said.

The newspaper indicated that there was a school of thought that insisted that Indonesia should come boldly forward in the next summit conference of the nonaligned countries in Baghdad and "try to recapture the leading position it had enjoyed before amongst the nonaligned community."

It added that in this framework Indonesia was still able to play an important role in this (nonaligned) community, "different from the usual low profile attitude which signifies Indonesia's foreign policy in the new order."

The editorial however indicated that in charting a new course in her foreign affairs "Indonesia does not have to abandon old friends, but neither is it essential to antagonize potential foes when the latter do not show any inclination to be aggressive against her. Nor is it required from her to be extremely loud or excessively vocal. But it is about time that Indonesia gives real meaning to her own adopted principles of an active independent foreign policy within the framework of nonalignment. Her no policy line in ASEAN, in Southeast Asia, in Asia and the Pacific and worldwide needs a strong infuse of new initiatives and options based on new conceptions and ideas."

"It is easy to issue statements that both the Soviet Union and Communist China pose equal threats to the security of Southeast Asia. But again, this is the sort of no-policy statement which leads us nowhere. But this is in fact a remnant of past policies which prevailed until 3 or 4 years ago. Now the situation has changed. Indonesia is in the middle income bracket reassert herself in the handling of a genuine and positive nonaligned policy without fear or favour," the Indonesian OBSERVER's editorial declared. PROGRESS SEEN RESULTING FROM THACH VISIT

BK291512 Kuala Lumpur International Service in English 0800 GMT 29 Jul 82

[Summary] Malaysia's foreign minister, Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie, said yesterday that his four sessions of talks with the Vietnamese foreign minister, Mr Nguyen Co Thach, had resulted in progress in some aspects of the Kampuchean issue. He underlined particularly the Vietnamese desire to be friend with Malaysia and ASEAN.

"Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie had told Mr Thach that the Democratic Kampuchean Government was set up to fight the Vietnamese. If there is indeed such a fighting, it is at the choice of Vietnam and not Prince Sihanouk's government. The Coalition Democratic Kampuchean Government was set up to find and facilitate a political solution to the problem and not act as a military wedge. This solution offers an honorable and acceptable way for Vietnam to leave Kampuchea, as this would mean the assumption of leadership by an open and [word indistinct] of all those who wanted to join with the Kampuchean people, given the final choice through elections of deciding the government that they want.

"It is also pleasant to read Mr Thach's statement that the Malaysian and ASEAN's concern over the Vietnamese military presence in Kampuchea and their stand on the total withdrawal of these troops was a legitimate one. It is indeed heartening to note Vietnam's appreciation of the ASEAN views relating to recent events in Kampuchea. By the same token, Mr Thach also appealed to ASEAN to appreciate Hanoi's concern about the security of Indochina and its presumption of the Chinese threat from the north. Malaysia had been painfully made aware of the threat by elements of the Malayan Communist Party who are still today directed and supported by Beijing. "But, at the same time, the Malaysian prime minister, Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir Mohamed, had told the Vietnamese foreign minister that his nation had absolutely no justification for invading Kampuchea, installing its own government in Phnon Penh and continuing its military occupation of that country. The recent talks also show that Vietnam still maintained its maximum position of wanting to be in Kampuchea and helping the Heng Samrin regime in Phnom Penh. Vietnam would not acquiese to the return of the Khmer Rouge to power. But there have been some significant movements away from Vietnam's earlier stand that the situation in Kampuchea was irreversible. Mr Nguyen Co Thach had stated that the positioning and number of Vietnamese troops was (?variable). This could be interpreted as signs of flexibility on the question of Kampuchea.

"But what Malaysia, ASEAN and indeed the international community would like to see is the very first commitment by the Vietnamese to respect the independence and territorial integrity of Kampuchea, to give positive help in the process of finding a truly Kampuchean government through the Kampuchean people, to help in securing and attaining the neutrality of Kampuchea and finally a pledge to help in the reduction of tension in Southeast Asia. All these objectives can be obtained if we get the support and cooperation of Vietnam."

FURTHER REPORT ON MARCOS 26 JULY SPEECH ON ECONOMY

HK300432 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 27 Jul 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] President Marcos thumbed down yesterday a labor agitation for a major increase in the minimum wage at a time when business is struggling to stay afloat.

Mr Marcos, in his state-of-the-nation address at the opening of the fifth regular session of the Batasang Pambansa, said that in other countries like America "unions are voluntarily abandoning their wage demands" and have even accepted wage cuts. On the demands of some labor groups for a wage increase, he said, "I will say in all candor that these demands are unrealistic, and our priority at this point must center on the employment of those without jobs.

The problem of unemployment was one of five main points in his agenda for government action. The others concerned the continuing thrust of the Kilusang Kabuhayan at Kaunlara [KKK], the judicial reorganization, the legislative program, and the five-year economic program beginning 1983. He called the KKK the centerpiece of the government program to give gainful employment to the labor force which increases by 643,000 yearly. He said P1 billion was allocated for the first year of KKK operations, with another P1 billion scheduled for the coming year, plus P200 million for the local government support fund for the KKK. He said since the KKK started last year, 3,774 projects have been established, creating 140,817 new jobs. Three-fourths of these projects were established in job-short rural communities. "There is virtually hysterical demand today for the program to be spread to every nook and corner of the land," he said.

On judicial reform, he noted that there had been no such movement since 1901. "We need, first, institutional reforms in the structuring of our courts," he said. "Secondly, we need a sweeping revamp of personnel in the judiciary, principally aimed at restoring the competence and integrity of the bench. Finally, there is the need to revise the rules of court to do away with delays in court proceedings.

He said that in the legislative program before the batasan, these would be the most urgent tasks:

1. Reorganization of the government and standardization of compensation for government employees:
2. Eradication of graft and corruption:
3. Effective maintenance of peace and order:
4. Full implementations of the agrarian reform already instituted:
5. More measures to bridge the gap between rich and poor:

He called for quick enactment of amendments to the election code, the anti-graft law, and the education code: "I shall convene soon a meeting of the members of the cabinet and the General Military Council on the matter," he said:

The President also stressed the issue of reappointment of seats in the batasan in accordance with the constitution. He wanted this to be acted upon now "to make our parliament truly representative of our people."

On unemployment, he called this a major matter of concern. "Although the national unemployment rate remains at a manageable five percent, the unemployment rate has come up to 12 percent in Metro Manila." The reasons, he said, are plain: "Many industries are closed or closing down. In the copper and gold industries, as many as 40,000 workers are threatened to be laid off. Atlas and Marcopper were ready to close until government assumed some of their losses." He said that in other industries, the picture was the same: "Recessive trends are a fact." He appealed to management to keep industries going, saying that he could sit down with businessmen and industrialists to assist them in this matter.

At the same time, he told the ministries of defense and labor to look into reports that subversives had influenced labor ranks. "The welfare of labor, I will say again, has been and is my abiding obsession," he said. "But our attention at this point must be riveted on saving jobs and creating job opportunities and in keeping the incomes of workers in pace with the cost of living."

Citing the importance of the five-year economic program that would start five years from now, he said that there could be no doubt that national planning could be based on the perspective of a single year.

"The times call for a much more fundamental assessment of the position of the nation today: of the trends in national life, of the character of our institutions, of the situation of the various sectors of society, of the status of our relations with the world, and of the nature of the problems we face," he said.

The president invited the opposition to take part in the moral reconstruction of society through a democratic dialogue by parliamentary means and not by a mindless recourse to violence. He declared that the "vitality of our national life" derives in part from a creative and reasoned debate and from the participation of all in the reconstruction of society. He said it "is one of the grave distortions of the times we live in that those who sometimes claim to speak for moral order justify in the same breath the morality of violence." He declared that those who talk about moral revolution are several years late because this has been articulated time and again in the last ten years.

PREMIER VIRATA PREDICTS BRIGHTER PICTURE IN 1983

HK300109 Manila Domestic Service in English 2300 GMT 29 Jul 82

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Cesar Virata predicted a brighter year for the country in 1983. Mr Virata said that the economy will improve and inflation will go down by 10 percent next year. Details from Batasan correspondent (Archie Reyes):

He also said that the government's gross borrowings for 1983 will reach (?9.6) billion pesos, and this is lower than that of 1982 on account of the expected tight credit situation abroad and the existing policy of allocating moe domestic credit to the private sector. He said the budget [words indistinct] for 1983 is expected to be about 10.2 billion pesos, or about 2.5 percent of the gross national product. [end recording]

Prime Minister Virata also assessed the performance of the Cabinet and the Executive Committee, which turned 1 year old yeaterday. The Cabinet helps the president formulate policies, while the Executive Committee oversees the day-to-day operations of the government. Prime Minister Virata said the two bodies have done well and that the people could look forward to an even more efficient Cabinet and Executive Committee in the days ahead.

[Begin Virata recording] It is a more tightly knit Cabinet, because we are aware of each other's programs and we believe that this system of having a modified presidential parliamentary system is working well. We have passed major legislation and we believe we have broken the system that resulted in deadlock, and we are moving well. [end recording]

The first lady is optimistic that the Philippine economy will bounce back from economic recession when the world economy recovers. Speaking before career officers of the University of Life, Madam Marcos noted that, even in the face of current difficulties, the Philippines is doing creditably. She said she expects the country to really take of economically once the world economy pulls out of inflation and recession. Madam Marcos attributed the Philippine resiliency to its natural and human resources, and she warned, however, that the Filipinos can only achieve real and lasting progress if they develop thier our technology.

A big portion of the proposed 618-billion-peso budget for 1983 will go to the local governments. Prime Minister Virata said the big outlay acknowledged the vital role local officials play in the national development and growth.

DEFENSE MINISTER NOTES LOCAL LEADERSHIP FAILURES

HK300111 Manila Far East Broadcasting Company in English 2330 GMT 29 Jul 82

[Text] Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile has said the failure of local leadership in some isolated parts of the country had greatly eroded the people's support for the government's peace and order program. He was referring to civilian officials who operate at the grassroot level and are indifferent to the needs and grievances of the people. He also referred to some military commanders who engage in activities inimical to public interest and violate of the rights of the citizenry.

INFORMATION MINISTER BLASTS WESTERN MEDIA

Cendana said the Western media want to condition the Third World to think what the imperialist powers want us to think. According to Cendana, the Western media are presuming to interpret for us events not only in the world but also in our country. The objective, according to the minister, is to dominate the mind, attitudes and beliefs. He called on Filipinos to be skeptical in reading or listening to Western interpretation of events in the Philippines. He said Western newsmen could not seem to report events in the Third World without bias and racial prejudice.

COLUMNIST DEPLORES 'SORRY STATE' OF OPPOSITION

["Feedback" weekly syndicated column by Bobby P. Dacer: "When Will a Strong United Opposition Arise?"]

[Text] Implicit in the sustenance of the parliamentary form of government is the existence of an effective check-and-balance aspect of its operation which could only be provided by a political opposition of consequences: responsible, reliable, and enduring. This is so because in the same way that a kite sails higher and higher against a prevailing wind, so does a majority party -- and with it the government -- in the face of constructive criticisms and timely reminders from a fiscalizing party.

A majority party without any semblance of opposition to reckon with is unhealthy in a democracy because it tends to be overbearing, lazy and, God forbid,dictatorial. This is not, by the way, a theory borne out of local observation, the parliamentary system here being only four years old. This is only a warning that, unless and until a truly genuine opposition emerges before long, the symptoms of the very danger to a healthy democracy will develop to malignancy.

For indeed, since 1978 when the parliamentary machinery started grinding with the convening of the Batasang Pambansa there is still no political opposition to speak of. That group of candidates that seept the first election for batasan members in Central Visayas forfeited a splendid opportunity to serve as a nucleus for a nationwide opposition party because hardly had they warmed their seats in the legislature than they started forming blocs among themselves and, instead of rising as one man to fiscalize the majority party, fought each other for supremacy, resulting in its own fragmentation and consequent ineffectuality as fiscalizers.

A number of opposition groups fielded candidates in the 1978 and 1981 elections but after their bids (in which a handful won), they not only failed to unite into one cohesive fighting unit, but lost a golden moment to lead through inaction and default. Boycott of the political exercise would not and, in fact, did not prove anything. By staying away from the polls, how could a political group prove that their cause was accepted by the people? And is it not true that its threat to resort to armed revolution turned off support from decent, law-abiding sectors of society?

There are also opposition groups abroad, especially in the United States. Ironic it is, however, that although their leaders have never seen for thenselves actual conditions in the Philippines since the declaration of martial law, they paint their native land as on the verge of sinking just because they are not at the helm. Some of them have also the dubious distinction of openly advocating violence preparatory to their seizure of political power here.

Fragmented, disunited, and ineffectual -- this is the dismal state of the political opposition today. No less than the head of government and of the ruling Kilusang Bagong Lipunan [KBL] has perceived the danger signals and has repeatedly called for the various opposition groups to unite in the public interests. Consequently, some KBL members in the Batasan have proposed a subsidy for the opposition, obviously having noted in the chamber the decimation of potential fiscalizers.

What could be the reasons for the sorry state of the opposition? Crisscrossing and overlapping ambitions of each of their self-proclaimed leaders is one. Each of them would like to be president of the country. Lack of a credible and practical alternative program of government is another reason. The thrust of their efforts is merely to engender hate at President Marcos as if imflammatory public statements are enough to entitle them to take over the government. A third reason could be disagreement on the manner of dislodging the majority party from power. While some stick to peaceful means, others are fanatically for bloodshed.

On the other hand, what constitute the climate and the attributes of a truly genuine opposition conducive to a healthy democracy? Considering that some 70 percent of the country's population live in the rural areas, the latter should be the base of such an opposition. It should be in the barrios, the 'bondoks' and the countrysides where the opposition should be anchored and expanded. And it should be an opposition whose loyalty is firmly and deeply rooted on burning issues of the day, on principles and on its well-considered alternative program of government, not on personalities. It should shun violence and slander, and should subscribe to peaceful electoral processes in its bid for public office. It should be willing to persevere, sacrifice, and work beyond the call of duty, honestly convinced that the validity and wisdom of platforms are not reflected in numbers but in their intrinsic herits which are better appreciated in free, open debate. Above all, it should be an opposition with the best interest of the county always the paramount consideration.

Will the country and people finally realize such an opposition? Those who have committed themselves as members of the opposition should now provide the answer affirmatively before it is too late, to fiscalize what can be an overbearing, lazy and, God forbid, a dictatorial majority party.

ASEAN FOREIGN MINISTERS MEET IN BANGKOK 7 AUG

Dhanabalan Arrives

In a hard-hitting statement, the Singaporean diplomat referred to Vietnam's attitude on Cambodia as "inflexible", and said that no amount of talking would change it. "Vietnam has not yet come to a point where it is prepared to negotiate a political settlement in Cambodia", he said. "The situation in Cambodia is the main point of difference between Hanoi and the ASEAN, and Hanoi has shown that it is not prepared to discuss a solution to the Cambodian problem".

Mr Dhanabalan said in spite of efforts by Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach to give the impression that his country is flexible, there has been no change in the Vietnamese position. He said that Mr Thach had made it clear during his visit to ASEAN countries last month that there will be no withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia until China signs a non-aggression pact with Vietnam. "Vietnam is prepared at a regional conference to discuss any other regional matters, but they will not talk about Cambodia", Mr Dhanabalan said.

The Singaporean foreign minister reiterated the ASEAN stand that Vietnam must withdraw its troops from Cambodia, and that the Cambodian people must be allowed the right to choose their own government. He said that the Cambodian issue would be discussed at tomorrow's meeting, which would be to finalise ASEAN's strategy at the U.N. General Assembly starting next month. "We have persuaded other countries not to give aid to Vietnam while she has this militant attitude, and we will continue to call on countries in the U.N. to support Cambodia with humanitarian aid", he said. He added that any aid funnelled to the newly-formed Cambodian coalition government made up of former head of state Norodom Sihanouk, ex-Premier Son Sann and the ousted Chinese-backed Khmer Rouge would not necessarily go to the Khmer Rouge, the only viable guerrilla force in Cambodia.

Talking about the alleged threats to ASEAN, Mr Dhanabalan said that the Vietnamese foreign minister had issued a warning to the ASEAN countries. He said that along with China, ASEAN was interfering in the internal affairs of the Indochinese states. He said that China had Maoist parties in the region, and told me that Vietnam could do the same thing. He warned that if ASEAN did not accept the situation in Cambodia, there would be danger for us, Mr Dhanabalan said.

Mokhtar, Ghazali Arrive

[Text] Bangkok, Aug 6 (AFP) -- There is no real change in Vietnam's objective of keeping its troops in Cambodia, the foreign ministers of Indonesia and Malaysia said today in Bangkok. Mokhtar Kusumaatmaja of Indonesia and Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie of Malaysia arrived together in Bangkok this afternoon for tomorrow's special one-day meeting of the foreign ministers of the five countries in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, ASEAN -- Thailand, Singapore, Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines.

"Vietnam feels that the only way to preserve its own security is to continue to occupy Kampuchea," Mr Ghazali said on arrival at Don Muang airport.

SUZUKI, CANADIAN HOUSE DELEGATION DISCUSS TRADE

OW300817 Tokyo KYODO in English 0639 GMT 30 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 30, KYODO -- Japan will continue to pay due attention to Canadian requests for stepped-up imports of manufactured goods, Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki said Monday. Suzuki made the statement when he conferred with a five-member delegation from the Canadian House of Commons, including Speaker Jeanne Sauve, Japanese officials said.

Noting that Japan and Canada have settled a bilateral dispute over Japanese car exports in a manner satisfactory to the both sides, Suzuki said he understands the Canadian hopes to sell more manufactured goods to Japan in addition to raw materials. He said his government will continue to pay due attention in this regard.

Mme. Sauve said Canada is now suffering from a severe economic recession with the unemployment rate now standing at 10 percent. She said her country hopes to overcome the difficulties in cooperation with Japan and other countries.

WATANABE CONSIDERING EMERGENCY TAX MEASURES

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 31, KYODO -- Finance Minister Michio Watanabe said Tuesday his ministry is considering taking emergency measures to cope with a huge tax revenue shortfall expected to total between yen 5 and 6 trillion (dollar 19.1 to 22.9 billion) this fiscal year.

Among such measures now under study are ways to increase non-tax revenues as much as possible through such steps as suspension of the allocation of an amount of the state budget as appropriations for redemption and interest payments on government bonds according to the prescribed rate, Watanabe said.

Speaking at a joint meeting of the ruling Liberal-Democratic Party's Executive Council and Policy Affairs Research Council, Watanabe said the ministry is also considering using reserve funds earmarked for recovery of coins in circulation to partly cover the record tax revenue shortfall.

It is also necessary to issue an additional amount of deficit-covering bonds when the government adopts a supplementary budget for fiscal 1982 ending next March, the minister said as he explained the present state of the public finances and the ministry's budget compilation policy for fiscal 1982 and 1983 to the meeting. In compiling the supplementary budget for fiscal 1982, Watanabe said, the ministry will take measures to cut fiscal spending and grants to local governments.

It is necessary for the ministry to take these measures in the face of the surging fiscal deficit, which is expected to continue to exist in fiscal 1983 beginning next April, he noted.

Observers said Watanabe was believed to have made these statements to emphasize that the public finances are now in a "state of emergency."

Watanabe, meanwhile, told the meeting that, in his view, it will prove difficult for the government to fulfill its public pledge to wipe out all fiscal deficit in fiscal 1984 (April 1984-March 1985). He said, however, that it is undesirable for the government to immediately abandon the pledge because, if the deadline for eliminating the deficit is postponed, it may dampen government agency effort to curtail spending.

ROK EMBASSY OFFICIALS BRIEFED ON TEXTBOOK ISSUE

[Text] Tokyo, July 30, KYODO -- The chief of the Ministry of Education's textbook examination section met with South Korean Embassy officials here Friday to explain how the ministry examines textbooks for use in the public school system. Kazuo Fujimura and two other ministry officials met with Embassy Minister Yi Sang-chin and Education Attache An Sang-sul.

The meeting came in response to mounting criticism in South Korea that the ministry is rewriting history in its review textbook process.

Ministry sources said the Japanese officials explained that while the ministry makes recommendations on changes in the textbooks it is left up to the authors whether or not to accept the advice. They also reportedly said that sections dealing with Japan-South Korea relations are examined in light of Japanese history and the bilateral friendship between the two countries.

During the meeting Isao Suzuki, director general of the Elementary and Secondary Education Bureau, thanked the South Korean Government for its discretion in dealing with the controversial issue.

Minister Yi responded that Seoul believes foreign countries should refrain from commenting on Japanese school textbooks as the issue is an internal problem. He said he hoped the alleged distortion of historical events in the textbooks could be settled through prudent measures by the Japanese Government.

REACTION TO PRC CANCELLATION OF MINISTER'S VISIT

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 2, KYODO -- China's virtual cancellation of its invitation for the Japanese education minister to visit China has embarrassed Japanese Foreign Ministry officials.

The Chinese action gave amid increasing criticism against the rewriting of Japanese school textbooks concerning history before and during World War II. The Chinese claim the rewording in the textbooks distorts the past Japanese actions in China. On Sunday, the Chinese Government told Japan that it believes it inappropriate for Japanese Education Minister Heiji Ogawa to visit China now "in view of the current developments." Ogawa had been invited to visit Beijing and Shanghai for talks with Chinese leaders next month.

Foreign Ministry officials avoided direct comment on the latest Chinese action, saying that it is a matter for the Education Ministry to decide on. But the officials hinted that Japan would have to restudy how to deal with the mounting criticism of the textbooks. They suggested that Japan has to prepare some fresh steps beyond the explanation already made about the Japanese textbook screening system.

The officials also fear that the latest developments may affect the planned official visit to China by Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki late in September.

The criticism is growing not only in China but also in North and South Korea, Taiwan and other Southeast Asian countries.

The Foreign Ministry will make utmost efforts for a quick solution to the Chinese protest over the textbooks problem in order to prevent the matter from affecting the whole relations with Asian countries, officials said.

Education Minister Comments

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 2, KYODO -- Education Minister Heiji Ogawa said Monday it is "improper" for him to visit China now because of the current controversy over history textbooks concerning Japanese actions in China before and during World War II.

He was initially scheduled to visit Beijing mid-September at the invitation of the Chinese Education Ministry. But the ministry officially asked Ogawa Sunday to postpone his trip until the textbook dispute is settled.

Speaking to reporters Monday, Ogawa said, "I myself consider it improper to visit China under the present circumstances. "I want to visit China clear in mind after the problem is settled," he added. Ogawa also said he wants to create a "favorite climate" [as received] allowing him to visit the country.

The controversy stemmed from the Japanese Education Ministry's censorship of high school textbooks, which switched the wording Japanese "invasion" of China to "advance" into the country. The ministry's "guidance" also played down a 1937 massacre of Chinese by Japanese soldiers at Nanking. These have been criticized by the Beijing government and China's official news media as an attempt to justify Japan's wartime militarism in violation of the 1972 Sino-Japan joint communique.

RETIREMENT OF JCP CHAIRMAN NOSAKA ANNOUNCED

[Text] Atami, Shizuoka Pref., July 31, KYODO -- Long-time Japan Communist Party leader Sanzo Nosaka will step down as chairman of the Central Committee finally and assume an honorary position, party officials said Saturday. Nosaka's retirement came on the final day session of the party's 16th convention which opened at the spa resort of Atami, some 100 kilometers southwest of Tokyo.

However, a successor was not appointed.

A member of the Japan Communist Party since its inception in 1922, Nosaka has presided over Central Committee meetings since 1958. Nosaka, who turned 90 last March, has resolved to recede from the frontline to revamp the party's image, and concentrate his energy on autographical notes now partially carried in the party's magazine ZENEI (VANGUARD).

NEW JCP PRESIDIUM CHAIRMAN FUWA INTERVIEWED

OW020314 Tokyo NHK Television Network in Japanese 2300 GMT 1 Aug 82

[Question] Good morning. It seems to us that the personnel changes were rather abrupt and unexpected. Were they also unexpected to you, Mr Fuwa?

[Question] Then they must have been sudden for you, too?

[Answer] Yes, they were sudden. It is customary for the JCP not to make arrangements on personnel changes prior to its congress. In the last stage of the recent congress, key members of our party leadership exchanged their views and plans on the selection of new Central Committee members. The plan to give me the new job was presented during this exchange of views.

[Question] In other words, it was quite unexpected for you, wasn't it?

[Answer] Yes, it was. [laughter]

[Question] It was 12 years ago that the dissolved leadership was first formed. What is the major reason for the personnel reshuffle? Why was it made at this particular time?

[Answer] Former Central Committee Chairman Nosaka, who is now 90 years old, expressed his earnest desire to retire from the first line and serve the party in a different manner. This was one of the direct motives for the reshuffle. From a long-term viewpoint, it may be said that the reshuffle is an expression of our party's policy, which places emphasis on stable leadership through a combination of historically tested and well-experienced veteran cadres and young cadres. However, as I said before, I did not plan to carry out the reshuffle at the recent congress. [laughter] Yet, it must be said that we have had this personnel policy in mind at all party congresses. At the recent congress, the number of Central Committee members increased to 211. In organizing the new Central Committee, we believed that it was important for veteran cadres to fully display their abilities and for young cadres in their thirties or forties to freely exhibit their fresh vigor and wisdom.

[Question] I understand that the JCP holds the policy line of independence externally and parliamentarism and peaceful revolution internally. Will there by any changes in this policy line?

[Answer] Our party observed its 60th anniversary this year. In this sense, the recent congress made a historical review with a particular emphasis and planned the future of our party based on this review. Over 20 years have passed since we adopted the policy line of independence, which you have just pointed out, and the current platform. We feel that the merits of this policy line have now been fully tested and are going to be demonstrated to the public. For example, many people have now begun to realize that the JCP's internal policy line of changing security treaty-oriented Japan into nonaligned Japan is the only way Japan should take in view of the current threat of nuclear war. The JCP's line of independence is also gaining increasing international attention. In this context, there can be no changes in the policy line of the JCP. Rather, it will further be developed. I will strive to open a new era in which our past efforts will bear fruit and be amply rewarded.

ABE INTERVIEWED ON ECONOMY, TRADE, AID

[By KYODO staff correspondent Shiro Yoneyama]

[Text] Bangkok, Aug 2, KYODO -- The current stagnant state of the Japanese economy will soon force the government to take steps to stimulate domestic demand, International Trade and Industry Minister Shintaro Abe says. Reducing the huge budgetary deficits is necessary, but leaving the domestic economy as it is will lead to an accumulation of deficit-covering bonds and an increase in taxes, he said.

Japan's economic performance was one of main topics Abe and three other Japanese Cabinet ministers discussed with their Australian counterparts during a ministerial meeting in Canberra Thursday and Friday.

Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser welcomed the Japanese delegation to Canberra by asking about the economies of Japan and the United States, ostensibly to see if general elections are desirable, Abe related.

In an exclusive interview with KYODO News Service en route to Thailand from Australia, the powerful cabinet minister talked about the Japanese economy, trade friction with North America and Western Europe, economic assistance to South Korea, the controversial Sakhalin project and Japan's strengthened ties with Australia.

The MITI head called the official target of 5.2 percent economic growth in the current fiscal year "hopeless" and warned: "The growth rate may be in the two percent level if the present economic patterns continue to prevail. "The government has to restructure its budgetary policy," Abe admitted. "But we have to rejuvenate the domestic economy. If we don't, deficit-covering bonds will further increase and there will be a tax increase."

The trade minister, who says he has spent 80 percent of his energy on resolving trade problems, is now happy to see major trade friction with Japan's trading partners considerably subsided. Abe emphasized the need for a follow-up to the Tokyo government's market-opening measures since last December to help give foreign goods more access to the Japanese market.

He cautioned that Japan-U.S. talks about American exports of beef and citrus starting in October should have no bearing whatever on Japan's exports to the United States. "The agricultural produce matter should be handled separately," Abe said.

But the cabinet minister revealed that he is also very concerned about a drop in Japan's exports, a trend partly responsible for the poor domestic economic condition.

Abe warned his Australian hosts that their efforts to revitalize the steel industry through curtailment of Japanese steel exports are detrimental to free trade. The chances that the Canberra government will take such action, he said, are "50-50."

He declined to speculate on the volume of Japan's vehicle exports to the United States next year but expressed the hope the total shipments would not decline below the 1981 and 1982 levels of 1.68 million units a year.

Abe also said that:

-- Japan has continued to press Washington through diplomatic channels to reverse its decision to continue the ban on the shipment of electric logging and other equipment needed for the Russo-Japanese natural gas and oil project off Sakhalin Island.

-- Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki asked him to decide on details of Japan's economic aid to South Korea through consultations with Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi during their Canberra visit, but Sakurauchi did not consult him about the issue in Canberra. Abe now proposes a meeting of ministers concerned to finalize the aid issue.

-- His ministry will seriously study ways to promote the development of the so-called fifth-generation computers in cooperation with U.S. computer manufacturers, probably including International Business Machines Corp. He noted that a Japan-U.S. high technology working group is working on the issue.

-- Japan cannot make a promise to purchase natural gas from Thailand despite Bangkok's proposal to sell 3 million metric tons a year.

NODONG SINMUN Article

SK020200 Pyongyang Domestic Service in Korean 0725 GMT 1 Aug 82

[NODONG SINMUN 1 August article: "The Glorious Revolutionary Armed Forces of the Chinese People" -- KCNA identifies this as an "editorial article"]

[Text] Today the fraternal Chinese people are significantly greeting the 55th anniversary of the founding of the Chinese People's Liberation Army [CPLA]. On this anniversary the Korean people and the officers and men of the Korean People's Army extend warm congratulations and militant greetings to the fraternal Chinese people and the CPLA officers and men.

On 1 August 1927, the CPLA was founded in the flames of the ardent struggle for national and class liberation. With the founding of the CPLA, the Chinese people came to have, for the first time in their history, a genuine revolutionary army, an army of people to victoriously hew out the road of revolutionary struggle.

In the past period, the CPLA played a great role in the revolutionary struggle and construction work of the Chinese people under the leadership of Comrade Mao and the Communist Party of China. Displaying matchless valiance and heroism from the first days of its founding, the CPLA contributed to the unfolding of a new history of the people on the vast land of China by winning a glorious victory in the anti-imperialist war for national liberation and the revolutionary civil war. The victory in the people's revolution and the strengthening and development of a new socialist China effected a drastic turn in the history of the Chinese people's struggle and greatly contributed to intensifying peace in Asia and the world.

Today the Chinese people, firmly united around the Communist Party of China led by Comrade Chairman Hu Yaobang, are waging a vigorous struggle to turn China into a powerful socialist country by realizing the four modernizations, while adhering to the four principles.

The Chinese people, who have achieved stability and cohesion across the country, are enacting new upsurges on all the fronts of socialist construction by positively struggling, upholding decisions adopted at the 6th plenum of the 11th Central Committee of the CCP and the 4th session of the 5th National People's Congress. The CPLA is further strengthening the leadership of the party within the army and directing much effort toward the work of ideological indoctrination and combat and political training of soldiers. The CPLA is briskly waging a campaign to change its cadres and enlisted men through indoctrination into those who safeguard the party and the government and love the people and turn them into glorious model soldiers for defending their socialist fatherland as a steel-like fortress and for constructing a socialist, spiritual civilization.

As a result of the correct implementation of the CCP's military line, the CPLA has grown to be invincible revolutionary armed forces in politics, ideology and in military technique and its might is strengthening with each passing day.

The Korean people and the officers and men of the Korean People's Army sincerely rejoice, as over their own, over all the successes attained by the Chinese people and the CPLA officers and men in building socialism and increasing the defense capacity of the country. Our people wholeheartedly wish the fraternal Chinese people greater successes in the struggle to build a modernized socialist power having a high level of democracy and civilization and to reunify the whole of their fatherland by restoring Taiwan to the fatherland.

The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught: The Korean people and the Chinese people are friendly comrades-in-arms and class brothers who have fought shoulder to shoulder against imperialist aggressors, the common enemy, for a long time. The communists and peoples of Korea and China have vigorously waged the struggle arm-in-arm against imperialists' aggression and for victory of the cause of socialism. In the course of this struggle, they have always supported and cooperated with each other, sharing joy and sorrow.

When the Chinese people were suffering under the yoke of imperialism, the Korean communists fought shoulder-to-shoulder with the Chinese people and helped them in the liberation struggle by shedding their blood. In the grim war period when the Korean people were struggling against the U.S. imperialist aggression, the Chinese people, unfolding the banner of "Let us resist the U. S. aggression and aid Korea" and "Let us safeguard the country for the sake of protecting the nation," sent their Chinese People's Volunteers to the Korean front and actively helped the Korean people with blood in the just struggle.

The Korea-China friendship is, indeed, a precious one personally provided and cultivated by the great leader of the Korean people Comrade Kim Il-song and the great leader of the Chinese people Comrade Mao Zedong and respected Comrade Zhou Enlai and an indestructable one which has withstood all trials of history. Today the friendship between the peoples and armies of Korea and China is constantly growing stronger and developing under the deep care and considerations of the great leader of the Korean people Comrade Kim Il-song and the glorious party center, and respected Comrade Chairman Hu Yaobang and respected vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping.

The Chinese people are denouncing the U.S. imperialists and the South Korean puppets for following the two-Koreas policy and committing maneuvers to provoke a new war, demanding the withdrawal of the U.S. troops from South Korea and wholeheartedly supporting our people's cause of the reunification of the fatherland. In particular, the fraternal Chinese people are declaring their firm resolution to fight with the Korean people as comrades-in-arms in defiance of any trial.

The Korea-China friendship sealed with blood is a living model of proletarian internationalism and is displaying greater might with each passing day. Our people are proud of having neighboring comrades-in-arms like the Chinese people adhering to revolutionary fidelity. Our people will exert all efforts to further consolidate and develop traditional Korea-China friendship.

Today, when a tense situation has been created due to the ever more unscrupulous aggressive and belligerent maneuvers of the U.S. imperialists, strengthening the friendship and unity between the parties, peoples and armies of Korea and China is a powerful factor in removing the danger of war and defending peace in Korea and Asia and in solidly cementing the position of socialism.

In the future, too, as in the past, the Korean people and the officers and men of the Korean People's Army will stoutly struggle for the ultimate victory of the anti-imperialist cause for independence, firmly united with the Chinese people and the CPLA and unwavering in the face of any trial.

NODONG SINMUN FLAYS U.S. ENVOY'S 27 JULY REMARKS

[NODONG SINMUN 1 August commentary: "The Sophistry of a Brazen Aggressor"]

[Text] Recently Walker, the U.S. ambassador to South Korea, issued a statement that is quite odd. In the statement, Walker babbled that the United States had hoped for the continuation of negotiations for securing a lasting peace and that he is disappointed by the lack of progress toward reduction of tensions on the Korean Peninsula.

Like other acts and remarks by the U.S. imperialist aggressors, Walker's play with words is a worthless fraudulent trick converting black into white. No one pays attention to Walker's statement, which is filled with falsehoods and deception. However, since he is trying to conceal the aggressive nature of the U.S. imperialists, talking about such words as peace and easing of tension, and to shuffle off on others responsibility for the tense situation in Korea, which has become acute, we must expose the truth of this matter. Today, the tense situation is being aggravated in Korea and peace is being continuously threatened. This is attributable to none other than the U.S. imperialists, who are bent on aggression and war against our people, blocking the reunification of Korea by militarily occupying South Korea.

As is well known, on various occasions we have put forward proposals for realizing a dialogue between Korea and the United States and for replacing the truce accord with a peace treaty. Our proposals, as the most just ones for the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea as well as the peace of the world and Asia, have enjoyed unanimous support from various foreign countries and a broad range of the world's social circles. Instead of accepting our just proposals, the U.S. imperialists, however, have answered them by creating grave threats to peace, continuing to station their aggressive troops in South Korea and to run amok in maneuvers of aggression and war.

Since the beginning of this year, the U.S. imperialists have repeatedly plotted for war either by dispatching countless war bosses to South Korea or by calling the puppets to Washington. To further complete schemes to provoke a war, the U.S. imperialists have waged large-scale combined military exercises, simulating the northern half of the republic as their target.

It is well known that the U.S. war maniacs, who have continuously reinforced the U.S. troops occupying South Korea with modern lethal weapons and equipment for operations, are accelerating the arms buildup of the puppet army by supplying a huge amount of military aid to South Korea.

Besides committing acts of espionage by frequently infiltrating SR-71 high-speed, high-altitude reconnaissance planes into our republic's airspace, the U.S. imperialists have continuously perpetrated military provocations against our republic around the areas of the military demarcation line. No one can say that such acts are aimed at securing peace and easing tensions in Korea. Because of the U.S. imperialists' maneuvers to provoke a war against the Korean people, South Korea has been converted into a powder magazine, causing the situation on the Korean Peninsula to be extremely strained. Moreover, a situation in which a war may break out at any moment has been created.

The stark facts are different from the picture painted by Walker. The aggressors, who have been running riot to prepare for a war, wantonly violating the truce agreement, are trying to shuffle off responsibility for aggravating tension to another, while leaving their acts unmentioned. This is like a thief calling another a thief.

Walker raved as if the U.S. policy were aimed at securing a lasting peace on the Korean Peninsula. He screamed about peace and the reduction of tensions, while occupying another's country and territory tens of thousands of miles far from his homeland and while bent on maneuvers of aggression and war. This is nothing but the sophistry of a brazen aggressor.

The U.S. imperialists are putting up a signboard of peace and of reduction of tension. This is not only aimed at thwarting the popularity of our proposals for peaceful reunification at home and abroad by misleading public opinion, but at realizing their wild desire for the invasion of Korea by encouraging the Chon Tu-hwan fascist clique toward aggression and division. This is fully explained by the fact that, following the scenario given by his master, Walker clamored that the Chon Tu-hwan ring's proposals for reunification are measures to promote dialogue.

Those who gave the puppets the slogan of "communist annihilation" and are rallying them to confrontation and war against us are babbling about North-South dialogue. How ridiculous this is!

As for Walker, he is the errand boy of aggression who, before assuming the position of ambassador in South Korea, had formed sordid relations with former South Korean puppets, visiting the country several times. And he is a political swindler who is an object of the South Korean people's curse and denunciation for insulting the democratic figures, the patriotic youths and students of South Korea, by calling them spoiled brats. However loudly he may belt out the melody of peace and raise his pitch, no one will listen to him. With no slanderous propaganda can Walker damage our just stand on our country's peace and peaceful reunification nor can he justify the U.S. imperialists' military occupation of South Korea and their policy of war toward Korea.

If they really want a consolidated peace in Korea, the U.S. imperialists should reply to our proposal to replace the truce agreement with a peace agreement. How the United States responds to our proposal will be their answer to whether they choose war or peace. The U.S. imperialists should deliberate on this and immediately withdraw their lethal weapons and aggressive armed forces from South Korea in accordance with the determination of the United Nations, giving up their policy of occupation and war.

OFFICIAL DENOUNCES JAPANESE TEXTBOOK REVISIONS

BK012302 Pyongyang KCNA in English 2206 GMT 1 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, Aug 2 (KCNA) -- The Japanese Ministry of Education recently carried in textbooks of the high schools and primary schools contents beautifying and whitewashing the Japanese imperialists' aggression on and colonial rule over Korea and unreasonably distorting historical facts. In denunciation of this, the director of the History Institute of the Academy of Social Science made a public talk on July 31. Follows the full text of the talk:

Recently the Japanese Ministry of Education reportedly revised textbooks of the high schools and primary schools, completely distorting the aggressive acts committed by the Japanese imperialists in the past against Korea and other countries of Asia or deleting them from the textbooks. The revised textbooks carry contents prettifying and whitewashing the Japanese imperialists' aggression on the colonial rule over Korea, insulting the just national liberation movement of the Korean people and grossly distorting historical facts.

The textbooks say that the Japanese imperialists were given the diplomatic right of Korea under the "five-point treaty of 1905" and her right of domestic administration through the conclusion of the third Japan-Korea treaty. This, however, does not tally with historical facts. The Japanese imperialists invaded Korea by force of arms and robbed our country, brutally suppressing and slaughtering a large number of Korean people. It was not under an equal and fair treaty that the diplomatic right of Korea was transferred to and taken over by Japan at that time.

As the world knows, the Japanese imperialists forced the king and other feudal rulers of the Yi dynasty at that time to conclude the "five-point treaty of 1905", thereby robbing our country of its diplomatic right.

As for the "Chongmi treaty," which they call the third Japan-Korea treaty, it was a brigandish aggressive treaty by which Hirobumi Ito, the mastermind of the Japanese imperialists' aggression on Korea, ousted the then king by force from the throne to seize the right of domestic administration. This notwithstanding, Japanese textbooks on history now say that at that time Japan took over the diplomatic right and the right of domestic administration from Korea. We cannot but denounce this as a crafty trick to embellish and veil the Japanese imperialists' aggression on Korea.

Japanese textbooks on history also distort the historical fact that the Japanese imperialists robbed the Korean peasants of land on a large scale under the name of "land survey." The textbooks describe the large-scale plunder of land by the Japanese imperialists under the name of "land survey" nerely as work for confirming the land ownership and taking over land as "government land." The "land survey" was, in essence, a brigandish plunder of land for changing the Korean peasants' land ownership to the "ownership" of the Japanese aggressors. Through the "land survey" the Japanese imperialist aggressors robbed the Korean peasants of over one million hectares of land and made part of it the ownership of the "government-general in Korea" under the name of "government land" and distributed the rest to the "Oriental Development Company" and various other colonisation companies and Japanese.

The Japanese textbooks on history also insult the just national liberation movement of the Korean people. They describe the March first movement as a "riot." The movement was a nation-wide uprising of the Korean people against the colonial rule of the Japanese imperialists and for winning national independence. The March first uprising was not an unjust "riot." Nevertheless, they describe the March first movement as a "riot". This is a wanton forgery of history for negating the just cause of the Korean nation and justifying the Japanese imperialist aggressors' brutal suppression of the movement.

Besides, the Japanese textbooks on history have not a few contents covering up the Japanese imperialists' vicious colonial ruling policy, saying that the Koreans were not forced but "encouraged" to visit the shrine, Korean youth and middle-aged were not forcibly drafted for "forced labour" but they "voluntarily" participated in it, and the Korean language was not prohibited but used together with the Japanese language as a common language.

This is a shameless distortion of historical facts that the Japanese imperialists invaded our country and imposed immeasurable misfortunes and hardships upon the Korean people in the past, an intolerable insult to our people and a crafty trick to prettify the Japanese imperialists' aggression on Korea.

The Korean people and historians cannot repress indignation at the unjust act of the Japanese authorities but resolutely protest against and denounce it. History is an objective record of the facts of the past. Accordingly, no one is allowed to arbitrarily obliterate or forge historical facts.

Today the Japanese authorities revised textbooks to teach a distorted history to the rising generation. This is aimed to cover up the Japanese imperialists' aggressive crimes in the past, imbue the youth and children with an aggressive militarist idea and thereby justify their policy of militarisation and manoeuvres for overseas aggression and make ideological preparations to realise the reinvasion of South Korea and, furthermore, the old dream of the "Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere."

The Japanese reactionaries are now revising the constitution in favour of the stepped-up militarisation of the country and drastically reinforcing the armed forces of aggression in line with the U.S. imperialists' policy of Asian aggression. Instigated by the U.S. imperialists, the Japanese militarists are strengthening their tieup with the former and the South Korean puppet clique and spurring on preparations to participate in future aggression of Korea, loudly clamouring as never before about the "Japan-U.S. security system" and the "common destiny of Japan and South Korea."

The Japanese authorities' revision of textbooks distorting history shows that their militarist aggressive nature has not changed but manifests itself in a more shameless form. This poses a grave threat to peace in Asia and the world and lays a big hurdle in the amity and friendship between the peoples of Korea and Japan.

To promote genuine amity and friendship between the peoples of Korea and Japan, the Japanese authorities must see to it that the lesson of the past history is not forgotten. The Japanese authorities must stop revising textbooks and correct them.

Now voices are ringing out ever more loudly protesting against and denouncing the Japanese authorities' revision of textbooks and demanding that they be corrected. The Japanese authorities are openly defying this just demand, saying that it is an "interference in internal affairs" and "unacceptable." but the tragic history of aggression and slaughter perpetrated by the Japanese imperialists in the past cannot be repeated. If the Japanese authorities want to atone for their past mistakes and crimes and do not want to follow the road again, they must look straight at the reality and act with discretion.

DEATH SENTENCE DEMANDED FOR PUSAN ARSONISTS

The Pusan District prosecution, in a final hearing of 16 defendants accused in connection with the fatal fire, demanded that Kim Hyon-chang, 32, and Mun Pu-sik, 23, the alleged masterminds in the case, be sentenced to death for violation of the national security law and other charges. The prosecution also demanded life imprisonment for five other defendants, all college students, on the same charges. They are Kim Un-suk, 23, Yi Mi-ok, 20, Choe In-sun, 20, Kim Chi-hui, 21, and Yu Sung-yol, 21.

Ten years in prison was asked for Pak Won-sik, 19, and Choe Chong-on, 19, students at a theological college for scattering anti-government and anti-American leaflets after the fire which killed one student and injured two others.

Five years in prison and a five year suspension of civil rights was demanded for Catholic Father Choe Ki-sik, 39, for concealing the key suspects in his Catholic church in Wonju. Six others involved in the arson face imprisonment ranging from three to seven years.

The prosecution stated during the trial that the defendants threatened the national security by sympathizing with North Korea's ideological line and attempted to create dissension between the United States and Korea. The prosecution also contended that Father Choe patronized the suspects by providing shelter for them to discuss anti-government precepts through informal study groups.

The defense counsel told the court that key suspect Kim was not directly involved in the Pusan arson although he played a role in the May 1980 Kwangju riot. The defense lawyers maintained that the informal study group discussed anti-government perceptions but did not praise communism.

The sentencing session is scheduled for August 11 in the same court.

CHON PROPOSES CREATION OF PACIFIC SUMMIT

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 2 (YONHAP) -- In a major diplomatic initiative aimed at "all countries in the Pacific region," President Chon Tu-hwan has formally proposed the creation of a regular summit conference of Pacific countries to usher in "a great Pacific era of peace and prosperity."

Speaking at a news conference at the presidential retreat at the southern naval port city of Chinhae over the weekend, the South Korean leader said the shortest way to eliminating barriers and impediments to the realization of the great Pacific era would be to set up a regular summit for leaders of Pacific countries to address matters of common concern. Chon said the Pacific summit would be open "in principle" to all countries in the region, which diplomatic observers said could include not only Japan and the United States but mainland China, the Soviet Union and North Korea.

The chief executive said the summit would seek to tap the potential for development of Pacific countries and step up cooperation and exchanges in all areas among the member nations based on the spirit of reciprocity, equality, and mutual respect for sovereignty and independence, and noninterference in domestic affairs. Chon said the Pacific summit he envisages would set an example in dealing with the North-South problem by increasing cooperation between industrialized and developing countries in the region, and among developing countries themselves.

"It is beyond question that summit diplomacy is the most effective way to resolve the most difficult and urgent international issues," Chon said. "Hegemony by any specific nation or nations must not be tolerated. It is also my belief that the proposed body must not be politicized nor turned into a bloc," Chon said.

"I believe that the most expeditious way to triumph over various constraints, obstacles and challenges attendant upon the evolution of a Pacific era will be through an institutionalized, periodic summit conference of Pacific-basin nations to discuss matters of mutual interest and plans for cooperation," the president said.

"The basic agenda of the body should cover the questions of multi-faceted development of the limitless potential for progress in the region, expansion of trade within the region, strengthening of economic and technical cooperation, manpower development, enlargement and improvement of transportation and communications networks, and promotion of educational and cultural exchanges."

Saying he would have to obtain the agreement of the foreign leaders involved to translate his idea into a reality, Chon stressed he would do so, based on the ties of friendship he cemented during his visits to ASEAN countries last year.

In May, Chon proposed to Australian Prime Minsiter Malcolm Fraser the convening of a summit meeting of 11 Pacific countries -- South Korea, Japan, Australia, Canada, the United States, New Zealand and the five ASEAN nations. Chon's proposal met with favorable reaction on the part of the visiting Australian leader, and the idea of an expanded Pacific summit, which diplomatic observers said was aimed at 37 countries in the Pacific region, is considered a substantiation of that proposal.

CHON CITES 'DISSENSION' IN NORTH KOREA

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 2 (YONHAP) -- South Korean President Chon Tu-hwan has said North Korea faces criticism from its fellow communist countries as well as internal complaints and opposition in its attempt for a communist dynasty.

In a news conference over the weekend, Chon said reports of dissension in the North are continuously coming from the country. Chon said domestic unrest in North Korea caused by the attempt for a dynasty is one of the biggest reasons for its refusal to respond to peace efforts by the South.

Chon, scheduled to visit four African nations and Canada in the latter half of August, said the African nations are providing strong support to Korea's nonaligned diplomacy and diplomatic efforts for peaceful unification by playing vital roles in international politics. Furthermore, those countries could be partners in mutual cooperation for economic development because they have great undeveloped potential. The president said he will do his utmost to further expand the current friendly relations with those countries.

Regarding the current economic situation, Chon said the economy has shown signs of recovery with the help of stabilized prices and an improved balance of trade, laying the foundation for long-standing growth. Chon predicted the gross national product will reach 100 billion dollars in five to six years.

The president also made the following points:

-- The recent curb money market scandal: As was revealed in the investigation and trial, the government or the government party was not involved in the case.

The current government will put an end to such irregularities, and it does not want to nor is it allowed to have such a political fund in order to extend its tenure in power.

-- The press: In connection with national development, the influence and social function of the press is highly valued. Without the development of a sound and truthful press, the realization of democracy, national reconciliation and social justice is impossible, he said. He added that the press and the government should be creative partners pursuing the same goal.

ASSASSINATION PLOT AGAINST KIM CHONG-IL ALLEGED

[Text] (Correspondent Sin Song-Sun from Tokyo) An attempt in North Korea to eliminate Kim Chong-il by poisoning him was made by Kim Song-ae -- Kim Il-song's second wife -- and her supporters in late June, and becuase of this incident there is veiled enmity going on between the Kim Chong-il faction and the Kim Song-ae faction, TONGIL ILBO reported on 31 July.

Reporting this incident, the newspaper, quoting a source well versed in North Korean affairs, said that in late May, too, sons of party and military leaders conspired in a plot to eliminate Kim Chong-il, which was become known as the "Ongnyugwan incident."

The newspaper reported that the poisoning plot, which had been planned while Kim Chong-il was on a trip to a rural area, was uncovered and that, escaping at a critical moment, Kim Chong-il began to thorougly investigate the plot. Finding that this was a plot by the Kim Song-ae faction, Kim Chong-il has increased the purge of members of the Kim Song-ae faction.

Because of this incident, an atmosphere of terror has been created throughout North Korea and Kim Il-song is trying to reconcile the two factions through Yim Chun-chu, general secretary of the Central People's Committee, and Ho Cong-suk, secretary of the party, the newspaper reported. A son of Han Tok-su, chairman of the Chongnyon, was involved in this incident and thorough investigations are going on within the Chongnyon organizations to ferret out those involved in the incident, the newspaper reported.

OFFICIALS SCORE JAPANESE AMBASSADOR'S REMARKS

SK020011 Seoul KYONGHYANG SINMUN in Korean 30 Jul 82 p 2

[Text] In connection with Japanese Ambassador to Korea Maeda's remarks in Cheju that it would not be possible for Korea and Japan to reach agreement on the total amount of economic aid, the prevailing view in the government and ruling party is that Maeda himself must clarify his intentions.

On 30 July, a government source said: It is hard to understand why Ambassador Maeda, who knows very well the whole course of the Korea-Japan economic talks, should say such things at a time when public sentiment on Japan is at its worst because of the distortation of historical facts in Japan's textbooks. To clarify why he said such a thing, it is desirable that he make the explanation himself.

Ha Sun-pong, member of the Democratic Justice Party [DJP], was indignant over Maeda's remarks and said: We do not know why Ambassador Maeda, who best knows the Korean situation and who is expected to do his best to redefine the relations between Korea and Japan, should pour cold water on what was mutually agreed by the governments of the two countires as a settlement on the total amount. Djp Congressmen Choe Nak-chol denounced Ambassador Maeda: He exposed the two-faced characteristic, an inherent characteristic of Japan.

Ho Kyong-ku, member of the Democratic Korea Party, also said: Even before he came to Korea as Japanese ambassador, he had already made a slip of the tongue about the Korean people's expectations of the U.S. troops stationed in Korea and the present Korean Government. His remarks this time cannot but be interpreted as another slip of tongue. The Korea National Party's Yi Man-sop said: We must hold a Foreign Affairs Committee meeting at the National Assembly to find out what prompted Ambassador Maeda to say such a thing.

[Text] Toshio Koto, minister of the Japanese Embassy in Seoul, said yesterday that Japan remains unchanged in its attitude toward negotiations now under way between Seoul and Tokyo over Korea's public loan request.

Explaining the controversial remark made by Japanese Amb. Toshikazu Maeda last Wednesday to Choe Tong-chin, director general of the Asian Affairs Bureau of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Koto implied that there is no change in the total amount of $4 billion in loans. Korea and Japan have agreed on the amount of $4 billion, but Maeda said in Cheju Island last Wednesday that it is insignificant to determine the total amount. Koto said that Maeda must have triggered the misunderstanding while explaining the Japanese budgetary system.

EDUCATION MINISTER VIEWS JAPANESE TEXTBOOK ISSUE

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 2 (YONHAP) -- South Korean Education Minister Yi Kyu-ho Monday said that South Korean concern about the reported erroneous historical descriptions in Japanese textbooks with regard to Korea-Japan relations is not for "reminiscent resentment" but for the maintenance of friendly relations between the two countries in the days to come. He said that if any country tries to gloss over or beautify its past crimes, it will destroy the meaning of history.

He made the remarks at the opening ceremony in Seoul of the Sixth International Conference of Academic Societies on Korean Affairs in the European region. Yi went on to say that at a time when the mutual dependence of nations is increasing due to the development of transportation and communications, it is "very reckless" for a country to attempt to increase its own national interests at the cost of international concerns and cooperation. "Such an attempt may impair the common efforts and responsibility of mankind for peace," he said. The history of a country contains not only errors and mistakes about its own people and crimes to a neighboring people, but also contributions to its development and to the development of mankind. This is why "we try to derive lessons from history," Yi said.

The four-day Seoul conference is being attended by some 100 scholars from 12 European countries, who specialize in the study of Korea.

Japanese Envoy Threatened

SK010729 Seoul THE KOREA TIMES in English 1 Aug 82 p 8

[Excerpt] Protests over the history distortions in the Japanese textbooks continued from place to place yesterday, denouncing Japan for its unabashed attitude and reckless remarks by some Cabinet members.

The Japanese Embassy in Chunghak-dong, central Seoul, received a telephone call threatening the life of Japanese Ambassador to Korea Toshikazu Maeda at 7:50 p.m. Friday. On receiving the report, the police immediately beefed up security and began to restrict traffic around the embassy. According to embassy officials, a man in his fifties called and threatened, saying, "Ambassador Maeda is an enemy of Korea. I will kill him. The Japanese are all thieves. All go home!" Earlier at 3:30 p.m., the embassy received a threatening call from a man in his thirties that he would blow it up, officials said.

KAMPUCHEA CALLS CGDK 'DESPERATE FAILURE'

BK010819 Phnom Penh SPK in French 1433 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 31 Jul (SPK) -- The formation of the so-called "Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea," born prematurely at the initiative of Washington and Beijing, reveals their last chance and proves their desperate failure, noted the paper KAMPUCHEA in its commentary.

Sihanouk and Son Sann threw their masks by finally agreeing to embrace the cause of the rotten corpse of "Democratic Kampuchea." They became followers of Pol Pot in an association in which Pol Pot followers hold almost all military, diplomatic, financial and economic power.

The delay of the de facto organization of this government after the signing in Kuala Kumpur is explained by the struggle for power between the three Khmer reactionaries. The Pol Pot group holds the (?key posts), while Sihanouk, who has spent his whole life trying to assuage his ambition for power, was offered the post of president as an honarary title.

Pol Pot is still commander in chief -- the strongest (?position) -- although he is not on the list. It is a maneuver aimed at duping public opinion to reconstitute the bloody face of "Democratic Kampuchea" and at maintaining its unsteady seat at the United Nations. Sihanouk and Son Sann, attracted by a mirage of power, have taken shelter under the umbrella of the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan clique whose name Beijing and Washington are doing their best to uphold, emphasized the paper.

SPK REFUTES BANGKOK POST REPORT ON BORDER FIGHTING

[Text] Phnom Penh, 29 Jul (SPK) -- The Thai newspaper BANGKOK POST on 15 July 1982 carried a mendacious report according to which, during the 10 July meeting in Phnom Penh honoring the success of the sixth foreign ministers conference of the Indochinese countries, the Kampuchean minister of foreign affairs declared that "the fighting 25 months ago between Thai and Vietnamese forces at the frontier of Kampuchea and Thailand was initiated by the communist side" and that "the Kampuchean side was responsible for that fighting."

The Press Agency of Kampuchea, SPK, is authorized to categorically refute this slanderous report by the BANGKOK POST.

The PRK has always pursued a policy of respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Thailand and has done its best to live on good terms with its neighbor.

It is Thailand which -- putting itself at the service of Beijing's expansionist policy -- has for more than 3 years committed many violations against the sovereignty of the PRK by shelling its territory, sending planes and ships to violate its airspace and territorial waters and helping the Pol Pot terrorists and other reactionary Khmers to enter Kampuchea to sabotage the peaceful life which has prevailed there since the toppling of the genocidal regime.

VODK SCORES SRV 'INCREASING' SETTLEMENT IN TAKEO

BK310948 (Clandestine) Voice of Democratic Kampuchea in Cambodian to Kampuchea 2330 GMT 30 Jul 82

[Commentary: "The Vietnamese Enemy Is Sending Vietnamese Nationals To Settle in Kampuchean Territory in Takeo Province"]

[Text] During this July, the Vietnamese enemy has increasingly dispatched Vietnamese nationals to settle in Anlung Peam, Kompong Ampil and (Kompong Yon) of Kaoh Andet District and in Phnum Angkor Borei of Prey Kabbas District in Takeo Province.

It has also sent many other Vietnamese nationals to settle in various other districts of Takeo Province.

In July, the Vietnamese Le Duan aggressors have continued to ballyhoo about their partial troop withdrawal from Kampuchea and their international conference proposal, and Nguyen Co Thach is touring Southeast Asia in order to launch his deceitful diplomacy on so-called peace, friendship and cooperation proposals. But in fact, the Vietnamese enemy has not withdrawn even a single soldier from Kampuchea nor is it halting its control even slightly in Kampuchea. On the contrary, it has sent thousands and even tens of thousands of its troops from Vietnam to be posted at various significant strategic battlefields, particularly in the western part of Kampuchea adjacent to the Thai border. At the same time, the Vietnamese enemy has intensified the recruitment of the Kampuchean youth and people living in the zone that it is controlling temporarily and has sent them to fight and die in the place of Vietnamese. In the sectors along the Kampuchean-Vietnamese border, such as Takeo Province, southern Kandal Province, Prey Veng Province and Svay Rieng Province, the Vietnamese have sent and continue to busily send many Vietnamese nationals to settle in our Kampuchean territory. They have plundered and confiscated the villages, houses, farms and croplands from our people, who are the owners, and have given them to the Vietnamese nationals. They have driven our Kampuchean people out of their land and sent them to live in the Vietnamese concentration camps where they live in the open air, without shelter, crops, water or land to till. This is a policy to exterminate the Kampuchean race that the Vietnamese Hanoi authorities are carrying out actively in Kampuchea.

These concrete events attest clearly that Vietnam is not preparing to withdraw from Kampuchea nor desirious of peace, friendship and cooperation with the Southeast Asian countries. On the contrary, Vietnam is increasing its strength and tightening its position in Kampuchea in an attempt to swallow up Kampuchea and make a southward drive. Vietnam's deceitful propaganda as well as its stick and carrot diplomacy launched in Southeast Asia are only aimed at preventing those in Southeast Asia from seeing its reinforcement of troops to strengthen its position in Kampuchea in preparation for its southward drive, and at making the Southeast Asian countries and other peace and justice-loving countries in the world which oppose the Vietnamese aggression in Kampuchea relax their vigilance and attention toward the realities in Kampuchea and the serious and concrete threats posed in this region by Vietnam and the Soviet Union.

VODK SCORES THACH STATEMENTS ON KAMPUCHEA

BK311150 (Clandestine) Voice of Democratic Kampuchea in Cambodian to Kampuchea 2330 GMT 30 Jul 82

[Summary] "When he arrived in Bangkok as well as in Singapore, Nguyen Co Thach loudly declared that he sought peace and friendship and did not wish to quarrel with anyone.

"Everybody knows that Nguyen Co Thach is a fox and the chief liar of the Le Duan Vietnamese enemy aggressors, expansionists, swallowers of territory and exterminators of the Kampuchean race. The Vietnamese aggressors are the worst criminals and barbarous murderers and their mouths and hands are soiled with the fresh blood of millions of Kampuchean people. They are the destroyers of peace and stability in Southeast Asia. They prefer the law of the jungle and oppose international law, the UN Charter principle and the UN General Assemblies' resolutions.

"Now the Le Duan Vietnamese enemy and Nguyen Co Thach pretend to seek peace and friendship. This is ridiculous and has made us angry. It is an affront to the conscience of all of mankind and to the souls of millions of Kampuchean, Lao, Thai and Vietnamese peoples who were mistreated and tragically massacred by the Vietnamese authorities during the past few years."

The Southeast Asian peoples and the entire world have already realized the Vietnamese enemy and Nguyen Co Thach's tricks regarding peace and friendship. These maneuvers have been waged with an attempt to hide their real dirty activities and desires. The Le Duan Vietnamese enemy' concrete acts are completely contrary to what they said about peace and friendship.

"On the Kampuchean battlefield of their war of aggression, the Le Duan Vietnamese enemies are stubborn and are continuing their barbarous acts of aggression aimed at committing genocide against the Kampuchean race. They arrogantly oppose world opinion and the UN General Assemblies' resolutions on the Kampuchean problem.

"Since the beginning of this rainy season, the Le Duan Vietnamese enemies have sent more reinforcements from Vietnam to Kampuchea. They are preparing to increase their military operations in Kampuchea and to expand them, particularly to the Kampuchean-Thai border.

"With Thailand, the Vietnamese enemy aggressors have continued to wage their violations of Thai territory which has made the situation more tense with every passing day. Concurrently, the Vietnamese have sent hundreds of spies to carry on destructive subversion in Thailand. The Le Duan Vietnamese enemy's propaganda machine in Hanoi and in Phnom Penh has increased its charges and threats against Thailand and other ASEAN countries. At the same time, Nguyen Co Thach, who repeats the words peace and friendship, barbarously threatened the ASEAN countries. When he arrived in Singapore for the beginning of his visit to ASEAN countries, he threatened these countries, warning them to beware of the Vietnamese setting up guerrillas in ASEAN countries in retaliation. He also said that Vietnam's patience is limited and it has the right to attack Thailand and ASEAN countries in self-defense and that Vietnam is prepared to struggle against the ASEAN countries for 5-20 years or longer.

"By examining their concrete activities, it is clear that the Le Duan Vietnamaese enemies are not seeking peace and friendship with countries in the Southeast Asian region. They do not have the slightest good will to be friendly or to live peacefully with Southeast Asian countries. Nguyen Co Thach says sweet words to propose and promise various issues in an attempt to trick everybody when the Vietnamese have many difficulties."

The Vietnamese diplomatic history has been marked with many tricky maneuvers in 1972, 1978 and 1980. The Southeast Asian peoples and countries know very well the Vietnamese hypocrisy and they do not let themselves be duped by them.

If the Vietnamese really want to be friendly with other Southeast Asian countries and to restore peace and security in this region, they have to respect and implement the UN General Assemblies' resolutions and the declaration of the International Conference on Kampuchea.

VIENTIANE SCORES U.S., PRC ROLE IN KHMER COALITION

[Feature article: "An Uncremated Corpse Remains an Uncremated Corpse"]

[Text] Under Chinese and U.S. guidance, with ASEAN cooperation and with the sympathy of certain countries, on 21 June 1982 three exiled Khmer reactionary groups went to Kuala Lumpur to prepare for the signing of the so-called official document on the formation of a coalition government. Their basic purpose in signing this document is to oppose Vietnam and protect Democratic Kampuchea. This is a farce which has surprised no one. It is in line with the play Beijing has been performing since early last year. Actually, this show was scheduled to be performed sometime earlier. The delay in its performance was caused by the continued scrambling among the groups of lackeys who, with a feeling of resentment, refused to perform the duty which was assigned by their masters.

The start of the UN General Assembly session and of the Baghdad nonaligned summit conference is approaching daily. An uneasy feeling has been rising among the ruling circles because they feel that they may be unable to retain blindly the seat of the genocidal regime in the United Nations. This was why Beijing and Washington hurriedly forced their lackey groups to meet to discuss the formation of the so-called coalition government.

All those who have followed the situation can clearly understand that it is all a scheme of China and the United Sttes which have made up the frightful face of the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan genocidal regime in hopes of deceiving public opinion and helping the regime continue to retain the Kampuchea seat in the United Nations and in other international organizations. Beijing and Washington have used this genocidal group as a tool to continue to interfere openly in the internal affairs of Kampuchea. It is disgusting to see that those who have shaped the Kampuchean coalition government are happy with this product which they regard as the representative of the Kampuchean nation. To the wide public opinion in the world, the coalition government is merely an uncremated corpse of the Beijing big-nation expansionists and hegemonists and the U.S. imperialists. The formation of this coalition government is clear proof of the rude intervention of the big-nation expansionists and hegemonists and the imperialists which have reached into another country and forced the people in that country to earn a living in a way under their control.

It is regrettable that the ASEAN countries have participated as reserve actors in the performance of the aforementioned play. The ASEAN member countries should have thought again so as to understand whether or not Beijing is implementing a dangerous plan of making use of Maoist forces to oppose the governments of various countries in the region. Today, Beijing is doing this against Kampuchea. Who knows how it will use this same trick against the various Southeast Asian countries tomorrow? It is not necessary for the ASEAN countries to wait until tomorrow since they should have understood that they are now being used by China to oppose the Indochinese countries and to create a tense situation in this region so that Beijing can fish in troubled waters.

By setting up a government of uncremated corpses as mentioned above, the expansionists and the imperialists cannot hide the true situation in Kampuchea from public opinion. Over the past 3 years or so, the Kampuchean people, thanks to the leadership of the people's revolutionary party, have achieved successes in all fields. The Fourth KPRP Congress and the first national elections, which were organized in a genuinely free and democratic manner, concluded with glorious success last year. The situation in Kampuchea has vigorously returned to normal.

The Kampuchean people are confident in and have aligned themselves with the new system. The facts of the past 3 years or so have shown the firm advance of the Kampuchean revolution. They have also shown the systematic crushing of the dark schemes of various powers opposing the Kampuchean revolution.

No power can reverse the situation in Kampuchea. No matter how it is clothed or what make-up is put on it, an uncremated corpse remains an uncremated corpse. The carriage and three horses built by Beijing and Washington will only carry you to defeat. And you must be careful, the three horses will kick each other and will cause the carriage to overturn. This is the law of history in Kampuchea. The fact that cannot be hidden by anything or distorted by anyone is that the Kampuchean people have marched toward a new system along a path that they have selected by themselves. The Kampuchean people will not allow anyone else to decide their destiny. The Kampuchean seat in the United Nations and in all other international conferences must be given to the People's Republic of Kampuchea.

SRV'S THACH HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE 30 JULY

[Text] Vietnam will "keep the door wide open" for the Soviet Union to have bases in its territory if there is danger to itself, Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach told a press conference yesterday. He was replaying to a question on whether the Russians had been allowed to set up military bases at Danang and Cam Ranh Bay in Vietnam and Kompong Som in Kampuchea. He said there are no such bases in Vietnam at present. As for Kompong Som, the question should be addressed to the Kampuchean Government.

Reiterating that China constitutes athreat to Indochina as long as Pol Pot is in Kampuchea, Thach said that he does not wish the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) and Indochina to join forces against China. He insisted on a non-aggression pact with China. While agreeing with the concern of Thailand and ASEAN over the presence of Vietnamese forces in Kampuchea near the Thai border, he called upon the ASEAN countries to understand Vietnam's concern over the "Chinese threat."

Maintaining the conciliatory attitude he displayed at his talks with Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila and National Security Council Secretary-General Prasong Sunsiri yesterday, Thach refused to answer questions about any acts of "hostilities" by ASEAN. He issued an implied threat, however, when he said, "We have the right to take whatever measures we think necessary for our self-defence."

Concerning threats against ASEAN attributed to him, he said that the press had been "emotional" in the reports and that "subversion" was their own interpretation -- "not ours" -- of several scenarios he had described to Singapore Foreign Minister Dhanabalan. The five scenarios he considered possible were first, the current instability; second, peace throughout the area; third, a major war between China and Indochina; fourth, a separate peace between ASEAN and Indochina while China continued to play the role of an aggressor; and fifth, continued tension between ASEAN and Indochina but with China and Indochina settling their differences.

Thach said he favoured overall peace. He came to Thailand to "break the ice for a very favourable atmosphere for peace." Both Foreign Minister Sitthi and himself "are satisfied." He said, "I told him that one-hand clapping would have no sound. Everything must begin with agreement on both sides."

The concern of Thailand and ASEAN, he said, "is total withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea. We agree. But Thailand and ASEAN must meet our concern, which is the Chinese threat."

Another concern of ASEAN is "neutralisation" of Kampuchea. "Our concern is that all of Southeast Asia should be neutralised," he said. He made special reference to the ASEAN concept of a "zone of peace, freedom and neutrality."

He said that the international conference on Southeast Asia proposed by the Indochinese foreign ministers "must be up for discussion." "If the conference could be held it would mean two-hand clapping." Participants could be discussed and "we must agree on the site," Thach said. He then said that he had forgotten to tell Air Chief Marshal Sitthi (whom he referred to as "my brother") that there must be an agreement also on the chairman.

He reported that there was an agreement on principles on how to handle problems. He stressed that "as long as Pol Pot is there, I declare there will be no withdrawal." He reported that ACM Sitthi regarded the "partial withdrawal" as a "good sign." He said it has been completed but declined to divulge details because it could be useful to the enemy.

Asked about Vietnamese intentions concerning Thailand's northeastern provinces, Thach said, "In 1981 the Laotian Government and the Khmer Government had pledged in a joint communique in Vientiane that they will respect the border. It was a unilateral declaration."

He called the recently formed coalition of Democratic Kampuchea an "illusion." He said, "Prince Sihanouk and Son Sann don't head the coalition."

He reported that he told Malaysian Foreign Minister Ghazali Shafie that any hope of dropping Pol Pot later was an "illusion."

After the press conference, Thach met Masabe Sarre, chairman of the International Committee on Kampuchea (ICK) Ad Hoc Committee, in his capacity as Senegalese ambassador to the United Nations. He referred to the "ICK" as "KIC or what it is, I don't know."

Later, in a final press statement at Don Muang airport before his departure for Hanoi, Thach said that a significant number of Vietnamese troops had already been withdrawn from Kampuchea. but he gave no specific figures. On the threat of hot pursuit into Thai territory, he said: "We have the right of self-defence."

The Vietnamese foreign minister said that since Vietnam had agreed to withdraw from the Thai-Kampuchean border, he would like the Khmer resistance force to be moved an equal distance from the border.

Meets ICK Official

BK301154 Bangkok Voice of Free Asia in English 1100 GMT 30 Jul 82

[Text] It has been revealed that the visiting chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea met with Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach at the Vietnamese Embassy in Bangkok this morning. The meeting marked a new turn of events signifying a change of stance on Hanoi's previously rigid stand toward the International Conference on Kampuchea.

Chairman Sarre met Foreign Minister Thach in his capacity as Senegal's ambassador to the United Nations. The head of the seven-member delegation, which is conducting a fact-finding mission on the Kampuchean situation, said he also met a representative of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front at the Erawan Hotel. He said it would be useful to contact all the parties concerend on the Kampuchean issue.

Sarre, who along with his team will report to the UN General Assembly on the new elements on the Kampuchean situation, described the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea as a positive move. Commenting on the talks between Foreign Minister of Thailand Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila and Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach, the special envoy said the fact that both sides were interested in such a high level talk to solve the problem should be taken into account in the assessment of the current situation. Referring to the Kampuchean situation, Sarre said he was optimistic that a solution could be found for the Kampuchean problem since problems created by men could be solved by men.

After Thailand, the factfinding UN mission will visit Austria, Sweden, China, Japan and the United States.

Thach on Lao Resistance

[Text] Bangkok, July 30 (AFP) -- Vietnam and its Indochinese allies will "react appropriately" if Laotian rightists go ahead with a plan to create an anti-Vietnamese coalition government in Laos, Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach said here today.

Mr. Thach, in an aside after a news conference, implied Vietnam would hold Thailand responsible if such a challenge emerged to the Pathet Lao government in Vientiane. "I think if there's no backing from some countries, they could not do that," he said, referring to Bangkok-based former Lao Prime Minister Phoumi Nosavon, an exile who bared the coalition plan in an interview with AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE on Monday. Mr. Thach refused to be drawn on whether the Indochinese states would try to smash the planned alliance on the ground but said, "we must have the right to self-defense."

In the interview, Gen. Phoumi had said he planned to establish a broad-based "union government of national liberation" on a nub of Lao territory close to the border with Thailand and Khmer Rouge-controlled areas of Cambodia in "a matter of weeks."

BANGKOK POST Views Visit

[Editorial: "Hanoi's Man for All Seasons"]

[Text] Vietnam's foreign minister has gone back to Hanoi, where he will undoubtedly be assessing his two-week, four-country area tour with great attention. In Bangkok, senior officials of the member countries of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) are already doing the same. As with all of Nguyen Co Thach's travels, his visits to Singapore, Burma, Malaysia and Thailand had their plusses and minuses for both sides.

One is always tempted to write of Thach, not that he is silver-haired but that he is silver-tongued. During the past 30 months that he has been Hanoi's foreign minister, he has stamped the job with his own style. That he is a skilled diplomat is clear, as he talks, jokes, grows serious, laughs. Only in Singapore, where government officials went on the attack and stayed there during the entire Thach visit, did the Hanoi envoy fail to win a few points.

We learned little from Thach that we did not already know. Here in Thailand, he repeated that Vietnam would like to get all its troops out of Kampuchea, but in the Hanoi view, it simply isn't possible. The mysterious "China threat" still exists, and in fact may be growing to the point where "independent" Vietnam is considering giving formal military bases to the Soviet Union.

He came to Bangkok not so much in a spirit of compromise as in a spirit of reducing tensions. He failed to offer a concession on the Kampuchean question, but listened to Thailand's viewpoint of the situation. His threat, that Vietnam might have to employ an undefined "right of self-defence" in the future, was uttered with the disarming smile he employs so much. He refused to discuss in public the Hanoi charges that Thailand had participated in efforts to overthrow his government, saying that to do so "could not help the present atmosphere" between the two nations. And there appears little doubt that the atmosphere between Thailand and Vietnam improved during Thach's visit. Whether it will remain that way remains to be seen. The major problems continue, just as if Thach had never visited here. The Thai-Kampuchea border remains, in effect, a Thai-Vietnam border. The puppet Heng Samrin regime continues to sit in Phnom Penh.

Our government did the right thing to allow Thach to come here on an unofficial visit, and to hear what he had to say. Talking never really hurt anyone, and there is no way of knowing just when the big breakthrough might come. That Thach provided no hope for such a breakthrough was predictable. But he did, for once, agree that Thailand's view, as well as that of Hanoi, must be seriously considered when Kampuchea is mentioned. That, and the generally amiable atmosphere, were the main gains of the visit. They're not all that much, of course, but in the present tense situation, any gain at all is worthwhile achieving.

ASEAN OFFICIALS HOLD MEETING ON DK SEAT IN UN

BK301459 Bangkok Voice of Free Asia in English 1100 30 Jul 82

It is also expected that the five ASEAN foreign ministers will compare notes on their separate talks with Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach during his tour of the four noncommunist countries.

According to a spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Mr Chet Sutcharitkun, a meeting of the ASEAN foreign ministers is tentatively scheduled to be held in August.

Observers said that the votes for Democratic Kampuchea's credentials at the UN General Assembly could slightly drop as a result of some external factors. However, they maintained that Democratic Kampuchea is still likely to retain its seat. The Kampuchean coalition government was formally formed early this month with Prince Norodom Sihanouk as its president.

Analyze Thach Tour

[Text] Senior officials of ASEAN agreed at the end of their two-day meeting in Bangkok yesterday that Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach's tour of Southeast Asia had indicated no significant changes in Hanoi's attitude toward the Kampuchean conflict.

Undersecretary of State for Foreign Affairs M.R. Kasem S. Kasemsri said both ASEAN and Vietnam showed they still stood firm by their policy over the Kampuchean problem. "ASEAN sees nothing new (in Thach's tour) but we see some encouraging signs for the future," he told reporters at the end of the meeting.

M.R. Kasem said the senior ASEAN officials compared notes on their analyses of Thach's talks with ASEAN foreign ministers during their meeting.

Thach ended his swing through three ASEAN countries and Burma with a meeting with Thai authorities on Thursday. He told reporters during a press conference on Friday that his "friendly talks" with Thai officials had created a good atmosphere for further discussions to find a peaceful solution to the Kampuchean conflict. Mr M.R. Kasem said the senior ASEAN officials detected no significant changes in his stand. "What did change was only the atmosphere of the talks," he added.

The senior officials, he said, will forward their joint analysis on the latest development to a meeting of the ASEAN foreign ministers which is scheduled to take place in Bangkok on August 7.

Apart from evaluating the result of Thach's visit to ASEAN, the senior officials also discussed a campaign to lobby for support by ASEAN and the newly-formed Kampuchean coalition to retain the UN seat of Democratic Kampuchea.

LAO TROOPS FIRE ON THAI FISHING BOAT ON MEKONG

BK310649 Bangkok NATION REVIEW in English 31 Jul 82 p 6

[Text] Chiang Rai -- Two Thai people were injured, one of them seriously, when Laotian soldiers fired on a Thai fishing boat in the Mekong River Thursday night, police reported yesterday.

They said three Thais were fishing in the river near Ban Huai Luk of Chiang Khong District, about 140 kms from the provincial seat at about 8 pm when they were attacked by Laotian soldiers from the other side.

It was not immediately clear why the Laotian soldiers fired on the fishing boat which was on the Thai side of the river.

Two of the people on board were injured. One of them, Run Inthawong, was reported to be in critical condition, the police said.

Laotian soldiers last week also fired at residents along the Mekong River in Khemarat District of Ubon Ratchathani. Governor Bunchuai Sisarakham said two houses were hit by the fire but nobody was reported injured.

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, July 29 -- Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach held talks with the Malaysian Trade and Industry Minister Tengku Ahmad Rithauddeen in Kuala Lumpur on Tuesday. [27 July]

The two informed each other of economic development in their respective countries, and discussed measures to promote trade relations, which they said could be expanded.

A high-ranking official of the Malaysian Trade and Industry Ministry later told newsmen that his government did not prevent Malaysian businessmen from doing business with Vietnam. He said that last year his country had imported from Vietnam sea products worth 480,000 Malaysian dollars while selling to Vietnam machine parts worth 400,000 Malaysian dollars.

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, July 30 -- Vietnam really wants friendly relations with ASEAN, said Malaysian Foreign Minister Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie at a press conference in Kuala Lumpur yesterday on the Vietnamese foreign minister's recent visit to Malaysia.

The Malaysian foreign minister said that results of the visit were good. Talks between the two sides, he said, were frank, friendly, very useful and extremely effective, and the two sides better understood each others' stand and concerns.

Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie said that Southeast Asian countries had experience of China's subversive activities and that Malaysia and Vietnam agreed to continue dialogue in the interests of peace and stability in the region. He stressed that Malaysia's principle was to refrain from verbal attacks on other countries, and this is also the line of Vietnam, he noted.

Visits Thailand 29 July

[Excerpt]. During his tour of some Southeast Asian countries on 29 July 1982 Minister Nguyen Co Thach stopped over in Bangkok and held talks with Minister Sitthi Sawetsila on issues of concern to both sides.

Minister Nguyen Co Thach asked Minister Sitthi to convey the greetings of State Council Chairman Truong Chinh and Premier Pham Van Dong to his majesty the king and Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon. Minister Sitthi also conveyed Thai leaders' wishes for health to the Vietnamese leaders.

During the talks, both sides agreed that Vietnam and Thailand share the common interests of peace and stability in Southeast Asia and decided to expand dialogue between the two countries to resolve differences and to cooperate with other regional countries in turning Southeast Asia into a zone of peace and stability.

Both sides are very pleased with the results of the talks. Minister Sitthi has accepted to visit Vietnam. The talks took place in an atmosphere of frankness, friendship and mutual understanding.

Attending the talks on the Thai side were Deputy Foreign Minister Arun Phanuphong, General Secretary of the Thai National Security Council Prasong Sunsiri and many high-ranking officials of the Thai Foreign Ministry.

On the Vietnamese side were Ambassador Hoang Bao Son, chief of the General Affairs Department Phan Doan Nam and Chief of Asia Department 3 Tran Huy Chuong.

NHAN DAN Hails Tour

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, July 31 -- Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach's recent visit to Burma, Singapore, Malaysia and Thailand marked a new victory for the trend for dialogue between the Indochinese and ASEAN countries, comments NHAN DAN today.

Nguyen Co Thach had, NHAN DAN recalls, frank and useful talks with government leaders and his counterparts in these countries, and many problems concerning bilateral relations and matters relating to peace and stability in Southeast Asia were tackled.

In Rangoon, NHAN DAN goes on, the visit helped tighten the fine friendship ahd cooperation in many fields between the two countries, which, historically and geographically, are alike in many ways. Vietnam and Burma share common interests in maintaining peace and stability in the region. With a clear understanding of the well-meaning proposals put forth by the conference of the Indochinese foreign ministers in Ho Chi Minh City early this month, Burmese leaders said they welcomed all initiatives conducive to peace and stability in the region and supported continued contacts and the enhancement of relations between Southeast Asian countries to settle regional problems. The two sides noted with satisfaction that the friendship between the two countries had constantly consolidated and developed. Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach highly appreciated the active contributions made by the Socialist Republic of the Union of Burma to peace and stability in Southeast Asia.

In our view, the paper says, results of the visit to Singapore, Malaysia and Thailand -- members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) -- were significant, although none of the outstanding problems concerning the region was settled. It is known to the public that until three years ago a state of tension and confrontation had existed for a long time between the two groups as a result of plots and maneuvres of the Chinese rulers in collusion with U.S. imperialism and various hostile forces in Southeast Asia. This was utterly detrimental to the interests of both the ASEAN and Indochinese countries. Then thanks to the persistent and sincere attitude of the three Indochinese countries and of knowledgeable political circles in some ASEAN countries, the two groups have gradually embarked on dialogue, approving contacts and peaceful negotiations to settle existing problems in Southeast Asia. This trend for dialogue has been maintained and developed in spite of sabotage of Beijing and certain circles in Singapore and Bangkok. This is a victory for all peace-loving forces. It helps to reduce tension in Southeast Asia.

NHAN DAN continues: Many state officials of the three ASEAN countries which the Vietnamese foreign minister visited, particularly Malaysia, were genuinely interested in regional peace and stability and in dialogue between the Indochinese and ASEAN countries. During the talks they said it was mutually beneficial to continue efforts to make Southeast Asia a region of peace, stability and cooperation.

The formula proposed by Malaysia for a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in Southeast Asia (Z.O.P.F.A.N.) can be a basis for dialogue. Together with the seven principles advanced by Lao Foreign Minister Phoun Sipaseut at the United Nations last year on behalf of all the three Indochinese countries, the Malaysian formula can provide the groundwork for discussions involving all countries in the region to find solutions to regional problems on the principles of respect for each others' independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, of non interference, non imposition, and without foreign intervention.

They also agreed that a principle for solving any Southeast Asian problems is to respect the legitimate rights of each country, and promote dialogue and contacts for better mutual understanding.

The Malaysian and Thai officials participating in the talks with the Vietnamese foreign minister also agreed that there were new aspects worth studying in the proposals of the latest Indochinese foreign ministerial conference.

Trade relations were also discussed. Several ASEAN countries wanted to promote trade with Vietnam. Thailand and Vietnam agreed to discuss Thais fishing in Vietnamese waters. In fact it is good for both the ASEAN and Indochinese countries to maintain and strengthen economic ties between them.

The situation in Kampuchea, NHAN DAN says, has become more stable. The decision of goodwill of the three Indochinese countries to the withdrawal of a number of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea, their proposals for a security zone along the Kampuchea-Thai border and for an international conference on Southeast Asia have been received by broad sections of the public in the region and the rest of the world. Public opinion in the region has, on the other hand, exposed the Coalition Government for Democratic Kampuchea as a new mask for the Beijing-backed genocidal clique of Pol Pot. All efforts to maintain this monster will only complicate regional problems instead of reversing the situation in Kampuchea.

Noting that Malaysian Prime Minister Mahathir bin Mohamed and the foreign ministers of Burma, Malaysia, Thailand and Singapore accepted Nguyen Co Thach's invitation to visit Vietnam, NHAN DAN said: Nguyen Co Thach's Southeast Asian tour marked a new, important success of the trend for dialogue between the three Indochinese countries and the ASEAN states which is expected to increase mutual understanding and remove tension in the region in the common interests of 350 million people. The peoples of the ASEAN countries, of Burma and the three Indochinese countries all wish to make Southeast Asia a region of peace, stability and cooperation, and Nguyen Co Thach's visit was an active effort to make this come true.

The Chinese expansionists and their allies, NHAN DAN notes, are the only persons who are not pleased with this prospect. Not wanting to see dialogue between the Indochinese countries and other countries in Southeast Asia, they are resorting to dirty tricks and slander to divide the two groups.

AFP Cites 'Sources'

BK310190 Hong Kong AFP in English 0717 GMT 31 Jul 82

[By Michel Blanchard]

[Excerpts] Hanoi, July 31 (AFP) -- Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach's Southeast Asia tour has achieved its aim of restarting a dialogue with Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) countries, informed Vietnamese sources said today. No official statement is expected from Hanoi for a few days but the sources said the results of Mr. Thach's visits to Thailand and Malaysia were considered particularly "satisfactory."

Mr. Thach himself said his talks in Kuala Lumpur with Malaysian Prime Minister Datuk Sri Mahathir Mohamed and Foreign Minister Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie were "very calm, very friendly, very frank and very useful." He also described Malaysia's decision as "very responsive" to "examine very carefully" the Indochinese proposals for an international conference on Southeast Asia.

Hanoi praised the Malaysian leaders' decision to continue the dialogue and "refrain from worsening the situation." Although on the Cambodian issue, the two countries were still wide apart, Hanoi was said to be satisfied with the Malaysian decision not just to maintain a dialogue but also to refrain from making things worse.

While in Kuala Lumpur Mr. Thach said: "We, both sides, have agreed that if we cannot do anything better for peace we will abstain from doing anything bad for peace" and back in Hanoi he told AFP that this was "a very good thing."

Mr. Thach's meeting with Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila was also considered by Vietnamese circles to have been unexpectedly "positive." Mr Sitthi said the meeting was carried out in a "good atmosphere" and was "better than expected."

The Thai foreign minister, who recently said he would not meet Vietnamese officials while Vietnam's position (on Cambodia) remained unchanged, actually said, according to Hanoi, that further discussions could take place in the future.

Diplomatic observers saw in Bangkok's reaction a softening in its position which could be considered a success for the Vietnamese foreign minister, whose declared aim was to convince his hosts, particularly Thailand, of Vietnam's "goodwill." It was thought significant in Hanoi that Mr Thach met the powerful National Security Council chief. Prasong Sunsiri.

PRC ACCUSED OF STAGING 'PROVOCATIVE ACTIONS'

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, July 30 -- China staged many provocative actions against Vietnam's northern provinces from July 10 to 29.

On July 10, 30 Chinese troops intruded into Bat Sat District, Hoang Lien Son Province. They killed a peasant at work, and played havoc with a large area of crop. Five days later Chinese troops fired across the border into Xin Man District, Ha Tuyen, killing or wounding a number of domestic animals. On July 17, Chinese forces fired more than 40 mortar shots and many rounds of infantry ammuniton on Ban May area in the same province, destroying a number of houses.

In Cao Bang Province on July 22, Chinese troops crossed the border at marker post 91 into Tri Phuong District where they killed a woman. The following day dozens of Chinese troops intruded into Dam Thuy area in the same province. They killed two patrolling militiamen.

Two days later in Hoang Lien Son Province, a Chinese squad broke into Ta Ngai area. They killed one civilian and wounded another.

In Quang Ninh Province, 20 Chinese troops on July 29 intruded into Po Hen area and mined roads leading into different villages.

In the same period China sent many scouts into Tra Co and Po Hen (Quang Ninh), Xin Man, Hoang Su Phi and Quang Ba (Ha Tuyen), Vang Ma Chay (Lai Chau), and Tra Linh, Trung Khanh and Quang Hoa (Cao Bang). The intruders kidnapped a number of civilians and took away many cattle.

Chinese propaganda, at the same time, sang high praises of the Chinese which took part in the invasion in February 1979 and in subsequent occupation of Vietnamese territories.

PAPERS COMMENT ON ANNIVERSARY OF PRC ARMY

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, August 1 -- The revolutionary tradition of the Chinese People's Liberation Army has been betrayed, says NHAN DAN in a commentary on the Chinese army day today.

"The Chinese People's Liberation Army", the paper says, "once achieved great exploits, confronting the powerful forces of the reactionary Kuomingtang, lackey of imperialism; the revolutionary army of the Chinese people had to undertake the historical long march. With the Soviet Union's great assistance, the Chinese People's Army counter-attacked the enemy and drove the Kuomingtang out of the mainland to Taiwan. After the birth of the People's Republic of China, the PLA continued defending the country and sided with the Korean people in the latter's resistance to U.S. aggression.

"It is regrettable that the Chinese revolution was later betrayed", NHAN DAN goes on. "The Communist Party of China and the socialist Chinese state were stripped of their power by the great Han chauvinist forces which carried out reactionary policies both at home and abroad.

"Vietnam stands in the way southward of the Chinese expansionists, and therefore became the first target of their aggression. In 1974, Chinese troops were sent to invade Vietnam's Hoang Sa Archipelago. In 1977-1978 tens of thousands of Beijing military advisers manipulated the armed forces of the genocidal Pol Pot gang in Kampuchea.

"In February 1979, 600,000 Chinese troops were mobilised to attack Vietnam. In this war of aggression, the deterioration in the nature of Chinese soldiers became more obvious than ever. Like all other reactionary aggressive forces, Chinese troops committed repulsive crimes: burning houses, plundering and killing civilians in the most savage manner. Its fundamental weak point is in (?policy). Gone is the invincible moral strength of a revolutionary army, which fought for a just cause! The inevitable outcome of such a dirty war was humiliating failure.

"The adventurous, blind-folded pro-imperialist policy of Deng Xiaoping and company is driving China into a blind alley. The first victims are officers and soldiers of the Chinese Army, the main tools of that policy. The legitimate discontent among generals and soldiers toward Deng Xiaoping and his ilk is known to everyone. The revolutionary tradition of the Chinese People's Liberation Army could only be restored when the expansionist and hegemonist forces still in power collapsed", NHAN DAN concludes.

In this connection, the army paper, QUAN DOI NHAN DAN, denounces the Beijing authorities for using the Chinese Army as an instrument of expansionism. The paper says: "The genuine revolutionaries and the people of China cannot help feeling [word indistinct] and indignant at the fact that the reactionary elements in the Beijing leadership are trying to turn the formerly revolutionary Chinese Army into a reactionary force. The People's Liberation Army's glorious past in the fight against imperialism for national liberation is being used to serve Beijing's expansionist schemes."

VAN TIEN DUNG GREETS ANGOLAN ARMY ANNIVERSARY

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, July 30 -- Defence Minister General Van Tien Dung today sent a message to his Angolan counterpart, Pedro Maria Tonha, on the 8th anniversary of the People's Armed Liberation Forces of Angola.

He said: As comrades and brothers of the people and the People's Armed Liberation Forces of Angola, the Vietnamese people and their army rejoice at and are very proud of your great achievements. We believe that under the leadership of the MPLA-Party of Labour which is continuing the cause of the late President Antonio Agostinho Neto, and with their spirit of revolutionary offensive, the Angolan people and their armed forces will record greater success in building and defending socialist Angola.

We take this occasion, Van Tien Dung continued, to express our profound gratitude to the party, government, people and the People's Armed Liberation Forces of Angola for their warm feelings, sympathy and resolute support to the Vietnamese people's revolutionary cause in the past as well as in the construction and defence of our socialist country at present.

May the militant solidarity and fraternal friendship between the peoples and armed forces further consolidate and develop more fruitfully.

PRESS STATEMENT ON SOVIET DELEGATION'S VISIT ISSUED

BK020749 Jakarta ANTARA in English 0726 GMT 2 Aug 82

[Text] Jakarta, Aug 1 (ANTARA) -- The Soviet Union parliamentary delegation and members of the Indonesian Parliament at their meeting here Saturday agreed to condemn the Israeli aggression in Lebanon and to call for an immediate withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon. A press statement issued by the Indonesian Parliament after the meeting said the two sides also support the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people now fighting for independence and the establishment of a free Palestine.

The delegation led by Deputy Chairman of the Supreme Soviet Presidium Antanas Stasevich Barkauskas Saturday afternoon left for home via Singapore. They were sent off at the Halim Perdanakusuma Airport by Speaker Daryatmo, Deputy Speaker Harjantho and Parliament Secretary General Wang Suwandi.

The two sides, according to the press statement, also declared support for the United Nations General Assembly resolution calling for the maintenance of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace, and further support the stepping up of mutually beneficial relations between the two countries in the political, commercial,economic, technology, scientific and cultural fields.

The two sides also stressed their mutual desire for the furtherance of relations between the Soviet Union and Indonesia on the principles of peace, good neighbourliness, cooperation, equal rights, non-interference in their respective internal affairs, and mutual trust on the basis of the Bandung declaration principles.

The Soviet delegation, according to the statement, stressed the need for all countries to step up efforts to prevent a deterioration of the international situation and to maintain the process for the easing of international tension, and also to forestall a new phase in the nuclear arms race, and hoped that Indonesia as co-founder of the Non-aligned Movement could give an active contribution to this end.

The Soviet delegates also noted the importance of maintaining continued contacts between the Soviet Union and Indonesian parliaments to assist the cultivation of mutual understanding, foster the spirit of friendship and cooperation between the two countries.

The meeting also agreed for the two sides to study the possibility of setting up a Soviet Union-Indonesian group and an Indonesian-Soviet Union group in respectively the Soviet Union Parliament and in the Inter-Parliamentary Cooperation Committee of the Indonesian Parliament.

The friendly talks between the Soviet nine-member delegation and the Indonesian side led by Inter-Parliamentary Cooperation Committee Chairman Sukardi signalled the end of the delegation's six-day visit to Indonesia at the invitation of the Indonesian Parliament's leadership.

The Soviet delegation arrived at the VIP lounge of the Halim Perdanakusuma Airport just a few minutes before takeoff, and this time was used by Speaker Daryatmo to present a souvenir to the guests in the form of a photo album about their visit to Indonesia.

The delegation had, besides Jakarta, toured Yogyakarta and Bali, made courtesy calls on President Suharto, Vice President Adam Malik and held talks with Foreign Minister Mokhtar Kusumaatmaja, Minister of Trade and Cooperatives Radius Prawiro, and paid a visit to Jakarta Governor Cokropranolo.

The delegation issued an invitation to the Indonesian Parliament to send a delegation to the Soviet Union, which invitation was accepted to be complied with at a time still to be fixed.

SUZUKI TRIP TO PRC UNAFFECTED BY OGAWA INCIDENT

OW030200 Tokyo KYODO in English 0129 GMT 3 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 3, KYODO -- Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki said Tuesday the cancellation of Education Minister Heiji Ogawa's scheduled trip to Beijing should not affect his own upcoming visit to China this September. Speaking to reporters in the Diet building, Suzuki simply replied "probably not" when asked if there would be any fallout from the Ogawa incident.

China rejected Ogawa's visit, originally planned for September, in protest over revisions made in Japanese school textbooks dealing with Sino-Japanese relations.

When asked if he would reaffirm the Japan-China joint statement during his trip to Beijing, Suzuki told reporters that it would not be necessary. The statement states that Japan takes full responsibility for its aggression against China during the war, and it has been at the center of the dispute over the text revisions. The government officially does not regard the textbook issue to be a diplomatic dispute. It is seeking to resolve differences with Beijing through working level talks in the Education Ministry and Foreign Ministry.

ABE, THAI PRIME MINISTER DISCUSS ECONOMIC TIES

[By Shiro Yoneyama]

[Text] Bangkok, Aug 2, KYODO -- Japan told Thailand Monday it will send an investment mission early next year to promote closer economic relations. International Trade and Industry Minister Shintaro Abe stressed the importance of expanded Japanese investment in Thailand in a meeting with Premier Prem Tinsulanon. A senior MITI Official said the investment mission would possibly be sent in January or February. The official said that Abe called on the Bangkok government to improve the climate for foreign investment.

Prem expressed his deep appreciation for Japan's economic assistance and won a pledge from the visiting Japanese leader of further economic aid. Japan's economic aid to Thailand since 1968 has reached yen 384.1 billion, including yen 70 billion in the current fiscal year for a natural gas separation plant and nine development projects. Investment as of September, 1981 stood at dollar 77.2 million, accounting for 31 percent of Thailand's total foreign investment. The Thai premier hailed Japan's market opening measures designed to maintain free trade, officials said.

Abe also promised to help Thailand, probably the most stable force in the Southeast Asian region, promote exports to other countries. The MITI chief, referring to Thailand's promising natural gas project in the Siam Bay, added that Japan is ready to extend as much help as possible.

Also present in the Monday morning meeting were Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila and Commerce Minister Punmi Punnasi. Abe was to confer with Punmi, Finance Minister Sommai Huntrakun and Industry Minister Chatchai Chunhawan later in the day. Thai officials indicated that trade imbalance between the two countries -- dollar 1,190 million in Japan's favor last year -- will top the agenda.

Abe said that Japan backs the Association of Southeast Asian Nations' Kampuchean policy. Thai Premier Prem told Abe his government is happy to see the creation of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government. He also added that the ASEAN's basic Kampuchean policy was not to interfere in the neighboring state's internal affairs but to help realize the wishes of Kampuchean people.

The Japanese delegation will leave for home Tuesday.

Trade Talks Continue

[By Shiro Yoneyama]

[Excerpts] Bangkok, Aug 2, KYODO -- Thailand asked Japan Monday to buy more farm produce and other goods to correct the trade imbalance which has been chronically in Japan's favor. Thai Commerce Minister Punmi Punnasi also called for an early solution of the country's maize exports to Japan in a meeting with visiting International Trade and Industry Minister Shintaro Abe. Abe, in response to the Thai requests, said the Japanese Government will do what it can to resolve the trade issues, senior Japanese officials said.

The Japanese Cabinet minister also revealed plans to arrange a visit in fiscal 1983 to Japan by a group of Thai officials who will study marketing strategies at department stores and supermarkets to learn the tastes of the Japanese customer. Punmi urged Japan to take the lead in fighting the high U.S. interest rates which the Thai minister said has affected the economies of both developed and developing countries, according to officials who attended the one-hour meeting at the Commerce Ministry.

Punmi and Abe agreed in principle, the Thai commerce minister later said in an interview with KYODO News Service, that the trade imbalance whould be remedied. Punmi said he also complained to Abe that Japan's market-opening measures will benefit developed countries more than developing countries like Thailand. But the Thai minister said Abe expressed the will of the Japanese Government to promote imports from the Southeast Asian country. I trust him, Punmi added. When asked by Punmi about Thai maize exports to Japan this year, a Japanese spokesman said, Abe replied that it was up to private enterprises but that the government would try to make efforts to realize the Thai plan. Japan's maize imports from Thailand last year totaled some 200,000 tons. Japanese officials said Bangkok hopes to sell at least the 1981 amount.

Thai officials said their country welcomes Japanese investment but the commerce minister cautioned that Japan should invest in Thailand for mutual benefit. We want to export more agricultural products and industry products to Japan, Punmi stressed.

In addition to the trade imbalance, the Thais hope to settle a problem arising from natural gas exports to Japan. Japanese officials accompanying Abe said the country cannot make a commitment to buy natural gas from Thailand under a long-term energy program. Union Oil of California's revised estimate of natural gas reserves in the Gulf of Thailand places gas reserves at 489 billion cubic feet instead of an earlier forecast of 1.58 trillion cubic feet. The Petroleum Authority of Thailand has contested the revised amount of reserves. Whatever the exact amount of natural gas reserves there, Thai officials expressed the hope that Japan purchases natural gas from their country. If Japan fails to do so, Commerce Minister Sitthi [as received] indicated in the interview, we will look for another customer.

FINANCE OFFICIALS WELCOME U.S. DISCOUNT RATE CUT

[Text] Tokyo, July 31, KYODO -- Finance Ministry officials Saturday welcomed the lowering of the U.S. discount rate as a sign the high U.S. interest policy, which had been under severe criticism from abroad, may be changing. But they doubted the U.S. rate cut, the second in about 10 days, would lead immediately to lower Japanese interest rates.

They also believed the ministry would go ahead with its plan to raise the coupon rate on 10-year national bonds to be issued in August by 0.5 point to 8 percent per annum and also long-term prime rates by the same margin to 8.9 percent from September, unless a big change comes in the yen's value or elsewhere. U.S. long-term interest rates remain almost unchanged and the difference between Japanese and American interest rates is not narrowing if long-term rates are compared, they said.

ACADEMIC DENOUNCES JAPANESE DISTORTION OF HISTORY

[Statement by president of Kim Hyong-chik Teachers College issued in Pyongyang 2 August 1982]

[Text] It has been reported that the Japanese Education Ministry has recently authorized textbooks that the Japanese have changed for the worse after having distorted and beautified the history of crimes concerning the Japanese imperialists' aggression against our country. In these textbooks, the stark historical facts are expressed totally irrelevantly or the brutal atrocity of plunder committed by the Japanese imperialist aggressors is glossed over and embellished.

The textbooks, first of all, cover up, rationalize and justify the aggressive crimes committed by the Japanese imperialists. The textbooks describe the Japanese imperialists as if they had justly assumed diplomatic rights and a right to interfere in the internal affairs of Korea -- which they had, in reality, wrested from the Koreans through the protectorate treaty between Korea and Japan concluded in 1905 and the Korean-Japanese new agreement concluded in 1907 under the threat of guns and bayonets. This act reminds us of the Japanese imperialists' aggressiveness and craftiness of that era, which they have now beautified as protection rather than aggression, and how they wickedly and recklessly wrested Korea's sovereignty in order to occupy it.

The textbooks also distort the facts to make it appear as if the Japanese were just in committing the historical crimes of forcibly demanding that Koreans worship at Shinto shrines and banning them from speaking Korean during the colonial rule with the aim of eternally eradicating the Korean national traits and as if they had allowed the Koreans to speak both Korean and Japanese. This is a brazen act aimed at justifying their past obstructions and schemes against Korea to make the Korean people colonial slaves.

These distortions and beautifications show they are not at all conscience-stricken about their past aggressive crimes and, furthermore, that they are even trying to conceal their crimes, thus clearly revealing their intention to justify future schemes of war and aggression. Moreover, the textbooks contain a hint that Japanese militarism, as in the past, will again appear as a ruler of colonies.

The textbooks, which have been changed for the worse, deal with the Korean people's anti-Japanese national liberation movement with animosity and deplore, full of revengeful thought and malicious intent, their loss of colonies because of their defeat in the war in 1945. The textbooks depict as just their measures to tighten security in order to brutally suppress the Korean people's anti-Japanese movement. The books emphasize that Japanese sovereignty was limited to the mainland islands. This vividly shows how much the Japanese are running wild to inspire revengeful ideas and ambition for aggression among the Japanese people and to realize their old dreams for colonial rule and the Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere.

Our people, who experienced enough of the Japanese imperialists' aggression and plunder, cannot restrain their indignation over such measures by the Japanese authorities. In particular, our educators can never overlook the Japanese Education Ministry's cunning, reactionary scheme of absurdly distorting the stark historical facts. The Japanese authorities' schemes for changing textbook contents for the worse constitute wanton deceit and distortion of the stark historical facts concerning Korean-Japanese relations. Their act is an intolerable blasphemy of and open challenge to the Korean people.

We cannot but pay attention to the fact that the Japanese Education Ministry's farce of changing textbooks for the worse coincides with the Japanese reactionaries' schemes that are running wild to strengthen their preparations for an aggressive war, while revising the constitution in favor of the country's militarization and aggression overseas and noisily crying out for the Japan-U.S. security system and the theory that Korea and Japan are in the same boat.

We clearly remember the historical fact that the Japanese imperialists, while enthusiastic about making inroads into the continent, were running amok with an education policy that would make the Korean people subjects of the Japanese empire and imbue the youth with fascist aggressive ideology. The Japanese Education Ministry's act of revising history, which is full of crimes, is an undisguised expression of strengthening militarist education in order to imbue the youth of Japan with aggressive ideology and is a prelude to the Japanese reactionaries' schemes of aggression and war aimed at again making inroads overseas, just as in the past.

The Korean people will not tolerate the farce by the Japanese people in authority to shamelessly distort history, nor will the Japanese people, who experienced misfortune and pains due to their country's overseas aggression.

Education that does not conform with social justice, the conscience of the times, science and truth cannot escape ruin in the future too, as in the past. The Japanese people in authority should bear in mind the past lessons, heed our just warnings and demands and immediately rectify their mistaken action.

NODONG SINMUN CRITICIZES JAPANESE MILITARY BUILDUP

[Text] Recently, the Japanese Government formally approved the new, long prepared military buildup 5-year plan. Based on this plan, Japan is going to have a vast quantity of offensive weapons, including modern fighter-bombers, antisubmarine aircraft, ships, tanks and missiles through large military expenditures every year from 1983 till 1987.

According to news reports, when this military buildup plan is put into action, the Japanese Self-Defense Forces will be equipped with modern fighter-bombers and antisubmarine aircraft, whose numbers will stand next to the United States, and the naval defense forces will have ships whose numbers will surpass those of West Germany, ranking sixth in the world.

This shows that Japan -- which, fearing denunciation from public opinion within and without, has been asserting that it will not become a military power but an economic power and that it will aspire for peace but will not pursue war -- has openly and genuinely entered the road of accelerating war preparations, completely repudiating its hypocritic assertions of the past.

This plan for military buildup shows that the Japanese Government has in fact rescinded its past policy of limiting annual military spending to under 1 percent of the gross national product and has opened gates for an unlimited military buildup. The fact that Japan plans to increase its military strength on so large a scale in a time of peace, not war, is irrefutable evidence that the Japanese reactionaries are frenziedly trying to achieve their old dream of a Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere, invoking the soul of the Japanese militarists who were defeated while trying to dominate Asia.

By revising elementary and middle school textbooks, the Japanese reactionary ruling circles are now creating the social atmosphere in which the Japanese imperialists' aggression against Korea and Asia is praised and another Pacific war is (?encouraged). They also are trying to produce a legal basis for rationalizing dispatch overseas of the Self-Defense Forces, meanwhile providing contingency legislation to commandeer manpower and material resources for wartime. All these issues are linked.

Japan's large-scale military buildup was planned in response to the demands of the U.S. imperialists' strategy toward Asia.

The U.S. imperialists, who are pursuing the ambition of world domination, regard the mobilization and use of Japan's military potential as an indispensible condition for implementation of its policy for invading Asia. In particular, they are trying to make Japan share the military burden on the same level as the NATO countries by strengthening the Japanese naval and air forces. To this end, not only the U.S. Government but also the military and congressmen have nakedly pressured Japan to increase military spending and beef up its military forces.

The Japanese Government's approval of the plan for military buildup, reflecting U.S. demands, demonstrates that Japan has been embroiled in implementing the U.S. imperialists' reckless war plans. This is the danger contained in the new plan for military buildup.

What we cannot overlook is the fact that, in essence, Japan's new plan for military buildup has been hurriedly set up and approved in order for Japan to participate in the U.S. imperialists' war of invasion against Korea. The U.S. imperialists, in a bid to provoke a new war of invasion in Korea, have been increasing U.S. military forces in South Korea and in neighboring areas and have accelerated modernization of the puppet armed forces, while employing every possible trick to induce the Japanese militarist force into their maneuvers.

The study for emergency in the Far East being undertaken simultaneously in Washington and Tokyo is essentially one for drafting a detailed plan for action to have military operations shared between the U.S. imperialists and the Japanese militarists in the event a new war of invasion is provoked in Korea. According to this very plan, the Japanese militarists, while loudly clamoring about the Japan-U.S. security system and the Japan-South Korea security system theory, are strengthening collusion between the U.S. imperialists and the South Korean puppets, accelerating preparations for participation in a future war of invasion against Korea. It is a well-known fact that the Japanese militarists have offered the territory of Japan for use as an operations and supply base for the U.S. imperialists' invasion against Korea, have often staged joint military exercises between U.S. troops and the Self-Defense Forces on the assumption of a war in Korea, have accelerated another invasion of South Korea and have strengthened military plots and collusion with the puppets.

It is more than clear that, following this new plan for military buildup approved by the Japanese Government, all of the Japanese reactionaries' maneuvers to prepare for a war will be rapidly pushed ahead on a full scale to a new dangerous stage.

The military buildup and maneuvers to prepare for a war by the Japanese militarists are anachronistic criminal acts which run counter to the aspirations of the two peoples of the DPRK and Japan as well as the Asian people, who demand peace and stability. They will further strain and complicate the situation in Korea and Asia, pose a threat to peace and security in this region, damage the national interests of the Japanese people and bring irrevocably serious consequences to Japan itself.

The Japanese reactionaries should realize that this is no longer the time when the Japanese imperialists could ignite the flames of aggression and run amok as they pleased. The Japanese authorities must look squarely at today's reality, act judiciously and prudently follow the road of peace, ceasing the manuevers to build up military strength and prepare for a war, as demanded by the Japanese and Asian peoples.

3 Aug Commentary

[Text] Pyongyang, August 3 (KCNA) -- The "1,000-mile maritime defence problem" brought forward by the Japanese reactionary ruling circles is an offspring of the U.S. imperialists' Asian strategy; it is intended to increase their military role in West Pacific and establish a military control over this area by inventing a pretext for overseas dispatch of the "Self-Defence Forces," declares NODONG SINMUN Tuesday.

In the commentary captioned "Aggressive 1,000-Mile Maritime Defence Problem," the author says: The "1,000 mile maritime defence problem" harped on by the Japanese reactionary ruling circles gives rise to serious apprehensions from among the Asian people and progressive people the world over for its aggressive nature.

This "problem" had been a topic of debate in the Japanese reactionary ruling circles for a long time, the keynote of which is to sharply reinforce the "Self-Defence Forces" so they might gain the command of the sea and air in the waters within 1,000 miles from the Japanese coast in joint operation with the U.S. Navy "in case of emergency."

Under the pretext of guarding "the security of sea route of transport," the Japanese reactionaries scheme to enhance their military role in the West Pacific and establish their military control over it. This makes it self-evident that their expansionist design overseas has reached a very dangerous stage.

The "1,000-mile maritime defence problem" is an offspring of the U.S. imperialists' Asian strategy. Persistently clinging to the aggressive "policy of strength", the U.S. imperialists are making their desperate bid to maintain and expand their control over major areas of resources and military strategic vantages in the Far East, Middle East, Southeast Asia, etc. The U.S. imperialists demand the Japanese reactionaries to reinforce the "Self-Defence Forces" and bear heavier military burden in the West Pacific.

We should recall in this context that in a recently published report on the "U.S.-Japan defence relations" the United States urged Japan to largely increase military appropriations, arguing that the "self-defence" naval and air forces of Japan should "defend" the sea and air within 1,000 miles from Japan proper to support the U.S. forces in the Asian-Pacific region.

The Japanese reactionaries, on their part, are up to a scheme to realise their overseas expansion design by capitalising on the U.S. imperialists Asian strategy. To this end, the Japanese reactionary ruling circles are getting feverish in increasing the attacking capacity of the "Self-Defence Forces" with the naval and air forces playing the main part, while drastically increasing military spendings. While reinforcing the "Self-Defence Forces", the Japanese reactionaries are working to cook up "a legislation for an emergency case" for carrying out a war of aggression, which would involve the execution of the operation of the "Self-Defence Forces" and establishment of a war-time legal system, commandeering of man-power and material resources and stockpile of reserves of main strategic supplies "in case of emergency." The Japanese reactionary ruling circles are now making haste with a legal step for legalizing the dispatch of the "Self-Defence Forces" overseas, openly claiming that "a strategy of prompt reaction" must be prepared for an instant blow to the adversary "in case of emergency."

All these facts go to prove that the "1,000-mile maritime defence problem" is designed to invent a pretext for the overseas dispatch of "the Self-Defence Forces", that the Japanese reactionaries intend to play a bigger military role in the Asian region by getting involved deeper in the U.S. imperialists' Asian strategy and, taking advantage of this, realise their old dream of "the Greater East Asian Co-Prosperity Sphere." The machinations of the Japanese reactionaries are a grave threat to peace and security in Asia and a criminal act rendering the situation acute in this area.

The Japanese reactionaries should act with discretion, looking straight at the changes of the times. Asia today is not the Asia yesterday when the Japanese militarists could strut about freely. If the Japanese reactionaries, oblivious of this, rush along the road of war, dancing to the drum-beating of the U.S. imperialists, that will never bring anything good to Japan itself.

NODONG SINMUN CALLS U.S. 'STRANGLER OF INDEPENDENCE'

[NODONG SINMUN 30 July special article: "The U.S. Imperialists Are Heinous Stranglers of National Independence and Liberation" -- KCNA identified this as an 'article']

[Text] The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught: The U.S. imperialists are harshly repressing the movement for national liberation by the peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America, emerging as the heinous stranglers of national independence.

Today there is not a country on the three continents whose sovereignty is not infringed by the U.S. imperialists, and all face the threat of invasion from them. As the struggle of peoples on the three continents for national liberation and sovereignty is strengthening, the U.S. imperialists are maneuvering to again place newly independent countries under their thumb, viciously repressing the struggle for national liberation by the peoples of these continents.

The U.S. imperialists are thwarting with bayonets the peoples' struggle for sovereignty and liberation, either by directly occupying with their armed forces countries located in militarily strategic and economically important positions or by establishing military bases in these countries.

The U.S. imperialists have occupied South Korea for 37 years and exercised colonial fascist rule there. Stationing tens of thousands of aggressive troops in South Korea, they have harshly suppressed the South Korean people's struggle for sovereignty and reunification.

The Kwangju massacre, in which thousands of citizens rising up in the struggle for democratic rights, freedom and reunification were killed, was perpetrated under the U.S. imperialists' instigation. By handing over to the Chon Tu-hwan military fascist clique vast military forces in South Korea, the U.S. imperialists allowed the clique to trigger the massacre of the Kwangju uprisers.

Babbling that South Korea is pivotal to U.S. interests,the U.S. imperialists have tried to grasp it as their colonial, military base and further enhance colonial, military fascist rule. For this purpose, the U.S. imperialists, continuously increasing aggressive armed forces in South Korea and increasing military support on a large scale for the fascist Chon Tu-hwan military clique,have converted the whole of South Korea into a living hell in which fascism and violence are rampant. As a result, South Korea has been converted into a complete colonial, military base of the U.S. imperialists and into the source of a new war in Asia. The South Korean people have become the colonial slaves of the U.S. imperialists and victims of fascist bayonets.

In the Middle and Near East, too, the U.S. imperialists are viciously maneuvering to thwart the Arab peoples' struggle for sovereignty, liberation and national independence. Running their eyes over the important Middle and Near East region in terms of transportation and military strategy and its abundant oil resources, the U.S. imperialists fabricated a Jewish state in the center of this region in 1948 and, by arming them, have used the Israeli Zionists as their shock brigade to realize their wild desire. Handing over to Israel $2 billion worth of modern military equipment and lethal weapons every year, the U.S. imperialists have rallied the Israeli aggressors to various aggressive wars against the Palestinian and Arab peoples.

For the purpose of eliminating the PLO and making Lebanon their new base for aggression, on 6 June the U.S. imperialists had the Israeli aggressors perpetrate a brigandish armed attack on Lebanon.

The Israeli Zionists have occupied the broad area of southern Lebanon, bestially killing tens of thousands of Palestinian and Lebanese people with lethal weapons handed over the U.S. imperialists, and have finally crept into Beirut. Taking advantage of this opportunity, the U.S. imperialists are attempting to land their Marines in Lebanon, babbling about a solution to the Lebanese situation under the mask of a mediator. This shows that the U.S. imperialists are striving to realize their wild desire by repressing the struggle of people in this region, placing themselves in its center.

The question of the Middle and Near East has not been resolved so far and is becoming more complicated with each passing day. This is attributable to the maneuvers of aggression and interference in this region by the U.S. imperialists and the Israeli Zionists.

In Latin America, too, the U.S. imperialists are running amok to maintain and expand their ruling system. A struggle against the United States and for independence is being vigorously waged in Latin America, once the tranquil backyard of the United States. In the flames of this struggle pro-U.S. dictatorial regimes have successively collapsed.

Embarrassed by this, the U.S. imperialists are resorting to all means and ways to thwart the people's struggle, increasing military support on a large scale for pro-U.S. dictatorial regimes, including El Salvador, Guatemala, Colombia and Chile. Clamoring that they do not want El Salvador to be another Nicaragua, the U.S. imperialists are rallying rightist reactionaries to the suppression of people, supplying a large amount of lethal weapons for them to thwart the Salvadoran people's anti-U.S. struggle for independence.

According to reports, the U.S. imperialists are concentrating 34 percent of their military aid to Latin America on El Salvador and bestially suppressing and slaughtering the Salvadoran people, who are rising up in the struggle for freedom and liberation, by directly dispatching a great number of military personnel. Dragging about 2,000 military personnel, accounting for 10 percent of the Salvadoran Government's troops, into the United States, the U.S. imperialists ordered them to employ scorched-earth operations and rallied them to the liquidation of guerrillas.

Supplying all kinds of weapons to the Guatemalan reactionaries, the U.S. imperialists are maneuvering to block the people's revolutionary advance by dispatching a great number of military personnel there. It has been learned that the U.S. imperialists, who have recently transferred $3.2 million worth of military equipment to the Guatemalan reactionaries, will transfer $2 million worth of helicopter parts to them.

To put the yoke of subordination on the countries which have gained national independence and are aspiring to an independent and new life, the U.S. imperialists are carrying out subversive maneuvers, including the overthrow of governments. Reactionary military coup d'etats and subversive maneuvers are among the vicious criminal means on which the U.S. imperialists are basing themselves to strangle the political independence of developing countries, block their social advance and extend the evil hand of aggression to them.

This is proved by attempts to overthrow the Seychelles Government in October of 1979 and in November last year. Regarding the Seychelles Government, which has taken an anti-imperialist stand and progressive measures, as an eyesore, the U.S. imperialists, together with the South African rascists, attempted to overthrow the incumbent government by secretly inserting their mercenary troops into the Seychelles. However, faced with the resolute counterattack of the alert Seychelles people, their maneuvers were frustrated.

To smash the Nicaraguan revolution in its cradle, the U.S. imperialists drew up plans to organize a special unit and insert it into Nicaragua. Furthermore, they are arming and dispatching Somoza remnants to this country.

Massing tens of warships, including aircraft carriers, on the Caribbean Sea, the U.S. imperialists are threatening the Latin American peoples advancing on the road of independence, staging provocative military exercises on the sea and in the air of this region. This clearly shows how desperately the U.S. imperialists are viciously and stubbornly committing manuevers to restore their old position.

Everybody knows well the U.S. imperialists' subversive maneuvers continuously committed in innumerable countries in Latin America, Asia and Africa, including Chile, Brazil, Syria, Benin, Burundi and Ghana. Up until today, ever since World War II, the U.S. imperialists have triggered about 100 military coups d'etat in various countries of the three continents to strangle national independence and liberation. Every fact confirms that the U.S. imperialists are the most heinous stranglers of national independence and liberation of the Asian, African and Latin American peoples.

NODONG SINMUN DEMANDS U.S. TROOP WITHDRAWAL

[Text] Independently resolving the question of the fatherland's reunification is the consistent principle that our party and the government of the republic are adhering to. The proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Korea [DCRK] made by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song is a most reasonable and realistic measure for independent solution of the reunification issue. To reunify the fatherland by realizing the proposal for founding the confederal state, an end should be put to occupation of South Korea by the U.S. imperialist aggressor forces.

The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught in his historic policy speech: All Korean people should rise as one in the struggle to make the U.S. imperialist aggressor forces withdraw from South Korea so that independent reunification of the fatherland can be expedited.

Our people have suffered the pain of national division for 37 years. The prolonged division, blocking the unified development of the nation, is even becoming the common feature while homogeneity fades as people die and is creating the danger of perpetuating the division of the people. If this situation continues, our people may be permanently divided and the South Korean people will never be able to end their status as a colonial slave. Moreover, if the division continues now while the situation surrounding us is complex, we can hardly safeguard the nation's independence and sovereignty. Indeed, early achievement of the fatherland's reunification is an important issue related to the fate of the nation. Thus, our people oppose the division, demand reunification and are actively struggling to achieve it.

The fact that reunification has not been achieved in Korea despite the people's desire and efforts is entirely due to the U.S. imperialists' disturbing maneuvers. The U.S. imperialists, occupying half of our nation by force and interfering in the domestic affairs of Korea, are trampling underfood our national sovereignty and blocking reunification of Korea by pursuing the criminal two-Koreas policy. They are continuously reinforcing their troops to intensify the colonial rule over South Korea and expand the foundation for aggression, ceaselessly staging war exercise rackets and running wild with new war preparations. The U.S. imperialists' aggressive policy toward Korea is being implemented by taking advantage of the military occupation of South Korea by U.S. troops.

The occupation of South Korea by U.S. aggressor forces is the greatest obstacle to Korea's reunification, the cause of all misfortune and pain of South Korean people and a basic factor disturbing peace in Korea. As long as the U.S. imperialist aggressor troops remain in half of the nation's land, the fatherland's reunification will never be achieved. Making U.S. troops withdraw from South Korea is a prerequisite and basic demand for the peaceful solution of the Korean question.

In his historic policy speech, the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song again stressed that all Korean people should rise in the struggle to make the U.S. imperialist aggressor forces withdraw from South Korea. This reflects the urgency of the basic demand for solving the reunification question.

There is no basic internal obstacle to the fatherland's reunification. The different ideologies and systems existing in the North and the South cannot be a hinderance to reunification. Since the entire nation is suffering the disaster of division and all the people have a common interest in achieving the reunification cause, the difference in ideologies and systems cannot serve as a condition that would make reunification impossible. People with different ideologies can live together in the same nation, and different social systems can exist within a unified country. Therefore, the difference in ideologies, ideals and systems between the North and the South is a question which can be resolved within the nation.

The basic obstacle to Korea's reunification is not within the nation but outside. It is none other than the splittist maneuvers of the U.S. imperialists, who attempt continuously to seize South Korea as their colony and military base, permanently splitting our nation and people into two. Implementing the policy for division in order to rule South Korea as their colony forever, the U.S. imperialists are fanatically blocking our nation's reunification. They fabricated a so-called regime in South Korea and present it as an independent country. This is nothing but a method to camouflage their colonial rule over South Korea. The actual rulers of South Korea who control domestic and foreign policies, dominate economy and exercise supreme military command are the U.S. imperialists. The South Korean regime is nothing but a tool fabricated by the U.S. imperialists to execute their colonial rule.

To perpetuate the division and fabricate two Koreas, the United States is scheming to legalize the puppet regime and to work out plots of simultaneous entry into the United Nations and of cross-recognition so that the puppet regime can be internationally recognized.

The U.S. imperialists' policy for division is an atrocious challenge to the national desire of our people for the fatherland's reunification, an outrageous interference in domestic affairs of Korea and a criminal act running counter to the trend of the times.

The question of the fatherland's reunification is an internal issue of the nation belonging to our people's self-determination. Our people have the sacred right of self-determination to decide our destiny by ourselves. We have sufficient ability to solve the nation's internal problems by ourselves. No outside force has any reason or excuse for interfering in the reunification question, which is our internal problem.

Korea's reunification question should be resolved in an independent way in accord with our people's intention and demand. This is also a unanimous demand of the world's progressive people advancing toward independence.

In actuality, we have the plan for founding the DCRK, which is a most realistic and reasonable national salvation program for independently solving the nation's reunification question. The plan for founding the DCRK put forward by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song is a most just, fair and reasonable national salvation program that reflects our nation's concrete reality and is based on the three principles for the fatherland's reunification: independence, great national unity and peaceful reunification, all of which were put forward as the nation's common reunification program between the North and South.

The plan for founding the confederal state has embodied both our people's desire for the fatherland's reunification and the demand of the times for the independent and peaceful solution of the reunification question. The full support of our people and peace-loving people of the world for the plan for founding the confederal state and their demand for its early achievement clearly demonstrates the justness and vitality of the plan.

When the U.S. troops withdraw from South Korea and an end is put to the U.S. imperialists' interference in the domestic affairs of our country, our people will found the DCRK and achieve the historic cause of the fatherland's reunification by the united strength of the North and the South.

The U.S. troops have no reason or justification for remaining in South Korea. The U.S. imperialists babble as if they came to South Korea to fulfill their treaty commitment and to maintain peace in Korea. They are an outside aggressive force that sneaked into South Korea as an uninvited guest. No Korean has ever invited them. The treaty they cite was concluded with traitors who cannot represent the Korean people. Our people, by no means, recognize the foreign document fabricated by the imperialists and their stooges. The U.S. imperialist aggressors -- the ringleader of imperialism, international police and the mastermind of aggression and war -- are constantly maneuvering for division and war, occupying half of the nation's land. In this situation, peace cannot be maintained in Korea.

On the Korean Peninsula today, peace has been constantly threatened and a grave situation has been created in which an armed conflict may occur at any time. This is precisely a result of the U.S. imperialists' policy of aggression and war. The U.S. imperialists can by no means justify their military occupation of South Korea.

Peace in Korea and its peaceful reunification can be achieved only when the U.S. imperialists are withdrawn from South Korea, the U.S. imperialists' colonial rule is terminated and South Korean society is democratized. The withdrawal of U.S. forces from South Korea is an indispensable requirement and basic precondition for national reunification. Aggressors never withdraw by themselves and the reunification of a country is never brought about by someone else.

Reunification is the supreme task of our nation. Everyone, if he opposes division and subjugation and treasures reunification and national sovereignty, should rise up as one in a nationwide struggle for forcing the U.S. forces of aggression to withdraw from South Korea. Unity is the source of invincible strength and the firm guarantee for victory. Only when the entire nation is firmly united under the banner of reunification and vigorously wages the anti-U.S. national salvation struggle can we drive the aggressors out of the land of our fatherland and surely achieve the historic task of national reunification.

The anti-U.S. national salvation struggle is directly linked with the struggle for opposing the South Korean flunkeyist, treacherous clique's policy of relying on foreign forces. The Chon Tu-hwan ring is a group of dirty stooges of the imperialists and the flunkeyist and treacherous group which has sold out the country and the nation to foreign forces and which has handed South Korea to the U.S. imperialists as a colony, while begging for the permanent occupation of South Korea by U.S. forces. Only by overthrowing the treacherous Chon Tu-hwan ring can we successfully wage the national salvation struggle for driving the U.S. imperialists out of South Korea.

The South Korean people's anti-U.S. national salvation struggle for national sovereignty is being strengthened with each passing day. The anti-U.S. struggle for independence is a just struggle for defending national prestige and honor and for achieving national independence and prosperity.

The present time is an era of independence. The U.S. imperialists' policy of aggression, which runs counter to the trend of the era of independence, can by no means last long.

Today the South Korean people are waging a resolute struggle by setting fire to the U.S. cultural centers, burning the U.S. flag in many places and demanding that the U.S. imperialists withdraw from South Korea and the Chon Tu-hwan ring step down from power. This is an expression of their resolute will not to permit the U.S. imperialists' colonial rule.

The people's aspiration to live happily in the land of a reunified fatherland by opposing and rejecting foreign forces cannot be blocked by anything. The time when the U.S. imperialists could randomly run amok in South Korea, acting as if they were the masters, has already passed. The U.S. imperialists should give up their delusion of reigning as colonial rulers and withdraw from South Korea without delay, taking along all lethal weapons.

Without fail we will build a flourishing and prosperous independent, sovereign state in the land of the fatherland by making the U.S. forces withdraw from South Korea with the united strength of the nation and by founding the independent and peace-loving Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo.

PAK SONG-CHOL ATTENDS EGYPTIAN RECEPTION

[Text] Pyongyang, August 1 (KCNA) -- Muhammad 'Abd ar-Rahman 'Abd as-Salam, ambassador of the Arab Republic of Egypt to our country, gave a reception at the Ongyu Restaurant on the evening of July 31 on the occasion of the 30th anniversary of the July 23 revolution, the national holiday of the Egyptian people. Invited to the reception were Vice-President Pak Song-chol, Vice-Premier Chong Chun-ki and Kim Kwan-sop, Yi Chang-son, Kim Man-kum and others as well as foreign diplomatic envoys in Pyongyang.

Ambassador Muhammad 'Abd ar-Rahman 'Abd as-Salam spoke first at the reception.

Noting that the Egyptian Government and people extend support to the struggle of the Palestine Liberation Organization for defending the liberation movement, particularly the full right to national self-determination, he denounced Israel for its aggression against the peoples of Lebanon and Palestine and the United States for its veto on a resolution demanding the withdrawal of Israel from Lebanon.

He said: Egypt bitterly condemns all manner of aggressive manoeuvres of imperialists against Palestine in Lebanon.

The government and people of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea under the wise guidance of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song supported the Egyptian people, standing on their side in the struggle aginst Israel.

Pointing out that they were deeply impressed by the tremendous successes achieved in the Korean revolution under the guidance of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song, he said: The Egyptian Government extends heartfelt congratulations to the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and the Korean Government and people.

He noted that the DPRK has registered great successes in the international arena and is playing a leading role in the Non-Aligned Movement. He stated: Egypt supports the policy for the independent and peaceful reunification of the country set forth by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song in his report to the Sixth Congress of the Workers Party of Korea and the efforts of the DPRK to achieve national reunification.

Vice-Premier Chong Chun-ki spoke next.

Saying that today the Egyptian people are actively struggling to maintain chajusong (independence) and develop the national economy and national culture under the correct guidance of their respected leader His Excellency President Muhammad Husni Mubarak, he declared: The Korean people are sincerely rejoiced as over their own over the successes made by the Egyptian people.

He said: If the Middle East problem is to be settled farily, Israel must withdraw from all the Arab lands which it has illegally occupied and the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people including the right to found an independent state must be guaranteed. This is a unanimous will and demand of the Arab peoples including the Egyptian people and the peace-loving people of the world.

The Government of the Democratic Peoples Republic of Korea and the Korean people will make all efforts to further expand and develop the relations of friendship and cooperation with the friendly Egyptian Government and people in the idea of independence, friendship and peace.

The attendants at the reception raised glasses to the friendship and solidarity between the peoples of Korea and Egypt, to the good health and long life of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song, to the good health and long life of the dear leader Comrade Kim Chong-il, and to the good health and long life of His Excellency President Muhammad Husni Mubarak, the respected leader of the Egyptian people.

MINISTRY SEEKING RELEASE OF FISHING BOAT BY NORTH

[Text] Seoul, Aug 3 (YONHAP) -- The South Korean Foreign Ministry is engaged in continuing diplomatic efforts to obtain the release of the South Korean fishing boat "Masan-Ho" and its 35 crew members, abducted to North Korea July 13 on the high seas northeast of Ullung-to Island off Korea's east coast.

Ministry sources said the ministry was assured of active cooperation by the International Red Cross which has contacts with the North Korean Red Cross Society. They said the ministry was making continued efforts through the Red Crosses of other nations, including the United States, Switzerland, Denmark, Finland, Malaysia and Saudi Arabia. The sources added the ministry is also trying to create an international environment for the release through major press organizations in those countries.

DIPLOMATIC EFFORT PLANNED FOR PACIFIC SUMMIT

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 3 (YONHAP) -- A senior Foreign Ministry official said Monday that an atmosphere conducive to the Pacific summit proposed by President Chon Tu-hwan is in the making and that the ministry will launch an all-out diplomatic effort for its realization.

In an interview with state-owned KBS-TV, Vice Foreign Minister No Chae-won noted that Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser endorsed the Korean leader's idea of a Pacific summit last May, and said Canada, the United States and the five member countries of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) have also reacted favorably to the proposal. "These reactions have come earlier than we had expected," No said. "We will launch diplomatic efforts to hold a summit at the earliest possible date by persuading the governments involved." No observed that Seoul could play the role of an intermediary between industrialized members of the Pacific community and developing countries. He added that once the summit is established and supported by Pacific countries, its doors could be opened to communist nations in the region.

The vice minister noted that Chon has cultivated personal relationships with the leader of the United States and the ASEAN countries through official visits to those countries, and pointed out that Canada will soon be added to the list of Pacific countries that Chon has visited. The Korean president is scheduled to visit four African states and Canada during the latter half of August. "The president has been keenly interested in the idea of a Pacific summit ever since his inauguration in March 1981 and he has now laid the groundwork for translating that idea into reality," No said.

Chon initially proposed a summit meeting of 11 Pacific nations to Australian Prime Minister Fraser during Fraser's visit here in May. The Korean leader expanded the proposal at a news conference over the weekend, and called for a larger Pacific summit which would open its doors to "all countries in the region."

KOREA HERALD Hails Proposal

[Editorial: "Evolving Pacific Community"]

[Text] For the first time this year President Chon Tu-hwan discussed a whole range of state affairs and his policies with the local press during his summer vacation in Chinhae last week. The comprehensive presentation of the president's political views and projections sounded as much reassuring as it is down to earth.

The news conference touched on a variety of subjects including the impact of the recent financial and banking reform measures and the desirable style of political performance. The chief executive put the nation at its ease by declaring that our defense preparedness is watertight and in its best shape. We are now capable of coping with the menace from North Korea or any other source in both regular and irregular warfare.

President Chon's Chinhae statement was highlighted by an elaboration on the concept of evolving a new Pacific community arrangement which he brought up during his conversations with Austrialian Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser during his visit to Seoul last May. A need to initiate a machinery designed to promote cooperation among the nations of the Pacific basin has been more keenly felt than ever before, particularly in the economic field, as the center of the world's economic power, which once shifted from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic, is now moving to the Pacific region.

Their collaboration in exploring and harnessing the abundant natural resources will be enhanced by a complementary division of labor, reciprocal reduction of trade barriers and smoother flow of capital and technology among the members of the community. Joint undertakings should expand to cover other important areas.

Diversity of ethnic and cultural background and differences in the stages of economic development pose considerable difficulty in forging a regional consensus and integration. Some unfortunate frictions of the past may also have a divisive effect upon the nations of the Pacific. On the other side of the coin, however, there will also be found a wise common ground for mutual interest. This inspired President Chon to take the initiative in calling for an institutional organization of the Pacific region.

Such a proposal for the Pacific basin summitry has since been received with widespread and active affirmative response from many political leaders in the region. In a major step to further substantiate the overture the president dwelt on five principles along which the proposed summitry could be developed.

The Pacific summit should be institutionalized, be open to all, be based on the respect for sovereignty and independence, be devoted to exploiting all potentials and intensify cooperation among the developing and developed nations. The nonmilitary and nonpolitical tone of the proposed regional arrangement holds out good hope for them to live in peace and grow together.

CHON VIEWS TIES WITH AFRICA, SITUATION IN NORTH

[Text] Chinhae -- President Chon Tu-hwan said Korea's cooperation with African countries will be very conducive to its diplomacy toward Third World countries in pursuit of a peaceful unification.

Requested to comment on his upcoming tour of four African countries and Canada in a news conference here Saturday, he said the African countries with their immeasurable potentialities will become complementary partners to Korea in economic development. President Chon said Africa, once called a "sleeping continent," is transforming into a "continent of vitality."

During his visit to Canada, he said, he will make his best efforts to expand and consolidate cooperative relations existing between Korea and Canada which he said has been a traditional ally. Located on the Pacific rim, he said, Canada will become an important partner of Korea on the threshold of the great Pacific era.

Turning to the North Korean situation, he said one of the problems facing North Korea is its anachronistic scheme to transfer power by heredity, which is ridiculed even by other communist countries. He said it is confronted by internal opposition as well.

North Korea, he said, will have to impose a stricter control on the society to suppress the people's opposition and disaffection and to direct them outward.

Recent reports indicate internal control has become stricter, he said. The examples, he said, are the ongoing purge of the military and the party on a large scale, the reclassification of North Koreans on the basis of their background and allegiance and their relocation. He said North Korea is also increasing tension on the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) and on high seas.

One of the reasons why North Korea does not comply with the South Korean proposal for dialogue is internal opposition to the North Korean power succession, he said. The Republic of Korea's efforts for peace, he said, will not be reciprocated until North Korea solves its internal problems.

The reported visit to be made by Kim Il-song to mainland China, he said, is the manifestation of Kim's efforts to achieve the Chinese acquiescence to, if not recognition of, his succession of power to his son. Timed to President Chon's African tour, Kim's visit to China is intended to indirectly restrain the growth of South Korean influence in the world, President Chon said.

JAPAN CLARIFIES MINISTERS' REMARKS ON TEXTBOOKS

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 3 (YONHAP) -- The Japanese Government has said that Education Minister Heiji Ogawa's recent reported remarks in connection with reported erroneous historical accounts of past Korea-Japan relations in the new editions of some Japanese high school history textbooks were not true, it was learned from the Korean Foreign Ministry Tuesday.

Ogawa reportedly told a press conference July 27 that requests by South Korea and mainland China for the revision of the textbooks in question were "an interference in Japan's internal affairs."

The Japanese Government also confirmed that remarks made by Minister Yukiyasu Matsuno of the National Land Agency to the effect that Japan's 1919 annexation of Korea was not an invasion because of Korea's internal situation at that time were "nearly identical" to newspaper reports.

According to a ministry official in Seoul, the Japanese Government made the clarifications July 30 when an official of the Korean Embassy in Tokyo visited Kazui Okura, director of the Japanese Foreign Ministry's Northeast Asian Affairs Bureau, and asked for Tokyo's official views on the two Japanese ministers' statements. Okura reminded the Korean Embassy official of Japan's Chief Cabinet Secretary Kiichi Miyazawa's remarks at the Japanese Diet July 29 which emphasized that the two ministers' words were not the Japanese Government's official position but their personal opinions. Miyazawa had indirectly denied Matsuno's remarks of "interference" at that time by describing them as "unconstructive", the official quoted Okura as saying.

'Stronger' Reaction Urged

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 3 (YONHAP) -- South Korea's opposition parties plan to press the government to take stronger actions regarding the distortion of historical facts in Japanese high school textbooks when the National Assembly convenes its education and culture information committee Thursday to address the issue.

The decision came during caucus meetings convened by the Democratic Korea Party (DKP) and the Korea National Party (KNP) Tuesday to discuss their respective strategies at the forthcoming session, lawmakers of the two parties said.

The DKP and the KNP agreed that the Japanese attempt to whitewash Japan's atrocities during its colonial rule of Korea in revised history textbooks was tantamount to an "infringement on South Korea's sovereignty." A spokesman for the DKP said the Korean Government should not agree to a joint study of disputed parts in the textbooks by Korea and Japan unless the latter agrees to restore the facts as they were in previous editions of the textbooks. A KNP spokesman said his party will castigate pertinent officials for the low-key position with which they have so far dealt with the issue.

Textbook on Japan Planned

SK310109 Seoul THE KOREA HERALD in English 31 Jul 82 p 8

Informed sources said the preparation of the special textbook became necessary because of a move in Japan to cover up the occupation and rule of this country. They were referring to the current controversy raised by the preparation of new history textbooks in Japan containing distorted facts about the annexation. The sources said the planned teaching of the secondary school students with the special textbook is not intended to create hostile feelings against Japan. They said the aim of the plan is to teach the students the true historical facts about how the Japanese treated Korea.

The sources said during the current vacation, history teachers of the secondary schools will be given a refresher course on the past Japanese occupation of this country. The summer vacation for those schools will end late next month. Teaching-aid books to be supplied to the teachers for use in the next semester will include guidelines about how to teach their students about the Japanese occupation of Korea, according to the sources. They said the city and provincial boards of education are involved in the work of preparing the special textbook.

One report quoted Ku Pon-sok, superintendent of the Seoul City Board of Education as saying that middle and high school students have been taught about the Japanese occupation of Korea superficially in the past.

PAPERS CRITICIZE GOVERNMENT STAND ON TEXTBOOKS

CHUNGANG ILBO Editorial

[Editorial: "We Reject Japan's Official Stand"]

[Excerpts] The case of Japan's distortion of history is not an issue which can be settled ambiguously through diplomatic rhetoric. The issue is concrete and realistic. However, what the Japanese Foreign Ministry and Education Ministry delivered to our government on 30 July, noting it as an official position, gives the impression that Japan considers it possible to smooth our injured feelings through persuasion. The director of the Primary Education Bureau of the Japanese Education Ministry, Suzuki, when he met with the Korean Embassy minister in Japan, said that Japan appreciates the prudent measures of the Korean Government in connection with the case of the distortion of history in the textbooks.

As stated, our government's measures are prudent. However, it should be noted that being prudent does not mean not being resolute. In other words, the fact that we are prudent does not mean that we should refrain from giving our opinion. We would like to clearly point out to the Japanese Education Minister and to director of the Primary Education Bureau that history, whether it is unfortunate or proud, is our undeniable inheritance.

Thus we are resolved to straighten out the case of the distortion of history even at the sacrifice of some practical interests, since we believe this issue takes priority over any other questions between Korea and Japan.

We can hardly understand the attitude of our Foreign Ministry after receiving the Japanese position as an official stand. What is acceptable to us at this point is a concrete promise to rectify the distorted portion by December, the deadline for ordering the textbooks in question.

If we miss the chance this time, it will not come again for 3 years, the next time there is a revision. How can the two nations of Korea and Japan get along as neighbors, as friendly nations and as members of the free world sharing the same values with such an unfortunate incident until then?

We again urge Japan to seriously reconsider. An effort to conceal the dishonorable past will only cause contempt and laughter from international society.

TONG-A ILBO 31 July

[Excerpts] For the past 20 years, Japan has been working even in foreign countries to embellish its history. Japan, which was reeling from a military defeat, entered the track leading to economic prosperity thanks largely to the Korean war. Japan, it appears, has ever since started to refurbish its image, while accumulating national wealth. The Japanese, who were jeered by the name of Japs, have long been exerting careful, organized efforts to eradicate that bad image virtually everywhere in the world.

As a part of such efforts, they embellished themselves as cooperators, not aggressors, and described themselves as a peace-loving, not bellicose, people -- a history-embellishing project.

For the past 20 years, the Japanese have collected some 20,000 textbooks from foreign countries, began distorting and embellishing their history line by line in those foreign textbooks, and had the foreign countries rewrite historical facts concerning their country in the textbooks. The Japanese have quietly been reaping successes in places where our sight did not reach, i.e., the work of distorting history in foreign textbooks. However, we did not know about it.

During the 1960's, we were engrossed in efforts to overcome our backwardness. We were in the midst of deep trouble caused by various political irregularities committed by some people who were bent on their own political security. Because we were in an era of poverty and an unstable domestic situation, we were not aware of the kind of plots being hatched over our head, and even if we did know of such plots, we were out of their reach.

With the beginning of the 1970's, however, the situation changed. Korean goods were to be found at every corner of the African Continent and our country's exports construction worldwide. It was common to see scholars and professors come and go from famous world universities. At least, ears and eyes capable of detecting, becoming enraged and making issues out of such distorted history, of insults inflicted on our nation and damage done to our national interests were plenty in number.

Why, then, had no ears and eyes detected the distortion of history of our country in the foreign textbooks? Were there people who knew of such distortions, but were too bureaucratic to even raise such issues regarding them as too trivial?

An old diplomat once told about the difficulties suffered by our diplomats following the establishment of our country. He said our diplomats at the time were paid only $200 in monthly salaries but were proud of having the Korean flag flying in foreign countries. Now the chiefs of overseas missions ride in at least Mercedes 280SE's, and other diplomats drive Peugeots. We can say that our country can now afford such items for their overseas work. Perhaps they are enjoying too much comfort, and deserve our criticism that they lack a sense of mission and are neglecting their duties.

An example of the concerned authorities' slothfulness can be easily found in their lukewarm and insincere attitudes. Our country has an institute specializing in textbook matters named Korea Educational Development Institute. But its activities are almost non-existent: One official at this institute would not tell about its accomplishments, saying "I am ashamed of saying what we have accomplished." As of the end of June this year, only about 300 foreign textbooks have been collected for research. For an institute where specialists supposedly research educational matters, this shows how they have neglected their so-called research on textbook matters.

With the Japanese distortion of history spanning the globe and in view of the need to start work to correct the distortions, it is regrettable that the government lacks a positive policy to deal with the situation.

The degree of our people's anger over the Japanese distortion of history is mounting. We feel it is our duty to know such things and nobody can be excused for his slothfulness. The lack of a firm attitude on the government's part should be brought to the people's attention.

In the fact of mounting criticism from the people, the government has been saying that it is watching the Japanese attitude closely and that it will take appropriate diplomatic measures against Japan. Maintaining such a negative attitude, the government has never lodged a protest with Japan. Why?

We understand that a hardline approach is not everything in diplomacy. Yet we also know that it is not correct for diplomacy to take a prudent and cautious attitude toward insults inflicted on the national pride which we cannot stand. Belated awakening is a problem. But when this belated awakening results in dishonoring the people, it is a more serious matter for our diplomacy.

CHEA SIM SENDS MESSAGE TO SRV ON WAR INVALIDS DAY

[Text] Phnom Penh, 29 Jul (SPK) -- On the occasion of Vietnam's War-Dead and Invalids Day (27 July), Chea Sim, member of the KPRP Central Committee Political Bureau, chairman of the National Assembly and chairman of the KUFNCD, sent a message to the SRV party and government expressing his sympathy for the invalid combatants and the families of the fallen ones.

We express our profound gratitude to the courageous Vietnamese people led by the VCP for sending their best sons and daughters to the front, who, braving difficulties, bringing into play the traditions of struggle and holding aloft the banner of the August revolution, drove the aggressors out of Indochina.

President Ho Chi Minh proclaimed the independence of Vietnam on 2 September 1945. This brilliant victory is due to the immense sacrifices and the patriotism of the Vietnamese people and army fighting in the same trenches as the armed forces of Laos and Kampuchea to liberate their peoples from French and Japanese domination.

We see exemplary conduct in the Vietnamese people who risked their best sons' lives to save the Kampuchean people from the claws of the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan clique and who continue to accord their aid and support to the Kampuchean people in the struggle against the maneuvers of Beijing expansionism and U.S. imperialism and for the building of socialist-bound Kampuchea.

The Kampuchean people highly appreciate this noble gesture and forever inscribe it in their hearts. We see in the Vietnamese combatants the examples that we follow. We respectfully bow to the memory of Vietnamese combatants fallen on the battlefield, particularly in Kampuchea, and we would like to present our saddened condolences to their families.

Chairman Chea Sim wished that the bonds of friendship, militant solidarity and cooperation among the three Indochinese countries remain everlasting.

VODK WELCOMES BANGKOK CONFERENCE ON KAMPUCHEA

BK010337 (Clandestine) Voice of Democratic Kampuchea in Cambodian to Kampuchea 2330 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] The Asian regional conference for support to the Kampuchean people's struggle began on 31 July 1982 in Bangkok, capital of the Kingdom of Thailand.

The convening of this conference in Bangkok is of great significance to our Kampuchean people's just struggle because Thailand is a friendly country which borders Democratic Kampuchea.

The Thai Government and people and all the people of the ASEAN member countries have supported and are supporting the struggle of our Kampuchean people who are fighting against the Vietnamese regional expansionists right on the Kampuchean battlefield. Thai personages on the conference organizing committee have made every effort to bring about this conference. The Thai friends' efforts clearly attest to the role of Thailand -- a Third World country -- in the settlement of the Kampuchean problem and other big and small issues in the world. The Thai friends' efforts have encouraged the Democratic Kampuchean leaders, cadres and male and female combatants and all the Kampuchean people to fight more vigorously until final victory when all the Vietnamese aggressors, expansionists, annexationists and exterminators of the Kampuchean race are driven out of the Angkor land -- our beloved fatherland.

The Thai king, government and people have supported and assisted our Kampuchean nation and people in a time of great misery and helped relieve them of this misery, thus enabling the friendship between Kampuchean and Thailand to flourish further and the people of the two countries, who have similar situations, to know each other even better than before. All of this contributes to peace, security and stability in Southeast Asia and other parts of the world.

Our Democratic Kampuchea has sent a delegation led by Mrs Ieng Thirith, chairman of the Democratic Kampuchean Red Cross Society, and the Phum Malai artistic troupe to attend this conference so as to strengthen Democratic Kampuchea and the Kampuchean people's friendship with Thailand, the Thai people, the other ASEAN countries and people and all the countries and people in Asia, and to oppose the Vietnamese regional expansionists backed by the Soviet global.

Our radio, Voice of Democratic Kampuchea, is confident that this Asian regional conference for support to the Kampuchean people's struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors and expansionists will achieve its aim.

VODK URGES MEASURES TO ENSURE AID GOES TO KAMPUCHEANS

BK300903 (Clandestine) Voice of Democratic Kampuchea in Cambodian to Kampuchea 2330 GMT 29 Jul 82

A number of countries decided to provide more aid. Japan will give another 17,700 tons of rice, Australia, $1.25 million, the Philippines $8,000 and Great Britain 400,000 pounds sterling.

In the past, humanitarian aid which passed through the aggressor Vietnamese authorities had been diverted to feed Vietnamese troops and none had reached the Kampuchean people.

Therefore, donor countries should take measures to prevent their generous humanitarian aid from being used by the Vietnamese as a tool in their war of aggression in Kampuchea. They should do whatever is necessary to ensure that aid goes to the real Kampuchean victims by distributing it directly to them, as previously done by various international organisation along the border area.

MALAYSIA'S GHAZALI HOLDS TALKS WITH SITTHI 31 JULY

BK010404 Bangkok NATION REVIEW in English 1 Aug 82 pp 1-2

[Text] Malaysian Foreign Minister Ghazali Shafie flew unannounced into Bangkok yesterday and met with his Thai counterpart Sitthi Sawetsila for urgent discussions on what he believes could be a major breakthrough in international efforts to find a political solution to the Kampuchean problem.

Ghazali said in a press conference before his working dinner with Sitthi that he wanted to discuss "confidential ideas on Kampuchea" with his Thai counterpart. One of the ideas, he disclosed, was on a new concept of holding an international conference to discuss and find solutions to regional problems, including the Kampuchean conflict, and the Vietnamese fear of the "Chinese threat."

Ghazali said he raised a similar idea in his meeting with Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach in Kuala Lumpur last week and his Vietnamese counterpart agreed "to think about it."

Leaders of the other four ASEAN member countries have been informed of this new development and Ghazali said the ASEAN foreign ministers' meeting in Bangkok on August 7 will further pursue this idea. While ASEAN will stick to the demand for a complete withdrawal of the estimated 180,000 Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea, ASEAN, Ghazali said, will also try to "find ways and means to reciprocate Vietnam."

Emerging from the three-hour working dinner at Ambassador Hotel last night, Sitthi said he met Ghazali to "compare notes on our talks with Thach." He said he also had some exchange of ideas over the Kampuchean conflict with the Malaysian minister.

Undersecretary of State for Foreign Affairs M.R. Kasem S. Kasemsri, who also attended the dinner, said afterwards that through the talks with Ghazali Thailand learnt that Vietnam had said "something new" that needed to be studied. Vietnam, according to Ghazali's understanding, no longer considered military occupation of Kampuchea irreversible. Vietnam also appeared not to be as adamant on linking a complete Vietnamese withdrawal to an end of the "Chinese threat."

The maximum position Vietnam wants is to maintain the "status quo" but Vietnam began to realize that the present situation could be improved through a political settlement, Ghazali said. Ghazali said he believed Thach left Kuala Lumpur after two days of extensive talks apparently interested in looking for new ideas to solve the Kampuchean problem. "He (Thach) is looking for a way out," Ghazali added.

Another new proposal which Ghazali tried to put across to Thach was to have Vietnam deal with Prince Norodom Sihanouk who is president of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government. Thach often called it an "illusion" during his talks with Ghazali. However, Ghazali pointed out that Prince Sihanouk had significant support of the world community as well as the Kampuchean people.

Thach hinted that Vietnam might deal with Prince Sihanouk when the Khmer Rouge faction had been excluded from the tripartite coalition.

Ghazali contended that a free election in Kampuchea could be a good opportunity for the Kampuchean people to decide which faction would be "ditched." He vehemently denied reports that ASEAN was preparing to "ditch" Khmer Rouge faction from the coalition government. Thach mentioned the possibility of holding an election in Kampuchea in his talks with Sitthi in Bangkok last Thursday.

In Bangkok, Thach also met with members of the ICK Ad Hoc Committee led by Senegalese Ambassador to the UN Massamba Sarre last Friday. Although the meeting was on a personal basis, Ghazali believed it indicated Vietnam's interest in finding a political solution to the Kampuchean problem through an international conference. Vietnam has proposed in its Ho Chi Minh City communique that an international conference be held to discuss regional issues. The three Indochinese states, the ASEAN five, and the five permanent members in the UN Security Council will be among the major participants.

However, ASEAN considered the communique a "non-document" since it was co-signed by a representative of the Heng Samrin regime in Phnom Penh which ASEAN did not recognize.

The idea of a new international conference discussed by Ghazali and Thach is a compromise between the ICK which Vietnam has boycotted and the Vietnam-proposed conference which ASEAN has ignored. Assessing these recent developments, Ghazali concluded that they made him a "little more optimistic." The picture looked "clear" and there were reasons for some "guarded optimism," he added.

Rebuts Thach Statements

Thach said that Mr Ghazali had agreed on details for an international conference on Kampuchea, but the Malaysian foreign minister said in Bangkok yesterday that he had only supported the move in principle.

Mr Ghazali, who returns to Kuala Lumpur today, said that he had come to Bangkok for talks on new diplomatic initiatives aimed at achieving a political solution to the Kampuchean problem. He held talks last night with Foreign Minister Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila at which they compared notes on their recent talks with Thach during his visits to Kuala Lumpur and Bangkok.

Mr Ghazali told a press conference at the Oriental Hotel late yesterday afternoon that he had initiated a move for an international conference on Kampuchea and had not "lifted" the idea from a so-called Ho Chi Minh communique as claimed by Thach. He stressed that ASEAN did not recognise the communique as an official document and strongly denied Thach's statement in Kuala Lumpur that Malaysia "neither accepted nor rejected the Ho Chi Minh statement."

Mr Ghazali said that Thach had denied issuing threats against ASEAN during recent talks in Singapore and described reports that he had as a "distortion." He said he had refused to discuss a partial troop withdrawal from Kampuchea when Thach raised the matter in Kuala Lumpur because ASEAN was only interested in a total pullout.

Thach had used a two-pronged argument to justify the continuing presence of Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea, Mr Ghazali said. The argument was based on what Thach described as the "Chinese threat" and the genocide carried out by Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge regime. Thach claimed that a total Vietnamese withdrawal would be possible only when Hanoi no longer perceived China as a threat.

However, Mr Ghazali expressed optimism that Thach's attitude had shown signs of softening during his recent visits to Singapore, Burma, Malaysia and Thailand. This was indicated by Thach's readiness to tone down an earlier statement that the Kampuchean situation was irreversible.

BURMA REPORTEDLY INSISTS ON TOTAL SRV WITHDRAWAL

[By The Chongkhadikit]

[Text] Burma told Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach during his recent visit to Rangoon that it insists on a total Vietnamese troop withdrawal from Kampuchea and self-determination for the Khmer people, informed sources revealed today.

In the first report on the Burmese Government's attitude, the sources said that it will recognise a government elected by the Khmer people.

Because of its strict non-alignment, Burma had not been expected to take a stand which obviously supports the United Nations General Assembly resolution on Kampuchea. This is considered by ASEAN officials as an important setback for Thach.

Another disclosure about Thach's tour of Southeast Asia concerned remarks he made in Kuala Lumpur concerning various ASEAN countries. Thailand was the "devil," Singapore the "Devil's advocate," and Malaysia an "angel." Thach called Indonesia "inactive" and said he would like American forces to withdraw from the Philippines. He is due to visit Jakarta in October. There is no plan, as far as is known, for him to visit Manila.

Thach also told those countries he visited on his trip that signature of a non-aggression treaty with China would not lead to withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Laos. It is estimated that there are around 50,000 or 60,000 Vietnamese troops in Laos. Thach had said there must be a nonaggression pact with Beijing before total withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea.

At no time during his tour did Thach commit himself on the question of self-determination for the Khmer people. This was despite an assurance by Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila that China had informed him that it would accept the results of a United Nations-supervised general election in Kampuchea and would resume normal relations with Hanoi when this had taken place.

Despite his denial, sources said that Thach did make a "veiled threat" when he informed Singapore Foreign Minister Suppiah Dhanabalan that Vietnam would exercise the "right of self-defence." ASEAN officials are of the opinion that Vietnam "does not have such a right in Kampuchea." Thach reportedly said to Dhanabalan that Vietnam "can wait five to 20 years" but Dhanabalan replied: "ASEAN can wait 30 years." The ball is now in Vietnam's court, not in the ASEAN or in China's court," ACM Sitthi told Thach.

If as Thach appeared to have indicated to Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr, chairman of the International Conference on Kampuchea Ad Hoc Committee, the international conference on Southeast Asia, proposed by the Indochinese foreign ministers at their meeting in Ho Chi Minh City, will discuss Kampuchea as one of the most pressing regional problems, ASEAN may find the suggestion negotiable. Other issues could be relations between ASEAN and Indochina, the Hanoi-feared "Chinese threat," the ASEAN-feared Soviet threat, the ASEAN-proposed neutrality of Kampuchea and the Vietnam-urged neutrality of Southeast Asia.

ASEAN is unlikely to accept the Vietnamese-installed Heng Samrin regime as the representative of Kampuchea at such a conference, just as Vietnam is expected to oppose the participation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea headed by Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

The most important task of the ASEAN foreign ministers when they meet at the Oriental Hotel here on Saturday is to assess Thach's visits to Singapore, Kuala Lumpur, Rangoon and Bangkok and, as a result of the assessment, to exchange views on what Indonesian Foreign Minsiter Mokhtar Kusumaatmaja should discuss with him when he visits Jakarta in October. Initial ASEAN assessment is that Vietnam has not changed its policy, only modalities. But Thach showed enough flexibility to encourage further exploration of Hanoi's real intentions. ASEAN officials also believe that if Thach's purpose had been to sow dissension among the ASEAN countries or to isolate Thailand he had failed. The ASEAN foreign ministers are expected to announce their firm adherence to the principles of the UN General Assembly resolution on Kampuchea but hold out hope of further discussions with Hanoi.

SRV CLAIM OF TROOP WITHDRAWAL 'UNSUBSTANTIATED'

Reports show that, on most occasions, fighting was initiated by troops of the Coalition Government of Kampuchea and resulted in occasional loss to the Vietnamese-Heng Samrin side. Vietnamese troops were reportedly moved about and reinforced opposite the Thai border at Trat Province.

It is evident that fighting in Kampuchea, particularly near the Thai border, continued to the same degree as before. Rotation and movement of Vietnamese soldiers continued as usual. These activities have occurred while Vietnam is launching propaganda about its troops being withdrawn from Kampuchea. There is no evidence of any Vietnamese troop pull-out from Kampuchea and, thus, Vietnam's claim about pullouts is unsubstantiated.

[Text] Aranyaprathet -- Vietnamese-led forces launched a major attack against Khmer Rouge guerrillas near the Thai-Kampuchean border on Friday night, and heavy artillery and mortar barrages continued throughout the night. Sporadic fighting was continuing yesterday afternoon, and exchanges of gunfire inside Kampuchea could be heard at this Thai broder district.

The extent of casualties was not immediately known, but some Khmer Rouge crossed into Thailand to escape the attack. The Thai Army, which went on alert at the area opposite the battle, later pushed the Khmer back over the border. A number of mortar and artillery shells fired by the Vietnamese forces were reported to have landed on Thai soil at Khlong Nam Sai, but no casualties were reported. The military sent up a light spotter aircraft to inspect the scene along the border yesterday morning.

The battle followed fierce clashes last weekend, in which the Vietnamese are thought to have suffered serious losses, and a beefing-up of Vietnamese military strength in the area. Last week the Vietnamese reportedly reinforced their troops and moved at least five light PT-76 tanks into the area opposite the Thai districts of Aranyaprathet and Ta Phraya. On July 18 and 21 the Vietnamese had moved 10 to 15 heavy trucks loaded with Russian weapons along Highway 5 from Sisophon District to Poipet District, Thai military observers said.

On July 28 heavy fighting was reported at Koup, Phnom Mak Hoeun, Sihanoukville and along Highway 502, about five kilometres inside Kampuchea from the Thai border. Friday's assault began at about 6 p.m. when the Vietnamese opened fire on Khmer Rouge forces which had withdrawn from the Khao Phnom Mak Hoeun area.

[Begin Han recording] We launched operations which have resulted in a complete destruction of the CPM guerrilla camps. This is because we felt that as an independent country we could not allow any outlaw armed forces in our country. Now, as for Malaysia, we have crushed the Malayan Liberation Army which is the tool of the CPM. From now on, Malaysia should not bother about the efforts of the CPM guerrillas to liberate Malaysia. They have no more strength. They have been routed as a result of our campaigns. Our intelligence officials used to be informed by Malaysian authorities about the size of the various CPM units.

We have found out that they are not that strong. After 10 to 20 years of operations, they have not grown any larger. I believe therefore that their plan to liberate Malaysia is hopeless. We have now wiped out all their strongholds. Besides, the remaining guerrillas were born in Thailand. Those who fled from Malaysia with the ideology of liberating Malaysia are now very old and cannot fight. I want to tell Malaysia that it should no longer worry about the liberation of Malaysia by the Malayan Liberation Army. Also as a result of our operations, tension along the common border has been lessened. [end recording]

[Text] Songkhla -- the seizure of major strongholds of the Communist Party of Malaya (CPM) will directly affect the Communist Party of Thailand (CPT) as the two outlawed parties had been assisting each other, Fourth Army Region Commander Lt Gen Han Linanon said yesterday.

In an interview with the NATION, Lt Gen Han quoted "abundant documents," seized from the fallen Regiment 8 headquarters, as confirming that the guerrillas of the two parties had kept close contact with each other. "We have learnt that CPM had trained elements of CPT on boobytrap techiniques right here at the camp," he said.

He said that the seizure of the Regiment 8 headquarters had in effect barred CPM guerrillas from teaching Thai communist insurgents on the techniques to make and plant boobytraps. "This is why we have to repel CPM elements. Although the CPM might not pose a direct threat to Thailand, its growth will affect the stability of our country in the long run," he said.

Lt Gen Han said he had ordered his staff to study the techniques on boobytraps from documents seized at the camp as the military still had many lessons to draw from the insurgents over the matter. The military has not as yet defused all the boobytraps planted around the camp. About 40 soldiers were wounded by the boobytraps, according to the Fourth Army Region commander.

Lt Gen Han yesterday accompanied a team of senior Malaysian officials led by chairman of the regional committee Maj Gen Hasim to visit three regiment-size CPM strongholds which fell to government forces during the military offensive last month. The Malaysian delegates and their Thai counterparts also met at the regional border committee here to discuss the agenda for the upcoming general border committee conference due to take place in Malaysia late this month. The Malaysian delegation returned to its country later in the afternoon.

SUA TROOPS AT BURMESE BORDER REINFORCED

[Text] Chiang Mai -- About 700 Shan rebel troops were last weekend despatched to Doi Lang on the Burmese border to beef up the Shan United Army (SUA) force on the mountainous stronghold seized from the Burmese communists over a week ago.

Informed police sources here said that the arrival of the new reinforcement had increased the strength of the SUA to some 1,500 men under arms. The sources said further that it appeared that the Shan rebels intended to keep Doi Lang their new home after their last stronghold in Ban Hin Taek (now Ban Thoet Thai) was smashed by Thai Government force in February this year.

According to the sources, Doi Lang is an ideal place for narcotics kingping Khun Sa and his Shan rebel troops because it is located near the Kok River which will offer them a convenient transportation facility. Besides, overland travel to Doi Lang from the Thai border is much more difficult than to the Shans' former stronghold in Ban Thoet Thai, which is accessible by road almost the year round, the sources added.

Meanwhile, it was reported that sporadic clashes continued around Doi Lang, about three kilometres from the border, between the combined forces of SUA, a breakaway Kuomintang [KMT] faction and Lahu tribesmen on one side and the Burmese communists led by A Bi on the other side.

Colonel Yang Wei Kang, leader of the YWK faction which has broken from the KMT, told the BANGKOK POST at his border stronghold that the allied forces of the three factions last Saturday captured a heroin refinery in Burma which was owned by A Bi. The troops, he added, seized four oil drums each containing 100 litres of ether and two more drums filled with processed opium. He claimed that about 100 communists died in the month-long fighting -- most due to the lack of medical care -- while conceding that their own casualties were about 20 killed. About 45 were wounded and were treated at Fang District Hospital. A former aide of General Lao Tuan, Colonel Yang said that he committed 250 men from his private army to help Khun Sa fight the Burmese communists on personal reason. He said that he himself hated narcotic drugs, but declined to comment if he knew Khun Sa was involved in drugs trade and production.

In a related development, it was reported that about 100 Burmese communist troops had fled the fighting into Ban Muang Ngam of Mae Ai District on Sunday. No details were available.

LABOR CONGRESS ELECTS AHMAD NEW PRESIDENT

[Text] Labour leader Ahmad Khamthetthong was unanimously elected new president of the dispute-plagued Labour Congress of Thailand (LCT) in a quiet balloting yesterday when his rival group, led by outgoing LCT President Phaisan Thawatchainan, boycotted the session.

The election, which finally came true after being postponed twice, saw Ahmad and his followers make a clean sweep of all the 40 executive posts in the lot. Ahmad's victory without competition ended the long-time leadership of Phaisan who had been president of Thailand's largest labour grouping for many consecutive years. Phaisan and his team had earlier withdrawn their candidacy from the showdown in protest against what he described as "foul play" by the rival wing to win the poll.

Only 174 representatives from about 60 labour unions attended the conference held at the State Railway of Thailand (SRT) to cast their votes. The total eligible voters numbered 379. About 140 supporters of Phaisan yesterday continued to boycott the poll.

Ahmad declared after the election that his executive committee would no longer tolerate an interference by an international labour organization in the LCT affairs. "We will emphasize self-reliance. Foreign aids must have no strings attached," he said. He was apparently referring to the Asian-American Free Labour Institute (AAFLI) which had earlier proposed that the two labour factions share the executive posts in a bid to compromise the bitter rift in the LCT. AAFLI has been the major financier for LCT. Ahmad said the new executives will meet on August 15 to farm out the responsibilities among themselves. Phanat Thailuan who was also elected to the committee might not be given the responsibility of education affairs of LCT as he had been criticized while being in charge in the past, according to Ahmad. The LCT executive for education will be assigned to contact foreign labour movements for aid to finance its education programme. Newly-elected LCT Secretary General Wichai Thosuwanchinda who succeeds Sawat Lukdot said he plans to improve the administrative system of the labour movement to ensure maximum efficiency.

AFP INTERVIEWS THACH ON SOUTHEAST ASIA TOUR

[By Michel Blanchard]

[Excerpts] Hanoi, Aug. 3 (AFP) -- Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach says he is "very satisfied" with his recent Southeast Asian tour, adding that "now the dialogue has opened" with Hanoi's non-communist regional neighbors.

In an exclusive interview with AFP yesterday, Mr Thach said that both he and his Thai counterpart, Sitthi Sawetsila, had been "surprised" by the results of their talks, neither of them having expected anything "so good."

"My visit to Thailand was successful in the sense we established an atmosphere of detente and dialogue. Before, there was no dialogue," Mr Thach said. "Now the Thai foreign minister has agreed to visit Vietnam. Moreover we have come to the agreement that even if we cannot do anything to improve peace and stability, at least we can refrain from worsening the situation," he added. The Vietnamese minister indicated that he and his hosts had not touched on "concrete" problems, but had established principles. "That's already a lot," he said.

Mr Thach said that during his talks, "we agreed that the problems between ASEAN and the Indochinese countries must be solved while respecting mutual interests. Nothing must be imposed against the will of either of the two sides." "If the Indochinese countries respond to ASEAN's legitimate interests, meaning the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia, the ASEAN countries must also take into account the legitimate interests of the Indochinese countries, meaning an end to the Chinese threat," Mr Thach said.

Mr Thach said he "hoped" that Marshal Sitthi might be able to have a positive influence on China, which backs the Khmer Rouge government ousted by the Vietnamese from Phnom Penh. But he did not know if this was "realistic."

Asked about a recent meeting in Hanoi between Vice-Foreign Minister Vo Dong Giang and Chinese Ambassador Qiu Lixing, Mr Thach said such contacts had already previously taken place and that he himself had met with the Chinese ambassador. "But nobody knew about it, that's all," he said.

He was asked about the possibility that China might "soften" its position towards Hanoi, which has asked Beijing to sign a peace treaty in return for a total Vietnamese troop withdrawal from Cambodia. Mr Thach replied: "One can never foresee the sudden changes in Chinese policy. There are always surprises in China. China is a big box of surprises."

As an example of the common points shared by the ASEAN and Indochinese countries, Mr Thach said, "the ASEAN countries are calling for the neutralization of Cambodia, and the Indochinese countries are calling for the same for the whole Southeast Asian region." "But if we can agree on a neutralization of all of Southeast Asia that would certainly include the neutralization of Cambodia," he said.

Another very positive development in the minister's view was that the countries he visited agreed that commercial relations should exist between private companies and Vietnam. "This is a good thing. There is no longer question of a blockade," he said.

BK021234 Hanoi International Service in English 1000 GMT 2 Aug 82

[Text] A Thai spokesman said in Bangkok last Friday that the ASEAN countries were very pleased with the results of Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach's recent visit.

The spokesman said: The meeting between Nguyen Co Thach and Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila took place in an atmosphere of special friendship. On this occasion, Mr Thach expressed Vietnam's good intentions toward every country in Southeast Asia. The spokesman also declared: We want to keep the door open and sincerely wish to have better relations with Vietnam.

Many Western news agencies quoted the Vietnamese foreign minister as saying in Bangkok last Friday that China's military threat and ASEAN's support to the Khmer reactionary groups against the People's Republic of Kampuchea are poisoning the atmosphere of peace in the region and that China is inciting neighboring countries to oppose Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea.

DIE ZEIT INTERVIEWS FOREIGN MINISTER THACH

DW291239 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 30 Jul 82 p 7

[Text] ZEIT: Where does Vietnam stand today now that 7 years have passed since the unification of north and south Vietnam?

Thach: You in Europe had war for 6 years and it took you at least 6 years to recover. Vietnam had war for 30 years and it was much dirtier. The number of bombs dropped was twice as high as that in World War II. Therefore, we need more time to heal the wounds from the war. We still have many economic difficulties now, but next year we will produce our own oil for the first time.

ZIET: Vietnam's supply situation is somewhat disastrous but has improved somewhat last year. A liberal economic policy and piece work wages have contributed to this. Will this course be continued after the fifth party congress?

Thach: We were too idealistic. We overemphasized the interests of the state and the collectives and we underrated the interests of individuals. Therefore, we will now have to take interests of all three equally into account -- those of the state, the collectives and the individuals. We haven't coordinated them sufficiently so far. We must respect the interests of the individuals. We have introduced a new type of management in many industrial enterprises, and we will further develop this.

ZEIT: In north Vietnam agriculture is 95 percent collectivized. In the south you are still having difficulties with the peasants.

Thach: In south Vietnam 7 percent of agriculture has been nationalized so far. We motivate the peasants but don't force them into collectives. What is forced on people cannot work.

ZEIT: The resettlement of hundreds of thousands of people into so-called new economic zones was such a compulsory measure. Thousands returned from the country to the cities and thousands fled as boat people. Nonetheless, over 600,000 people are to be resettled again this year alone to increase food production and reduce unemployment in the cities.

Thach: Some of these economic zones were successful, others weren't. For city dwellers life in the country is simply very difficult. We are persuading those who fled from their villages to the cities during the war to return to the country. However, here too, everything that is forced is no good; it's the same as rape to love. However, so far we have had success with roughly 500,000 resettlers, most of them in the mountains and the Mekong Delta. We must invest to build up an infrastructure in these economic zones -- houses, schools, hospitals. As long as we don't have that, things are very bad.

ZEIT: Why is the real -- although secret -- currency still the dollar and not the dong?

Thach: Yes, that's a problem we will have to cope with gradually. We can't solve it through police operations.

ZEIT: So for the time being you will allow the black market, the free market and state trade to coexist?

Thach: The black market is a cancerous ulcer we have to eliminate. Just wait 5 or 10 years, then you'll see. Until we increase our productivity, we won't be able to tackle the black market problem. No one can stop it overnight.

ZEIT: What, in your view, are the most important points of the new 5-year plan?

Thach: We have five priorities: food production, consumer goods, energy production, increased exports, and transportation and communications. The emphasis of our budget is on agriculture and education. For instance, we no longer have illiterates in Vietnam. I understand that there are still 14 million illiterates in southern Europe. As for our military expenditures, we get most of our weapons from the Soviet Union and don't have to pay for them.

ZEIT: But an army of about 1.5 million men is an enormous burden on the economy.

Thach: That's not new to us. We have lived with this for more than 25 years. Vietnamese soldiers in the field only need some rice; they are not so demanding as the Americans, for instance.

ZEIT: Vietnam has the fourth largest army in the world and is one of the poorest countries in Asia. Don't you think this is out of proportion?

Thach: As long as we are threatened with war by Kampuchea and China, we have no other alternative. We will defend our independence. We still don't have time for peace. However, peace is what we need most of all. As long as we don't have peace, we also can't get our economy going again. Peace and reconstruction belong together.

ZEIT: Following Vietnam's intervention in Kampuchea, the Federal Government froze some DM90 million of development aid it promised to give. On what conditions will you withdraw the Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea?

Thach: I ask you: Why does the Federal Government still have good relations with China even though the Chinese marched into Vietnam in 1979 and still occupy part of our territory? We will withdraw our troops from Kampuchea when the Chinese threat is over. We could withdraw some of our troops earlier if Thailand stopped helping the Khmer Rouge along the border. Then we would easily cope with the Pol Pot people; then they would just be a small skin cancer.

ZEIT: Vietnam has stationed roughly half a million soldiers along the border with China. After the February 1979 border war, do you expect the second "punishment expedition" threatened by the Chinese will really take place?

Thach: The first attack was really quite foolish. A second would be even much more foolish, but unfortunately we are dealing with the most foolish people in the world. Therefore, we must be prepared.

ZEIT: China and Vietnam accuse each other of pursuing a "hegemonist and expansionist" policy. What role should your country play in Southeast Asia?

Thach: We want to contribute to peace and independence in this region. We would like to see Southeast Asia as a nonaligned bloc, free of all outside influence.

ZEIT: So it would be completely misunderstanding matters to consider Vietnamese policy to be militant?

Thach: We have never fought outside Indochina. However, the French, the Americans, the Chinese and the Thais have all been here in our country.

ZEIT: Does Vietnam have its own path between the great power blocs of China and the Soviet Union with the framework of socialism?

Thach: Yes. We are an independent socialist country, and belong to neither the Warsaw Pact nor NATO. We also don't have any foreign bases in Vietnam.

However, without Soviet military support we would have no independence. We want to have good relations with all countries, and have not slammed the door. It was the West which linked our relations with conditions we couldn't accept.

ZEIT: Last year, following a visit to Vietnam, Amnesty International published a report on the reeducation camps with an appeal to your country to dissolve these camps which have existed since 1975. According to official data, some 20,000 and, according to unofficial estimates, some 200,000 people are there without formal trials or court sentences.

Thach: Some 2 million Vietnamese collaborated with the Americans and we have released them. We put just a few thousand into concentration or education camps. Today there are a few more than 10,000 -- just a handful. They are all criminals. When I was in the West, I was asked: Why don't you release them? I said: We can't let criminals move around freely. However, if your country wants to take them, you can have them all!

ZEIT: There are many unhappy and dissatisfied people in what used to be called Saigon.

Thach: They suffer from the consequences of the easy life they had at the time of the Americans. They enjoyed it and now don't like to work hard for their living. Therefore, they want to flee and we let them. After 1975, when we wanted to keep them in the country we were criticized for that. Since 1979, that is to say, since we have let them leave the country legally, the criticism is: Why such a large exodus?

ZEIT: Why do you still have so many boat people (over 11,000 in the first 3 months of 1982 alone) despite the opportunity to leave legally?

Thach: Because those who leave our country legally are not so well received in the West as the boat people. Those who leave the country legally are not considered refugees but only as immigrants and don't have any special privileges.

ZEIT: Within the framework of family reunification, some 6,000 Vietnamese have entry permits for the Federal Republic, some of them since 1980. Why hasn't your government granted them exit visas?

Thach: There are not that many. Some changed their names and addresses. Also, don't forget our bureaucracy and, on a low level, corruption. However, think of the Lockheed scandal involving the Netherlands prince or the affair of the Japanese prime minister. Such a thing, corruption at high levels of the state, doesn't exist here.

REVIEW OF JULY ISSUE OF TAP CHI CONG SAN

[Review of TAP CHI CONG SAN, No. 7, 1982]

[Text] The July issue, 1982, of TAP CHI CONG SAN has come off the press. Its editorial entitled: "Carry Out Well the Political Activities on the Resolutions of the Fifth Party Congress" says: These political activities are aimed at the following requirements: To make the cadres and party members, particularly the leading and managerial cadres in various echelons and sectors, hold uniform views and reach high unanimity with the basic contents of the documents of the congress; to firmly grasp the spirit of the decisions of the Political Bureau and the Council of Ministers; and to criticize the erroneous views running counter to the party's line and policy.

On this basis, we must review in depth the situation of the movement in the regions, sectors and grassroots units and review the leading activities of the party organization in the local area; draw lessons from experience; strengthen solidarity and hold aloft the revolutionary offensive spirit, the sense of responsibility and work capacity of cadres and party members.

We must map out a realistic program of action for the region, sector and grassroots unit with effective measures to resolve urgent and immediate socioeconomic problems, with a view to successfully implementing the resolutions of the congress and the decisions of the Political Bureau and the Council of Ministers. We must overcome errors and shortcomings at all costs. The editorial points out: The study of party documents during this phase of political activity is unlike the discussion of draft documents in the first phase of congresses of party organizations at various levels. In the first phase of past congresses of party organizations, party members and representatives discussed draft decuments with a view to contributing ideas for the formulation of documents to be presented at the party's national congress. At that time, party members and representatives had the right to make suggestions or amendments to the contents of draft documents in accordance with their knowledge. These draft documents, after being discussed, amended and unanimously passed by the party's national congress, have become congress resolutions. The party's national congress of delegates is its highest leading organ. The congress resolutions must be thoroughly understood and seriously implemented by all the party. Every cadre and party member must speak and act in accordance with the spirit of the congress resolutions. This is a question pertaining to the party's principle of organization.

The editorial also stresses: We must overcome the tendency of slighting the congress documents, thinking that the contents of these documents had already been discussed in the first phase of congresses of party organizations at various levels. This tendency reflects a lack of seriousness in the study of party resolutions. The documents approved by the national congress contain important changes and amendments compared to their drafts. If one does not thoroughly understand the contents of these documents and does not firmly grasp the congress's views on the party line, on the assessment of the present revolutionary situation and on the strategic tasks of the Vietnamese revolution in the new stage, one will not be able to correctly organize the implementation of the congress resolution.

This month's issue of TAP CHI CONG SAN carries Council of State Chairman Truong Chinh's talk to representatives of the Hanoi electorate.

On the centennial of Georgi Dimitrov's birth, this issue of TAP CHI CONG SAN makes public the 22 December 1943 letter from Comrade Dimitrov, former general secretary of the Comintern, to Mao Zedong, outlining Mao's errors in sabotaging the Chinese Communist Party and the anti-Japanese national united front in China and in inciting an anti-Soviet psychology in the Chinese Communist Party.

This month's issue of the journal carries Comrade Nguyen Van Tran's article on the coordination of three techniques in economic management. The article says: After outlining the general orientation on economic management, the choice of managerial techniques appropriate to the characteristics and conditions of each stage and the situation in each locality, economic and technical sector is very necessary and important. Managerial techniques consist of gathering techniques affecting those under management to ensure their activities run smoothly in the course of implementing the set objectives. We must stimulate the interests of those under management so that, for the sake of the interests of the whole society and of their own, they will be concerned with raising productivity and with creating a motive force pushing production forward.

On the basis of characteristics affecting man in the course of management and on the substance of managerial work, ordinarily people gather managerial techniques into three groups: economic techniques, administrative techniques, and socioeducational techniques. These three techniques form a unified entity. They do not negate but complement one another, creating a combined strength affecting all aspects of managerial work, every worker and the collective of workers, and affects both the manager and the managed.

In order to correctly use the three managerial techniques, each leading cadre must firmly grasp the science and art of management. Under present conditions, this must be manifested in the concentration and division of power and responsibility, in an appropriate and high degree of concentration, in a vigorous division of power, in expansion of the right to decide what is appropriate for the concrete conditions of production and business enterprises at lower levels and in a clearcut division of power and responsibility. Power must go hand in hand with responsibility. This is precisely the requirement of the present improvement in economic management.

Next is Comrade Le Khac's article "Create a Great Development in Exports." The article outlines the main socioeconomic tasks during the 1981-85 5-year period and in the 1980's, which impose extremely large demands on export activities. The article then deals with the trends in the export market and the trends and structure of export goods during the 1980's.

This issue of the journal also carries Pham Van Nghien's article "Raise the Transit Capacity of the Haiphong Junction Center." After pointing to the irrational phenomena in Haiphong port's activities to show that this port is a very weak link in our country's communications and transportation system and that the stagnation in its activities -- which have existed for several years to a serious degree, causing considerable losses to various production sectors and affecting trade relations between our country and foreign countries -- is a problem of serious concern, the article deals with the major causes of this situation: The mechanism of activities at the Haiphong junction -- a clear picture of small-scale production in communications and transportation -- is incompatible with the laws of production development as well as with the special laws of transportation management. It does not correctly implement a number of principles of socialist management.

In addition, there are still many shortcomings in the port's material-technical base. The excessive damage to loading, unloading and transportation facilities is also a cause of imbalance between use and repair, between transportation and cargo handling.

The problem of the port can be resolved only in the context of the whole Haiphong junction center. This means that we must examine and resolve the problem from the point of view of the system, in which we must pay special attention to essential relations bearing a cause-and-effect character between the elements of the system, and must resolutely eliminate all unnecessary relations, because they do not create uniformity of the system and even reduce efficiency in the system's activities.

The raising of the transit capacity of the Haiphong junction center can be resolved only by a series of important measures, but first of all, we must establish a direct relation between the port and transportation units, through economic and professional contracts, and eliminate unnecessary relations between the port and merchandise owners in the delivery and reception of merchandise at the port.

Next is Van Hien's article "Perfect the Law and Strengthen the Socialist Legal System." The article stresses: In order to strengthen the socialist legal system, we must first gradually build a legal system, particularly laws on economic management. During the next 5 to 10 yeras, we must institutionalize the party's line and policy in a manner more systematic and comprehensive than before, starting with fundamental regulations, with a view to gradually concretizing in the legal aspect the system whereby the party leads, the people are masters and the state governs.

The article also deals with the question of organization of implementation of the law, the question of training a contingent of legal cadres and the question of strengthening the party's leadership over perfection of the law and strengthening of the socialist legal system.

This month's issue of the journal also carries Prof Vu Khieu's article "The Individual and Social Question in the Communist's Philosophy of Life," dealing with main questions of the philosophy of life, questions being constantly posed during the course of one's life to be resolved: Does one live only for oneself or for the entire society? What does one live for and how does one live? Dealing with the aspect of personal interests, the article says: Under the socialist system, on the basis of common ownership by the state and the collective of main means of production, social and collective interests constitute the foundation of personal interests. Personal interests do not oppose social and collective interests. On the contrary, they start from social and collective interests.

In our society, the individuals's legitimate income and the family's living standards can be raised only when society's production level develops, when the cooperative harvests a bumper crop and when enterprises fulfill their tasks. To work with devotion and to make increasing contributions to the collective and society also mean to attend to the livelihood of one's family and oneself. To make a little sacrifice for the interests of the enterprise, the agency or the cooperative can only mean to subordinate immediate interests to one's own long-term interests.

Next is Tran Hong Phong's article "Some Thoughts About the Struggle Against Bureaucracy." The article deals with the nature of the struggle against bureaucracy, analyzes its causes, points out its manifestations and harms and outlines orientations and measures to overcome it.

This month's TAP CHI CONG SAN also carries Le Xuan Vu's article "About the Present Relations Between Economic and Cultural Development." The article shows that society's cultural level does not automatically depend on the level of economic development. This does not mean that it is entirely independent of the level of economic development. In the building of a new culture and new-type man, we should, and may, precede the actual situation of economic life by one step, but one step only, so that we may always be able to maintain a smooth balance, an effective mutual influence and stimulation between economic and cultural developments.

In the book review section of this month's issue, there is an article by Nhat Van entitled "Handbook For Writers and Artists," introducing the book "Culture and Art Also Constitute a Front," put out by the Van Hoc publishing house. The book contains President Ho Chi Minh's speeches and writings from the 1920's to the time of his demise. The article says: Each time strange guests appear on the art and literature front, shaking weak persons, we only have to recall President Ho's intimate, earnest and loving advice to become calm in order to march forward. Thus it can be said that this book is a handbook for writers and artists.

This month's issue of the journal also carries Thach Tin's article "Undeniable Betrayal," on reading (Francois Joyaux's) book "China and the Settlement of the First Indochina War -- Geneva 1954" published in Paris. The article shows that despite its limitations, this book is a serious and useful study containing valuable materials. This is another scientific proof of the Beijing leaders' undeniable betrayal of the revolutionary cause of the peoples of Vietnam and other Indochinese countries. This is also another scientific proof of the expansionist and hegemonic nature of Mao followers, who are betraying even the Chinese people's revolutionary cause.

Next is Vu Hien's article "The Malvinas Incident," analyzing why the military conflict between imperialist Britain and Argentina on the Malvinas Islands took place a few months ago, what its consequences are, and what was gained or lost by the warring parties.

PHAM VAN DONG GREETS TOKYO DISARMAMENT MEETING

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, August 2 -- Premier Pham Van Dong has sent greetings to the 82 World Conference Against A and H Bombs currently held in Tokyo.

He said: Following the second special session of the U.N. General Assembly on Disarmament, the conference is expected to speed up the world people's movement for peace and disarmament now sweeping all parts of the world, especially Europe and America. The voice of people in various countries has become the strength of public opinion really capable of preventing U.S.-led warlike and reactionary forces from feverishly engaging in the nuclear arms race and from threatening peace and security of nations.

The Japanese people, victims of U.S. atomic bombs in Hiroshima and Nagasaki, can see better than anyone else the disaster of a nuclear war. Therefore, the world conference annually held in Japan plays a very significant role in consolidating international solidarity and coordinating the world people's action for peace and disarmament, against war schemes hatched by U.S. imperialism in collusion with Beijing, expansionism and hegemonism and other reactionary forces.

REPORT ON VFF CENTRAL COMMITTEE PRESIDIUM MEETING

BK301212 Hanoi NHAN DAN in Vietnamese 3 Jul pp 1, 4

The meeting decided that the VFF must increase its activities, strengthen the solidarity of various strata of the people, religions and nationalities and urge them to close ranks behind the VCP led by esteemed General Secretary Le Duan. The VFF must also strengthen the people's political and spiritual unanimity, develop the working people's right to collective mastery, accelerate the three revolutions, and satisfactorily carry out the all people action slogan: "All for the socialist fatherland and for the people's happiness!"

Various echelons of the VFF from the central to grassroot levels must formulate a concrete and effective action program in order to implement the resolutions of the party congress -- especially the 1982 state plan and the 1981-85 5-year plan -- solve urgent problems in production and the people's daily life, and triumphantly carry out the various political tasks set forth by the party and state.

After hearing a report by the preparatory committee for the VFF congress, the Presidium decided to accelerate tasks concerning the preparations so that the VFF can hold its national congress at the end of 1982 in Hanoi.

At this meeting the Presidium of the VFF Central Committee also agreed, together with the Vietnam Peace Committee, to launch "a national campaign for peace and disarmament against the war schemes of U.S. imperialism and other reactionary forces." This campaign is aimed at strengthening our people's love for their country and socialism, their spirit of proletarian internationalism and their revolutionary vigilance in various emulation movements to overfulfill the 1982 state plan, to build and defend the fatherland and to foil all schemes and acts of multifaceted sabotage being conducted by the Chinese expansionists and hegemonists in collusion with the U.S. imperialists and other reactionary forces. This campaign will last from now until September 1982 and will conclude on 21 September, the day when all countries will organize an International Day for Peace in accordance with the 36th UN General Assembly resolution.

The VFF once again expresses, on behalf of the Vietnamese people, vigorous support for the various peace initiatives of the Soviet Union and other fraternal socialist countries, especially the recent statement made by esteemed L.I. Brezhnev, who said: "The Soviet Union pledges not to be the first to use nuclear weapons." The VFF supports and will strengthen solidarity with national independence movements and movements for peace developing throughout the world. It supports the just cause of struggle of the Palestinian and Arab peoples against the Israeli aggressors, and wholeheartedly supports the three Indochinese countries' initiatives for peace and stability in the Southeast Asian region.

The meeting stressed: To cope with the present situation in which our country is faced with numerous difficulties in the economic and social spheres, and while our enemies -- the reactionaries in the Chinese leadership in collusion with the U.S. imperialists -- are frantically conducting a multifaceted war of sabotage, all strata of our people must enhance their traditional solidarity, strengthen their confidence in the clear-sighted leadership of the VCP, develop revolutionary heroism and their right to socialist collective mastery and strive to overcome difficulties in order to fulfill triumphantly the cause of national building and defense, thereby implementing the sacred testament of esteemed President Ho Chi Minh.

BRIEFS

YOUNG LABOR VOLUNTEER FORCE -- Hanoi, VNA, July 31 -- In the first seven months of this year, almost 5,000 young men and women in Ho Chi Minh City have joined the Young Labour Volunteer Force. AUSTRALIA

COMMENTS ON JAPAN-AUSTRALIA MINISTERIAL TALKS

BK310953 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 1110 GMT 30 Jul 82

[Excerpts] An important top-level meeting of Australian and Japanese ministers has concluded in Canberra. It was the seventh meeting of the Australia-Japan Ministerial Committee [AJMC], and while outwardly there was a very polite atmosphere on both sides, the message in the final speeches was very much to the point, as (John Lombard) reports from Canberra.

The Australian-Japan Ministerial Committee was set up following the visit to Japan in 1971 of the minister for trade and deputy prime minister, Doug Anthony. Because of the heavy interdependence between the two countries on trade it was thought there was a need for regular meetings at the highest possible ministerial level.

In keynote speeches, both Mr Street and his Japanese counterpart were quite blunt in discussing problems as they saw them in their bilateral relationship. Mr Street warned Japan that attempts to force raw material suppliers like Australia to bear the brunt of the economic downturn could endanger the security of long-term supply. There was a tendency during recession, he said, to press the supplying countries to bear temporary adjustments without sufficient regard to long-term development.

On the other hand, Mr Sakurauchi made it clear that Japan expected Australia to relax its import restrictions on manufactured goods in line with the spirit of proposal by the Prime Minister, Malcolm Fraser, to greatly reduce protection. Mr Street responded by saying Japan should examine restrictions it imposed on agricultural imports, and in this regard, Mr Street was clearly thinking of Australian beef export to Japan. But when Mr Street and Mr Sakurauchi came to speak at a press conference, they were rather more diplomatic in their comments. Mr Street:

[Begin recording] The meeting was held against the backdrop of a very difficult world economic situation and, as Mr Anthony said in the meeting, this makes this year's AJMC the most important one ever. Both sides agreed that there was a particular need for Australia and Japan to maintain a close dialogue. My discussions with Mr Sakurauchi covered East-West relations, the Middle East and a range of developments in the Asian and Pacific region, particularly Indochina. We noted that the prime ministers of both Australia and Japan will visit China shortly. We agreed on the importance of our relations with China, the direction of China's development and its (?trade and) world affairs. We also agreed that our regional policy gave high priority to the continuing security and development of the ASEAN countries and on our opposition to the Vietnamese presence in Cambodia. [end recording]

Of interest to the Australian side was the Japanese reading of the world economy. Mr Sakurauchi, speaking to the press conference through an interpreter, said Japan was trying to stimulate its domestic demand in an effort to avoid recession. And in so doing, he believed Japan could make some contribution to improving the global economy. He noted that recently there had been reported signs in the United States of a reduction in inflation and the lowering of interest rates. Mr Sakurauchi said that he believed that in the latter half of this year, there might be some economic upturn.

PAPUA NEW GUINEA

MICHAEL SOMARE ELECTED PRIME MINISTER

BK020805 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0500 GMT 2 Aug 82

There was one abstention. Mr Somare, who is Papua New Guinea's first prime minister after independence in 1975, leads the Pangu Party which will form a coalition with the United Party.

Earlier, the Parliament elected the independent member from Milne Bay, Mr Dennis Young, as speaker by 66 votes to 42. In the Papua New Guinea general elections last month, no party won an overall majority and the various parties had since been negotiating on a coalition.

'Caretaker' Cabinet Announced

[By Rowan Callick]

[Excerpt] Port Moresby, Aug 2 (AFP) -- Papua New Guinea's founding father Michael Thomas Somare was today returned to power as prime minister with a healthy 66-40 vote from parliament. The victory over his main rival Father John Momis, came in a parliamentary vote to elect a speaker and prime minister.

Mr Somare, 46, was prime minister from 1972, through independence from Australia in 1976 to March 1980, when he was ousted by Sir Julius Chan in a parliamentary vote of no confidence.

His Pangu Party scored heavily in the national election in June, winning 48 seats. His support today also included a number of independent members, and the six surviving members of the United Party, once the largest in the country.

Parliament will resume on Thursday afternoon, August 5, under new Speaker Dennis Young.

After his election, Mr Somare announced that a caretaker ministry of seven would run the country for two weeks until he was ready to announce a full cabinet.

The caretaker government is expected to be as follows:

Mr Somare -- police, defence, national planning.
Roy Evara, United Party leader sacked for disloyalty from the cabinets of both Mr Somare and Sir Julius, in the past -- works and education.
Martin Tovadek, United Party, health minister under Sir Julius -- health, public utilities.
Paias Wingti Pangu, likely to be Mr. Somare's deputy -- media, primary industry, transport, labour and culture.
Phillip Bouraga, former head of the prime minister's department and police chief, a pro-Somare independent -- finance decentralisation and environment.
Rabbie Namaliu, former head of the public service, Pangu -- minerals and energy, foreign affairs.
Matthew Bendumb, long-standing Pangu M.P. -- lands, justice, commerce, urban development, community and family services.

"I have stood in the position before and accepted the confidence of this parliament, though somehow I feel this time it is different," Mr Somare said after his victory today.

"Two years ago I was removed from office by a motion of no-confidence on the floor of this house. It was only made possible by the combined coalition of five parties. It took five jackals to pull down the Pangu lion. But they did it, and I accepted it with grace," he added. "But although I accepted defeat in parliament on that day, it was not at the hands of the voters. I reminded the members that when the time came, I would return with a mandate from the people. That day has come. I never lost the confidence of the people," he said.

Mr Somare called upon the new opposition to "lay aside the bitterness and rancour that has marred the so-called struggle for power in the last few weeks."

MOKHTAR-GHAZALI TALKS ON THACH VISIT REPORTED

BK310913 Jakarta ANTARA in English 0824 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] Jakarta, July 31 (ANTARA) -- Foreign Minister Mokhtar Kusumaatmaja has said that nobody should cherish the hope for the solution of the Kampuchean problem overnight. But clearly there are already some activities, namely that both parties are reacting to each other, the foreign minister said, responding to questions posed by newsmen at the Foreign Office at Pejambon Friday.

The foreign minister further pointed out that his meeting with Malaysian Foreign Minister Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie Thursday evening was to listen to his Malaysian counterpart's explanations on the results of his discussions with Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach.

The Ghazali-Thach meeting, Foreign Minister Mokhtar said, went smoothly and showed a change in the Vietnamese attitude. Most noteworthy of the Vietnamese change in attitude is on its presence in Kampuchea, the minister said.

Vietnamese military pull out from Kampuchea could now be discussed, but Vietnam appeared not willing to effect a total withdrawal of its troops as long as the imminent Chinese threat still remained, the minister said. But the Vietnamese-Chinese problem is a problem between both parties concerned, he added.

On the attitude of ASEAN towards the Kampuchean problem, the minister said we are not shifting an inch from our original stand. ASEAN wants a peaceful solution of the formation of a Kampuchean Government in accordance with the will of the people. So far coexistence is out of the question due to the unjust behaviour of Vietnam, Minister Mokhtar said. Vietnam should acknowledge that the Kampuchean people also have the right to freedom, Mokhtar added.

The Indonesian foreign minister was further of the view that Vietnamese military pull-out from Kampuchea did not constitute a positive change. It is only the initial symptom of a process of changes, he added.

Ghazali Remarks on Kampuchea

BK310804 Jakarta ANTARA in English 0721 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Excerpt] Jakarta, July 31 (ANTARA) -- To allow the Cambodian problem to remain unsettled would cause the longer the greater [as received] trouble to the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), Malaysian Foreign Minister Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie declared here Friday.

The main trouble accruing to ASEAN has been the influx of Cambodian refugees into Thailand, Ghazali said, adding that actually not only ASEAN, but also Vietnam, China and the Soviet Union get their share of troubles from the problem.

The Cambodian problem, therefore, has to be brought to a solution as soon as possible he stressed. He further told a press conference attended also by Minister of Information Ali Murtopo that the Cambodian problem should be solved politically, and not militarily. For this purpose, ASEAN has tabled a resolution to the United Nations calling for giving the Cambodian people the right to form their own government.

Ghazali continued by saying following failure to enter into negotiations with the Heng Samrin regime, steps were taken to set up a coalition government. He expressed confidence that the coalition government headed by President Norodom Sihanouk offered a new alternative for a Cambodian solution. Ghazali noted that in efforts to seek a Cambodian settlement ASEAN and tried [as received] to bring Vietnam into the picture. He said he now saw a great change taking place in the Vietnamese attitude from its stance three or four years ago.

Speaking about his meeting a few days ago in Kuala Lumpur with Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach he said the Vietnamese foreign minister took the occasion of the meeting to describe to him Vietnam's scenario of the Cambodian situation.

Ghazali also said the Vietnamese military pullout from Vietnam was not a complete withdrawal, but only involved personnel Vietnam appeared willing to effect a total withdrawal of troops only after the Chinese threat was disposed of. [sentence as received] According to Ghazali, in facing the Chinese threat Vietnam is placed before the alternatives, either to cooperate with China and abandon ASEAN or the other way round.

What Vietnam also is concerned about is an eventual return to power of the Khmer Rouge in Cambodia after a total Vietnamese troops withdrawal. Ghazali further said he had told Co Thach that ASEAN actually was assisting it from foreign troops. [sentence as received] With the Cambodian problem settled, all countries in the region are likely to come to Vietnam's aid to defend its sovereignty, Ghazali asserted.

On the problem of the threat from China, Ghazali noted that China had for a long time been aiding underground communist movements in Malaysia as well as in other ASEAN member countries. We can understand that Vietnam, too, has been under pressure from the same danger he said. Ghazali was of the view that at some future time China would try to grab Vietnam, Cambodia and ASEAN but not now. To cope with this possibility Ghazali stressed the need for ASEAN to strengthen its defences, to enable it to repulse any Chinese expansionist moves in 15 or 20 years from now.

At the press meeting Ghazali strongly denied that ASEAN had accepted the Ho Chi Minh City statement implying a recognition of the Heng Samrin Regime. ASEAN has never declared acceptance of the statement, Ghazali stressed adding that the International Conference on Cambodia ASEAN has been striving for is based on th ASEAN plan, and not on the Ho Chi Minh City concept.

He also affirmed that the next ASEAN foreign minister conference would be held in Bangkok August 7 and not on August 5-6 as earlier scheduled. But he said he was still in the dark as to the main topic to be discussed at the meeting.

PRESS EDITORIALS URGE SIHANOUK-HENG SAMRIN TALKS

INDONESIA TIMES 26 July

BK310707 Jakarta THE INDONESIA TIMES in English 26 Jul 82 p 2

[Editorial: "An Important Point for the ASEAN FMs Conference"]

[Text] One of the most important points to be discussed by the coming ASEAN ministers' conference to be held in Bangkok the 3rd week of next month will be the latest development of the Kampuchean question after the formation of the Kampuchean coalition government. In this connection, the daily KOMPAS of the 24th of July in its editorial "Vietnam, Kampuchea, ASEAN" said that with the participation of Prince Norodom Sihanouk in the coalition government, the coalition has muscle which has to be reckoned with by Vietnam. Vietnam and ASEAN have differences. But both have a similar basic attitude: Both sides do not wish the region of Southeast Asia, its mainland and archipelagoes, to be under the hegemony of one of the giant countries, the People's Republic of China, the Soviet Union and the United States. This should enable both Vietnam and ASEAN to foster an independent national authority in Kampuchea. Is it not an acceptable way out?

Now there is a dialogue between Vietnam and ASEAN. Efforts must also be made to start a dialogue between Sihanouk and Heng Samrin. If a political settlement is to be achieved, this is the right approach. To let the question drag on, will invite the hegemony of giant powers in the region.

We advocate here that the ASEAN foreign ministers' meeting as well as Vietnam take this pertinent point into serious consideration.

KOMPAS 24 July

BK011509 Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 24 Jul 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Vietnam, Kampuchea, ASEAN"]

[Excerpts] At the beginning, there were no problems between Vietnam and the Southeast Asian countries which are united under ASEAN. The victory and the unification of Vietnam was expected to turn a new page, namely, national development based on nationalism which was not designed for the big power interest. The situation changed when Vietnam became involved in the Kampuchean issue. The Kampuchean issue has several dimensions, Vietnam's support for the liberation of the Kampuchean people form the Pol Pot regime's cruel oppression was welcomed. But, the presence of Vietnamese troops, estimated at between 150,000 to 200,000 was seen in a different light. This was considered to be a military intervention in another country's internal affairs. Such a massive military presence cannot be accepted, for it could set a precedent that could be seen as a threat to other Southeast Asian countries.

Vietnam's argument that the presence of its troops in Kampuchea is to deter the threat of the PRC will not be sufficient justification of Vietnam's position and it definitely cannot create trust on the part of the ASEAN countries. If, historically, Vietnam had been worried about the Chinese hegemonistic influence, Kampuchea also, historically, worried about Vietnamese hegemonism. The Kampuchean people's feelings toward Vietnam are similar to those of the Vietnamese people toward China. There is another implication, ASEAN countries are worried that Vietnam's concern for China might lead to an increasingly powerful and potential Soviet military presence in the Southeast Asian region.

By coincidence or by chance, the formation of the Kampuchean coalition government, which is supported by ASEAN, is having a positive effect. But, does that mean that militarily the coalition government will be able to expel the Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea? Militarily it will not be possible. There is a need to seek more political cards.

We should not view Khieu Samphan as a figure who represents the Pol Pot regime, nor should we view Son Sann as a representative of the rightwing faction. We should view Prince Sihanouk as a Kampuchean nationalist figure, who has made his attitude clear during the Kampuchean war. Now, he is close to China and is even closer to North Korea. This may be due to circumstances or it might also be that he has already abandoned his independent nationalistic attitude. The coalition would have a different weight if only Khieu Samphan and Son Sann were taking part, but, since Prince Sihanouk is also in the coalition, politically the coalition could be reckoned with. It could also even be made an instrument for seeking a settlement of the problem, because both Vietnam and ASEAN have a similar attitude. Both sides do not want the Southeast Asian region, the mainland and islands alike, to come under the hegemony of one of the big powers.

However, the common attitude should have been able to lay a foundation acceptable to both Vietnam and ASEAN for the development of an independent national power in Kampuchea. Is that not the acceptable way for a way out? Under the present political reality, as far as the figures who are involved in the problem are concerned is it not Prince Sihanouk who can still be considered able to move and lead the development?

There had been dialogues between Vietnam and ASEAN, not as a bloc but on the individual level. Will it then be possible to attempt a dialogue between Prince Sihanouk and Heng Samrin? This might be the course for rapprochement rather than through a military settlement. If the Kampuchean problem is allowed to drag on, it will not only poison the relations between Vietnam and its neighbor countries, but it will also undermine the regional strength in this region.

This will tend to intensify the presence and the hegemonic influence of the big powers, which none of us desire.

Economic Issues Discussed

BK021513 Kuala Lumpur Domestic Service in English 1130 GMT 2 Aug 82

[Text] Malaysia expressed the need to conduct a proper study on commodity trading in retaining fairer prices for commodities. The issue was raised by Prime Minister Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir Mohamed during his talks with his Australian counterpart Mr Malcolm Fraser, in Kuala Lumpur today.

The prime minister points out that while prices of manufactured goods are fixed at the level bearing to the cost of production, in the case of commodities this is not done. It is fixed arbitrarily by brokers. The secretary general of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Tan Sri Zakaria Ali, told newsmen this after the meeting between the two prime ministers. He said trade and economic issues dominated the discussions which were held at two levels. A restricted session was followed by a preliminary one attended by ministers and officials. Political issues are most likely to be discussed at the round of talks tomorrow afternoon.

In reviewing the current trade recession, Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir stressed on the need for fairer rules of trade by reducing trade restrictions and protectionism. The developed world should also provide greater access to exports from developing countries. To this end he suggests that the industrialized world should not retain their low technology and labor intensive industries. They should instead relocate them in developing countries with suitable world materials and manpower.

The prime minister also says Malaysia and Australia can identify areas in which they can cooperate on bilateral basis on the relocation of suitable Australian industry to Malaysia. Some products can be processed more cheaply in this country for the Australian market in view of the availability of raw materials and low cost of labor.

Radio Commentary

BK020945 Kuala Lumpur International Service in English 0800 GMT 2 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Relations between Malaysia and Australia are as good as relations between countries can be in the present context of international relations. Little discord is expected in the talks between the Australian prime minister, Mr Malcolm Fraser, and the Malaysian prime minister, Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir Mohamed.

The talks between the two leaders are expected to be wide-ranging, but special emphasis will be given to economic cooperation and trade between the two countries. While trade between Malaysia and Australia has tripled since 1976, the trade balance is still very much in Australia's favor. Last year, for instance, Australia's exports to Malaysia, mainly metals, sugar and wheat, were worth over 1 billion ringgit, while Malaysia's exports to Australia, largely timber, wood, natural rubber and petroleum, were worth about 430 million ringgit. Mr Fraser is likely to be persuaded to open wider the door of the Australian market to Malaysian exports, especially manufactured and semimanufactured goods, to reduce the trade imbalance. It is also envisaged that Australia will be called upon to invest more in Malaysia.

Also likely to be featured in the talks are the Kampuchean issue, its coalition government and the Indochinese refugee problem. Malaysia is likely to call on Australia to give its support to the newly formed coalition government. As for the Indochinese refugee problem, Australia will be called upon to maintain its intake level. Last year it took in 15,000.

It is also expected that Malaysia will show its appreciation to Australia's recently adopted open-door policy in education, which enables Malaysians to study in Australian secondary schools. More and more students are going to Australia to further their studies because of the high cost of education in other countries. It is also to be hoped that it will not change its policy and increase the cost of education unreasonably.

As can be seen, while there is much to be discussed in the talks between the two leaders, there is also a minimum of outstanding problems which would cause disagreement and this would go a long way to further strengthen the existing close ties between Australia and Malaysia.

DATUK MUSA DENOUNCES MALAYSIAN COMMUNISTS

[Text] The government will not bow to pressure from any organization in or outside the country which criticized the government as being unfair in detaining those involved in communist activities. The deputy prime minister, Datuk Musa Hitam, says these organizations must also realize that the Malaysian Government will not compromise with the communists. They must also realize that the communists had carried out various activities, which have killed or maimed many Malaysians.

He made this clear at a thanksgiving gathering organized by the Ulu Muda Umno [United Malays National Organization] Division in (Sik) today. Datuk Musa said the government does not take lightly the influence of communists who are always waiting for the opportunity to carry out their terrorist activities. The communists had used various tactics and ways, including the use of religion, to influence the Muslims. Unfortunately, there are people who are not aware that they are being made use of by the communists. Datuk Musa stresses that the government will not allow the communists to gain power in the country.

EDUCATION MINISTRY: 'NO INTENTION TO CHANGE' TEXTBOOKS

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 5, KYODO -- The Japanese Education Ministry has no intention to "correct" revised social studies textbooks as demanded by China and South Korea, ministry officials indicated Thursday.

In a meeting between the vice ministers of the education and foreign ministries held at a Tokyo hotel, Tetsuo Misumi of the Education Ministry said his department holds no intention to change the textbooks as China and South Korea have demanded in official protests to the Foreign Ministry. The meeting was first between the two ministries since Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki ordered the issue solved Wednesday.

Meeting sources said Vice Foreign Minister Ryozo Sunobe took a flexible stand on the issue and indicated it would take some time for the two ministries to adjust their views on the question which threatens to sour relations between Japan and several Asian countries.

Meanwhile, at an Upper House Education Committee meeting, Education Minister Heiji Ogawa said he agreed with Chief Cabinet Secretary Kiichi Miyazawa that the South Korean protest is understandable, but a senior Education Ministry bureaucrat reiterated the ministry decision not to change the texts. Isao Suzuki, head of the Elementary and Secondary Education Bureau, told Upper House members the ministry has no intention of rewriting the texts as called for by China and South Korea.

Sakurauchi, Ogawa To Meet 'Soon'

[Excerpts] Tokyo, Aug 4, KYODO -- Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi said Wednesday he will meet Education Minister Heiji Ogawa soon to discuss the growing controversy over Japanese school textbooks' descriptions of Japan's military actions in China and South Korea before and during World War II. "I will talk with Mr. Ogawa and try to settle the issue without delay," Sakurauchi said at a meeting of government and ruling Liberal-Democratic Party (LDP) leaders.

The meeting followed a formal protest lodged by South Korea Tuesday against what it called "distorted descriptions" in the history textbooks of Japan's militarism in Korea during its 1910-45 colonial rule of the country.

Other participants in the meeting included Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, LDP Secretary General Susumu Nikaido and former Education Minister Toshiki Kaifu.

All shared the concern over where the textbook dispute is leading them, LDP sources said. They said Nikaido is worried that there is no consensus among LDP Diet members over what should be done about the controversy. He did not elaborate, but there are some pro-China LDP members of Parliament who support the Beijing government in the current dispute.

The sources said a growing number of LDP parliamentarians now say the Education Ministry should have kept the term "invasion" alive in the high school history textbooks for use beginning next school year in April 1983. The view is shared by senior Foreign Ministry officials and members of a powerful pro-Seoul parliamentarians group, the sources said. But they added that such action will face strong resistance from conservative members of the ruling party. Therefore, the sources said, they ruled out the possibility of an early settlement of the controversy despite Suzuki's request at the meeting for joint efforts by the government and the party to end the controversy.

Link to ROK Loan Talks

OW050303 Toyko KYODO in English 0237 GMT 5 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Tokyo, Aug 5, KYODO -- A high-ranking official of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI) expressed fears Wednesday night that a final settlement of a year-long Japan-South Korea loan issue would inevitably be delayed further.

The official, who declined to be named, said this is due to the growing controversy over Japanese school textbooks allegedly distorting Japanese military actions in Korea before and during World War II. He was the first senior Japanese Government official to speak about the possible linkage between the textbook controversy and the loan issue. The Japanese Government plans to separate the two issues with South Korea but Seoul is expressing great displeasure over Tokyo's handling of the textbook issue.

MITI 'FLATLY DENIES' DRAFTING BROCK LETTER

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 5, KYODO -- Controversy has flared up on the political front over whether or not U.S. Trade Representative William E. Brock's letter seeking easier access to the Japanese market for American farm produce was "made in Japan." Key government offices involved were apparently divided on the issue, with the Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI) flatly denying it and the Foreign Ministry cautiously avoiding comment at a recent series of parliamentary debate.

There has been speculation that MITI drafted the Brock letter in an attempt to soften strained trade relations with the United States over industrial products by shifting attention to farm produce. Brock handed the letter to Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurachi at a ministerial meeting of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) held in Paris last May, government sources said. The letter reportedly included a draft of Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki's statement on Japan's second package of market-opening measures at the meeting.

Answering questions at the Upper House's Agriculture, Forestry and Fishery Committee session, a MITI official said "there was no such plotting" by the ministry.

Shinji Fukukawa, director general of MITI's International Trade Administration Bureau, said the ministry had phoned the U.S. trade representative office to brief it on Suzuki's speech, adding that might have been reflected in the Brock letter. Fukukawa later told a Lower House committee session MITI made the phone call in an effort to help internationally publicize Japan's market-opening efforts. He admitted the contents of the Suzuki statement were broadly identical with those of the Brock letter, including a reference to the need for increased imports of farm produce.

A Foreign Ministry official told the Upper House committee meeting "it is not appropriate to answer" the question. "We cannot say 'yes or no' because the American side has its own thinking and position," added Hiroshi Fukada, director general of the ministry's Economic Affairs Bureau. "I did not know MITI had phoned the U.S. side about the question," Fukada said. "It is regrettable MITI did not inform us beforehand."

The Brock letter was a personal one addressed to Shintaro Abe, minister of international trade and industry, political sources said. The question persists inside the government, with Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Minister Kichiro Tazawa querying Abe if MITI was really involved, they said. Parliamentary questioning is also expected to go on amid opposition moves to seek submission of the controversial letter, they added.

INDIRA GANDHI ARRIVES FOR 2-DAY VISIT

ABE: AUSTRALIA, THAILAND SUPPORT JAPAN TRADE TIES

[Excerpts] Tokyo, Aug 4, KYODO -- Australia and Thailand expressed their support for maintaining and enhancing free trade during recent high-level meetings with Japanese officials, International Trade and Industry Minister Shintaro Abe said Wednesday.

Abe, who returned from a tour of the two countries Tuesday night, said in a news conference that Australian leaders supported his initiative for a dialogue between oil producing and importing countries. Both Australian and Japanese Cabinet ministers discussed effective utilization of natural resources and investment, industrial cooperation and other matters during the Canberra conference. Abe said that the Japanese Government is opposed to Australia's plans to restrict steel imports to help salvage the ailing local industry.

DEFENSE AGENCY CHIEF ITO ON BUILDUP PROGRAM

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 4, KYODO -- Defense Agency Chief Soichiro Ito Wednesday declared that it does not intend to review the present national defense buildup program to meet demands of the U.S. Government. And he hinted that Japan would notify the Pentagon that it could not improve its defense power beyond the limits of the present national defense program.

Ito made his remarks in reply to questions by opposition Dietmen at the Upper House's Ad Hoc Committee on National Security, in connection with the five-year defense buildup program covering 1983-87, which was recently approved by the National Defense Council chaired by Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki.

Ito said the most pressing task for the Defense Agency is to fill the gap between the present defense capability and those goals prescribed in the national defense program outline. Thus, he believed it was not necessary to reconsider the present national defense program outline. Ito also said his agency would explain to the Pentagon that Japan would do its best to meet new circumstances, but it could not cope with additional defense buildup requests by the U.S. authorities. Japan and the U.S. defense officials will confer in Hawaii from August 30 to exchange views on national security affairs.

Haruo Natsume, director general of the Defense Agency's Defense Bureau, said at the Upper House committee meeting that Japan would explain that it could not improve its defense capability beyond the ceiling imposed by the national defense program outline. Natsume also said he would clearly notify the Pentagon authorities what Japan would be able to accomplish with its own resource, and what Japan could not accomplish. He emphasized that he would reject and U.S. demands that Japanese forces ensure the security of the sea lanes stretching 1,000 nautical miles from the Japanese coastline. But he said he would explain at the meeting that Japan would do its utmost to accomplish the present five-year defense buildup program.

NODONG SINMUN RAPS GEN SCOTT'S 'PROVOCATION'

[NODONG SINMUN 5 August commentary: "An Open Scheme of War Provocation"]

[Text] The U.S. imperialists' war lunacy is growing every day. According to a report, Scott, deputy commander of the South Korea-U.S. Combined Forces Command, at a recent seminar on Cheju Island openly blared that the U.S. forces in South Korea would be promptly involved in a war without congressional sanction in case of an emergency and that, for the maintenance of peace on the Korean Peninsula, they would not pull out. Thus, they preposterously provoked us.

His absurd remarks, which were made at a time when the U.S. imperialists and South Korean warmongers are continuously conspiring for war by frequently making mutual visits and waging war rackets, should not be overlooked.

The U.S. imperialists are consistently pursuing a policy for realizing their ambition for dominating all of Korea by permanently seizing South Korea as their colony and military base and by making it as a stepping-stone. Scott's utterances, demonstrating only the heinous nature as aggressor and warmonger, openly disclosed the sinister scheme of the U.S. imperialists to realize their vicious design by starting another war of aggression in Korea, come what may.

The U.S. imperialists are more persistently adhering to adventurous war maneuvers in South Korea. As openly stated by the leaders of the U.S. imperialists, there are tens of thousands of well-armed U.S. troops and several millions of puppet regular army and homeland reserve forces in South Korea. Not satisfied with this, the U.S. imperialists are increasing U.S. troops in South Korea and reinforcing the puppet army and are continuously arming them with modern lethal weapons, including nuclear weapons.

Having prepared various war plans, including a plan for nuclear warfare, they are ceaselessly waging military exercise rackets to perfect these plans. It is a well-known fact that the U.S. imperialists have decided to transfer weapons to South Korea without congressional approval in case of an emergency on the Korean Peninsula, and they have made preparations to bring in even the aggression forces present in the vicinity of the Korean Peninsula and on the U.S. mainland.

In particular, the U.S. imperialists are scheming to inveigle the Japanese reactionaries actively into a Korean war. Studies of an emergency case in the Far East are being hastened. Not without reason did Scott blurt out that Japan might give airborne support in case of a war in Korea. When the U.S. imperialists cry for prompt involvement and so on, they make it plain that they are watching for an opportunity, having actually made all preparations to ingite a war in Korea.

Facts indicate that the danger of aggression in Korea comes from the South, not from the North.

Explaining the mission of the U.S. forces occupying South Korea to preserve peace, the U.S. imperialists complain about someone's southward invasion and provocations. But this is a brigandish protestation. It is well known even to a mere child that the U.S. troops occupying South Korea are aggression troops for gratifying the U.S. imperialists' aggressive desires.

Today the South Korean people are well aware that the U.S. imperialists are not helpers and protectors but the ringleader causing all disasters and misfortunes, trampling underfoot their national sovereignty. They have risen in the anti-U.S. struggle by upholding the slogan "Yankee go home!"

The U.S. imperialists' talk about peace and someone's southward invasion and provocations is a crafty ruse to justify their schemes to provoke another war in Korea and their South Korean occupation policy and to appease the daily growing anti-U.S. opinion at home and abroad. They are the very war-maniacs and heinous aggressors seeking to start a new war in Korea. If another war is started in Korea by the U.S. imperialists, it could easily extend to other areas and will cause a grave danger to peace in Korea and in Asia.

To say nothing of the Korean people, the world's peace-loving people are unanimously demanding that, for peace and the peaceful reunification of Korea, the U.S. imperialists withdraw from South Korea, giving up their heinous design for provoking another war.

If the U.S. imperialists continue moving ahead on the reckless road of war, running counter to the trend of the times, they will only expedite their own downfall. They must stop their maneuvers for a new war and withdraw from South Korea without delay, taking along all their aggressive weapons, including nuclear weapons.

VRPR Scores Remarks

The occupation of South Korea by the U.S. forces is the source of all the nation's misfortunes and sufferings, the basic obstacle to the independent and peaceful reunification of the country and a dangerous factor which may lead to the recurrence of war. Therefore, the war maniac's clamoring that the United States will not withdraw U.S. troops from South Korea in the interest of peace on the Korean Peninsula is indeed intolerable. The U.S. imperialists can by no means justify their occupation of South Korea nor can they conceal their true nature as aggressors.

The U.S. imperialists must immediately withdraw U.S. forces and all military equipment from South Korea as unanimously demanded by our people and the peace-loving people of the world.

RPR SPOKESMAN DENOUNCES PUSAN ARSON TRIAL

SK050946 Pyongyang KCNA in English 0814 GMT 5 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 5 (KCNA) -- A spokesman of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in South Korea stresses that the unwarranted penalties inflicted upon persons involved in the fire at the "American Cultural Centre" must be immediately revoked and they be all set free unconditionally, according to Radio "Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification."

In a statement issued on August 2 in denunciation of the Chon Tu-hwan military fascist clique for demanding capital punishment and heavy penalties for 16 persons involved in the fire at the "American Cultural Centre" in Pusan, the spokesman brands this fascist outrage dictated by the White House as a desperate reactionary offensive to stamp out the consciousness of national independence and anti-U.S. patriotic forces in South Korea and prop up the shaking colonial military fascist rule and an unpardonable crime against young patriots of the nation.

Persons who set fire at the "American Cultural Centre" are patriots who took the road of the righteous anti-U.S. national salvation at the risk of their lives with a burning desire to restore the dignity and sovereignty of the nation, it notes. It says that the arson at the "American Cultural Centre" in Pusan was an entirely just act dictated by the will and desire of the fellow countrymen for independence.

The statement says: It was the United States that plunged our people into a sea of blood for the mere reason that they resisted the colonial military fascist rule and aspired after freedom and liberation, and it is also the U.S. imperialists who instigated the puppets to inflict capital punishment and heavy penalties upon persons involved in the arson at the "American Cultural Centre" and supress and stamp out the mounting anti-U.S. resistance movement. It has been clearly proved repeatedly that as long as there are the U.S. imperialists, our people's struggle for independence and democracy will continuously be stifled and, therefore, unless the U.S. imperialist colonial rule is brought to an end, it is impossible to realize the sovereignty of our nation, the democratisation of society and the reunification of the country.

Noting that the fascist suppression of persons involved in the arson at the "American Cultural Centre" showed once again to the whole world the true color of the traitor Chon Tu-hwan, a special class watchdog of the United States, the statement says, and stresses: No matter how desperately the traitor Chon Tu-hwan may resort to treachery and fascism, he cannot quench the flames of the nationwide anti-U.S. resistance or escape a miserable end.

GFTUK DENOUNCES CONTROL DATA CLOSURE

[Text] Pyongyang, August 5 (KCNA) -- The Central Committee of the General Federation of Trade Unions of Korea [GFTUK] issued a statement on August 4 in connection with the U.S. imperialists' closure of the Seoul branch factory of the U.S. Control Data company.

The statement says: The Central Committee of the General Federation of Trade Unions of Korea pungently denounces with surging national indignation the U.S. imperialists' brigandish step of closing the Seoul branch factory of the Control Data company, considering it a crafty scheme to stamp out the ever mounting sentiments of the South Korean workers against U.S. imperialism and for independence and prevent the spread of the anti-U.S. struggle.

The closure of the Seoul branch factory of the Control Data company this time was a trick worked out by the U.S. imperialists in a planned way with the puppets. The responsibility for it does not rest with the South Korean workers.

This notwithstanding, the U.S. imperialists are distorting the situation, talking about the "worsening of management," to make it appear as if the responsibility for the closure of the factory rested with its workers as well as with the Urban Industrial Missionary Association which "agitated for strike and slow-down" and incited "labour-management dispute" among the workers. This is nothing but a sophism designed to deceive public opinion and justify the suppression of the South Korean labour movement.

None of the female workers of the Seoul branch factory of the Control Data company have obstructed the management activity of the factory or involved themselves in its closure. They only demanded a wage hike, protesting against the payment of starvation wages less than a quarter of the miminum living cost by the factory side and, indignant at the unreasonable dismissal of leading trade union members who spoke for their unanimous will, demanded their reinstatement.

These just demands of the workers of the Seoul branch factory of the Control Data company are a legitimate resistance against the U.S. imperialists' colonial exploitation and national insult.

At the instigation of the U.S. imperialists, the Chon Tu-hwan group insulted the struggle of the workers of the Seoul branch factory of the Control Data company as an indiscreet one and groundlessly described it as one "instigated" by the Urban Industrial Missionary Association "inclining to the left" and even staged the farce of holding a "government"-sponsored "denunciation meeting."

Such acts of the U.S. imperialists and their lackeys seek the sinister aim of threatening the South Korean workers, alienating the workers from the Urban Industrial Missionary Association to prevent the spread of the struggle against U.S. imperialism and for independence among the workers, the basic class of society with strong fighting capacity.

Demanding the U.S. imperialists to take their hands of aggression and interference off South Korea and go back without delay to their den, the statement stresses: The Chon Tu-hwan group, betraying the nation and suppressing fellow countrymen to be a dirty lackey of U.S. imperialism, must give up the foolish attempt to prolong its remaining days under the wings of its master, discontinue suppressing the workers at once and step down from power of treachery.

The South Korean workers should hold high the banner of anti-U.S. independence, rejecting the U.S. imperialists' occupation of South Korea and policy of colonial plunder, and more valiantly struggle against U.S. imperialism and Chon Tu-hwan.

MINJU CHOSON Commentary

[Text] Pyongyang, August 5 (KCNA) -- The closure of the electronic computer company, a branch factory of the Control Data company of the United States in South Korea, is intended to threaten the South Korean people and bar their daily growing anti-U.S. struggle for independence, says MINJU CHOSON in a commentary today.

Noting that the South Korean workers hired at the company had waged a just struggle for their right to existence and democratic freedom against harsh exploitation and oppression by the U.S. company side, the author of the commentary says: The company side, far from meeting the just demand of the workers, persecuted and suppressed them, in collusion with the puppets, and closed the factory in the end. They sought in this the heinous aim of barring the just struggle of the South Korean people against U.S. imperialism and for independence and for the right to existence.

Frightened by the sentiments of anti-U.S. struggle rapidly growing among the workers, the U.S. imperialists closed the branch factory of the Control Data company, seeking to threaten the existence of the workers of the factory, put down their anti-U.S. sentiments and, at the same time, cow the workers of other factories into refraining from the anti-U.S. struggle.

But, with no means or methods can the U.S. imperialists arrest the South Korean people's anti-U.S. struggle for independence or keep them in colonial slavery for an indefinite period.

The South Korean people will not yield to the threat and blackmail of the U.S. imperialists and never stop their anti-U.S. struggle.

A guard of honour of the Korean People's Army was standing at the grave of Kim Hyong-chik and Kang Pan-sok.

Present at the wreath-laying ceremony were Comrades Yi Chong-ok, Pak Song-chol, O Kuk-yol, Yun Ki-pok, Kong Chin-tae, Chong Chun-ki, Chon Kyong-hui, So Yun-sok, Hwang Chang-yop, Ho Chong-suk, Hong Si-hak, Hong Song-yong, Kim Tu-yong, Kim Chang-chu and Kim Pok-sin and other cadres and working people in the city.

Wreaths were laid in the name of the Central Committee of the Workers Party of Korea, the Central People's Committee and the Administration Council and other party and power bodies, economic organs, public organisations and organs of science, education, culture and arts, public health and the press, People's Army units, factories and cooperative farms. The participants observed a moment's silence in memory of Kang Pan-sok. Wreaths were also laid beneath the statue of Kang Pan-sok at the Chilgol historic site of revolution. Delegations of the General Association of Korean Residents in Japan (Chongnyon) and a home-visiting group of compatriots in Japan also placed a wreath yesterday at the grave of Kim Hyong-chik and Kang Pan-sok.

Chong Chun-ki Speech

[Report on memorial address by Chong Chun-ki, alternate member of the Political Bureau of the KWP Central Committee and vice premier of the State Administration Council, at 31 July Pyongyang meeting]

[Text] Comrade Chong Chun-ki said: Today, when a new history of grandeur and prosperity is being brilliantly unfolded on the land of the fatherland and all the people are vigorously waging the general advance movement to achieve the task of modeling the whole society on the chuche idea, we are greeting the 50th anniversary of the death of Kang Pan-sok, who was an immortal and indomitable communist revolutionary fighter and an excellent leader of the movement for the emancipation of women of our country.

He said: Marking this day, our people are recalling with deep emotion the brilliant revolutionary victory of Kang Pan-sok and her immortal revolutionary achievements and are pervaded with infinite reverence toward her.

He continued: Kang Pan-sok was born in 21 April 1892 in Chilgol, Hari, Yongsan-myon, Taedong County, South Pyongan Province.

Growing up in a progressive and patriotic family under a revolutionary influence in the period of national sufferings, during which the land of the fatherland was mercilessly trampled underfoot by the Japanese imperialist aggressors and the misfortunes of colonial slavery were imposed upon our people, Kan Pan-sok cultivated a high degreee of anti-Japanese patriotism and a noble and staunch character from her early days and stoutly pulled through a storm of life and a road of struggle, undergoing all sorts of sufferings in a stateless nation.

Following the arduous road of revolutionary struggle of Kim Hyong-chik, an outstanding leader of our country's anti-Japanese national liberation movement, she actively assisted in his revolutionary activity in defiance of the brutal persecution of the Japanese imperialists, fostered her sons into great revolutionary fighters and let them embark on the glorious road of revolution.

Kang Pan-sok aided in the revolutionary activity of the great leader with boundless devotion and devotedly struggled for the liberation of the fatherland and the freedom and happiness of the people, upholding and following the revolutionary cause of the leader.

Even during the arduous period when the fascist repression of the Japanese imperialists was unprecedentedly unscrupulous, she surmounted all sorts of trials with infinite loyalty to the revolutionary cause and faith in certain victory and undauntedly struggled until the last moment of her life. Thus she performed great feats which will shine forever in the history of struggle of the nation.

Indeed,the life of Kang Pan-sok was the noble life of an enthusiastic communist revolutionary fighter who struggled, devoting all to the sacred revolutionary cause for the liberation of the fatherland, the interest of the people and the genuine emancipation of women.

He said: As a dependable revolutionary comrade of Kim Hyong-chik, an outstanding leader of the anti-Japanese national liberation movement of our country, she actively helped Kim Hong-chik with boundless devotion and utmost sincerity in his revolutionary activity, negotiating the road of the arduous Korean revolution at its dawn together with him during the change of the course of struggle from the nationalist movement to the communist movement.

He continued: Deeply recognizing that the future of the country and the destiny of the nation was directly connected with his sacred revolutionary struggle for national liberation Kang Pan-sok defended the revolutionary faith of Kim Hyong-chik and his revolutionary task from the persecution and hindrance of enemies and kindly helped his revolutionary comrades day and night.

She volunteered to become a guard when Kim Hong-chik held a secret meeting with his comrades and devotedly performed difficult and risky secret liaison and weapon carrying missions. When Kim Hyong-chik was arrested by the Japanese imperialist police and waged the struggle in jail, she took over his work and directly carried it out.

Indeed, reflected in the immortal achievements of Kim Hyong-chik in the history of anti-Japanese national liberation of our country are the warm sincerity and devoted struggle of Kang Pan-sok, who devotedly helped his revolutionary activity, surmounting all sorts of hardships in life and trials in struggle.

He said: Kang Pan-sok was the mother of Korea who made every effort to help the respected and beloved Comrade Kim Il-song in his revolutionary activities, standing in the van of the Korean revolution to achieve the cause on national liberation.

He said: Kang Pan-sok devoted all of her efforts to bring up the respected and beloved Comrade Kim Il-song into a peerless hero and outstanding leader of the revolution who would save the destiny of the country and nation, carrying forward the will of his father at any cost.

He continued: Regarding it as her own joy and rewarding life to bring up sons into great youths struggling for the country and the people, Kang Pan-sok even did needlework and laundry for pay while living under extreme conditions and suffering sickness so as to earn school expenses for her sons. Thus she made every possible sincere effort to help in their studies.

Kang Pan-sok's love for her son was precisely the infinite noble and lofty love with which she brought up the bright future of the fatherland and the great sun of the nation and a fervent love for the whole nation.

Under such warm and noble love and deep care of Kang Pan-sok, the respected and beloved leader grew up to be the great leader of the revolution who would pioneer the future of the country and nation and who embarked on the road of sacred struggle for national liberation.

When the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song started his revolutionary activities, Kang Pan-sok, sparing nothing and risking her life, helped in every way in his revolutionary work and thereby brilliantly adorned with her precious exploits the new historic era of the Korean revolution advancing along the road of independence.

Referring to Kang Pan-sok's energetic struggle to arm the masses with advanced ideology, to firmly organize revolutionary organizations and to rally the broad masses around them under the guidance of the respected and beloved leader, he said: While personally helping the work of the Saenal Juvenile Union and the Paeksan Youth Union organized by the great leader, Kang Pan-sok directly distributed the newspaper SAENAL and sometimes performed the mission of conducting secret liaison activities and transporting weapons even under the tighty security nets of the enemy.

Despite suffering from a hard life and sickness, Kang Pan-sok took care of the comrades-in-arms of the leader, treating them like her own sons. She cooked food for them even at midnight, and dried their wet shoes and clothes. She even gave them money which she had saved from time to time for their travel expenses.

In particular, upholding the line of the anti-Japanese armed struggle set forth by the respected and beloved leader, she devoted herself to the struggle for its realization and actively helped in the preparatory work for the armed struggle. This was why she rejoiced more than anyone else when the two pistols handed over by Kim Hyong-chik were increased to 10 and 100 and when the anti-Japanese people's guerrilla unit, the first revolutionary armed forces of our people, was founded by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song in the forest of (Angye) and why she always wholeheartedly wished the future of the armed ranks great victory while imagining a liberated fatherland from the manly appearance of the members of the guerrilla unit.

He said: In the summer of 1932, the great leader learned of the critical condition of his sick mother just before he left for southern Manchuria together with his guerrilla unit. At that time the great leader bought one dae of hulled millet and called on his mother. However, Kang Pan-sok kindly urged the leader to leave her for the road of revolution, saying: If you properly carry out the revolution, I will recover. Leave home for the road of revolution without worry.

He continued: With Kang Pan-sok, the great mother of Korea, our people could have the great leader of the revolution for the first time in their thousands of years of history, and our country could greet the new day of restoration thanks to the devoted struggle and warm sincerity of the mother who backed the revolutionary activities of the leader with all her heart and soul.

He said: Kang Pan-sok was an outstanding leader of the Korean women's movement and a staunch woman political activist who marked the beginning of the communist women's movement of our country by brilliantly embodying in the women's emancipation movement the immortal chuche idea founded by the respected and beloved leader.

He stressed: The genuine road of the women's emancipation movement in our country was opened for the first time when the ideology of the independent women's emancipation was created by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song. The Korean women's movement could enter its correct road of development when Kang Pan-sok started the women's movement, upholding and following the leader's ideology on women's emancipation.

He continued: On 26 December 1926, Kang Pan-sok founded the Anti-Japanese Women's Association, the first women's revolutionary mass organization in our country, under the guidance and support of the respected leader. She was elected as its chairman in accord with the unanimous will of all members of the association and all other women. With its roots spread broadly among working women, the Anti-Japanese Women's Association was a mass political organization opposed to the Japanese imperialists and was a chuche-type revolutionary women's organization struggling to achieve the idea of women's emancipation put forward by the respected leader, assuming this idea as its guiding line.

The founding of the Anti-Japanese Women's Association by Kang Pan-sok was a historic event which opened up a new era of the communist women's movement in our country. With the formation of this association, the working women in our country could struggle in a more active and systematic manner under the great leader's guidance by having their own genuine revolutionary organization.

Kang Pan-sok brought the broad masses of women to their senses and organized them through the activities of the Anti-Japanese Women's Association. She vigorously inspired them to national independence and social liberation.

Kang Pan-sok, devotedly fighting for the liberation of the fatherland and women's emancipation, visited any place Korean women lived without caring about the Japanese imperialists' tight vigilance. She revolutionarily awakened and inspired them to the struggle against the Japanese imperialists by educating them with anti-Japanese patriotism.

Through her active struggle, a great number of women were brought into revolutionary organizations in broad areas, including Musong. They courageously rose in the struggle against the Japanese imperialists and waged various forms of struggle.

After the women's organizations were expanded, Kang Pan-sok consolidated their organizational systems and enhanced the militant function of the organizations of the Women's Association. She paid great attention to the work of organizationally uniting women.

He noted: Thanks to her active revolutionary activities, a number of women who had long suffered repression and contempt became aware of the truth of the struggle and grew into ardent revolutionaries. Thus, the women's emancipation movement in our country, breaking away from various evils handed down from earlier times, developed into a militant and revolutionary movement advancing in its own direction.

The immortal achievements made by Kang Pan-sok in the liberation of the fatherland and the women's emancipation struggle serve as a firm foundation for the development of the communist women's movement in our country and as a basis in the struggle of our people and women for the final resolution of the question of women.

He stressed: Kang Pan-sok is a model of a woman revolutionary possessing boundless loyalty to the revolution and indomitable revolutionary spirit, strong will and lofty character. She is a paragon of the simple, benevolent and wise Korean woman. She dedicated her all to the liberation of the fatherland and to the bright future of the people. Her heart was always filled with ardor for the revolutionary cause.

He continued: Kang Pan-sok was always staunch and resolute in the struggle against enemies. However, she was endlessly gentle and benevolent toward the repressed and despised workers and peasants. She sincerely helped and supported other people regarding their pains as her own.

Possessing all the fine characteristics of the diligent, benevolent and courteous Korean woman, she was always devoted to her parents and loyal to the sense of duty to her neighbors. She frugally managed her household even amid hardship. She was always polite and unpretentious and had a good influence on and led the people along the righteous path through her lofty and noble moral character.

Indeed, Kang Pan-sok performed most precious revolutionary feats for the cause of the Korean revolution and women's emancipation, devoting her whole life to the struggle for the independence of the country and the freedom and liberation of the people and for the new development of the Korean women's movement.

He said: Kang Pan-sok, who had resolutely struggled for the liberation of the country and the emancipation of women, moving the site of struggle to Mangyongdae, Pongan-ri, (Chunggang), (Ingang), (Paldogu), Muson and Ando, died too early under bleak foreign skies at the age of 40 on 31 July 1932, never to see the liberated country.

Though her heart so highly pulsating on the glorious road of revolution ceased beating, the noble revolutionary life of Kang Pan-sok, who left a lofty revolutionary spirit and imperishable fighting feats, brightly shines like a star in the hearts of our people and her precious revolutionary exploits will shine forever in our people's revolutionary history and the history of the women's emancipation movement.

The causes of national liberation and women's emancipation so ardently desired by Kang Pan-sok were brilliantly realized by the respected leader Comrade Kim Il-song.

He continued: The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song victoriously pioneered the road of the Korean revolution, upholding the revolutionary banner of the chuche idea, and achieved the historic cause of the fatherland's liberation. He raised a mighty and dignified socialist country on this land and opened up an era of the great prosperity and development, unprecedented in our national history.

Thanks to the great leader's wise leadership and great benevolence, our people were permanently freed from various forms of exploitation and subjugation and are fully enjoying an independent and creative life. We recall with deep emotion the brilliant revolutionary life of Kang Pan-sok whenever we think of today's glory and happiness. We are resolved to dedicate our lives to the final victory of the revolution as did Kang Pan-sok.

Our revolution has not been completed. Our party and our people should more vigorously step up the revolution and construction to achieve the complete victory of socialism in the northern half of the republic, to expedite achieving the cause of national reunification and to win the final victory of the chuche cause.

The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught: We should accelerate the revolutionary struggle and construction work more vigorously under the banner of the chuche idea. We should thus achieve the complete victory of socialism in the near future and brilliantly achieve the chuche-orientation of the entire society.

We should effect a new advance in the struggle to remodel all society on the chuche idea by continuously and vigorously waging the three revolutions of ideology, technology and culture. We should achieve the complete independence of the country so ardently desired by Kang Pan-sok and should more vigorously fight to realize the lofty ideas of socialism and communism across the entire land of Korea.

All party members and workers should arm themselves with the revolutionary idea of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and the lines and policies of the party -- the embodiment of his idea -- and should firmly safeguard and implement them.

We should more thoroughly prepare ourselves to be genuine communist revolutionaries with a chuche-type outlook and indomitable revolutionary spirit.

At the same time, we should staunchly protect and defend the party center politically and ideologically and at the risk of our lives, totally entrusting our lives up to the party. To the end we should remain loyal to the leadership of the party and the leader.

Deeply cherishing the sense of the glorious and grave responsibility assigned by the times and revolution, we should vigorously carry out the movement to win the red banner of the three revolutions and the movement for following and learning from the examples of the unheralded heroes. We should effect a new revolutionary upsurge on all fronts of socialist construction and expedite the achievement of the chuche revolutionary cause pioneered by the great leader by creating the speed of the 80's with the spirit of adding the speed battle to Chollima.

All party members and workers should vigorously wage the struggle to frustrate the daily increasing aggression and war maneuvers of the U.S. imperialists and to make the U.S. imperialist aggressor forces withdraw from South Korea. Thus, we should achieve the independent and peaceful reunification of the country at the earliest possible date.

He stressed: We should make the lifetime intention of Kang Pan-sok blossom more brightly by continuously and vigorously struggling under the wise leadership of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and following the banner of the ever-victorious KWP.

He concluded: Let us more vigorously fight for the reunification of the fatherland and for the final victory of the revolution in firm unity around the party Central Committee headed by the respected leader Comrade Kim Il-song.

NODONG SINMUN URGES PARTY MILITANCY BE ENHANCED

[Text] Pyongyang, August 3 (KCNA) -- NODONG SINMUN on August 2 printed an article titled "To Enhance Party's Militancy Is Important Guarantee for Vigorously Pushing Forward Revolution and Construction." The article says:

On August 2, 1974, the glorious party centre, basing itself on a scientific insight into a pressing demand of our party construction and revolutionary development, gave a comprehensive exposition of problems arising in improving and strengthening the party work.

To bring about a fundamental turn in the party construction and party activity in conformity with the demand of modelling the whole of society on the chuche idea, the glorious party centre expounded the general task of the party work, the problem of firmly building up the revolutionary ranks in a militant way and the need to thoroughly establish a revolutionary work method in the whole party. Along with this, it put forward a wise policy of strengthening the party guidance of economic construction.

Clarified in a concrete way in this revolutionary policy set forth by the party centre are the necessity of strengthening the party guidance of economic construction and its essence, the way of organising and mobilizing broad masses for the implementation of the party's economic policy, etc. This policy serves as a powerful ideological and theoretical weapon in transforming all spheres of society in accordance with the demand of the chuche idea by energetically accelerating socialist economic construction and a programmatic guideline to be firmly adhered to by the party organisations at all levels in the struggle for the implementation of the party's economic policy.

It is a consistent policy of our party in the revolutionary struggle to ensure economic work by a political method.

Success in socialist economic construction depends on the party's guidance of economic construction. Only when the party's guidance of economic construction is correctly ensured is it possible to accelerate socialist economic construction as planned and intended by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and thereby achieve the development and prosperity of the country and rapidly improve the people's living.

The party's guidance of economic work is, in essence, a political guidance.

An important character of the party is that it is an organ of political guidance for directing the administrative and economic work by the method of party work. Accordingly, the party work should not be conducted by means of working in the stead of administrative and economic organs. It must be a political guidance to lead the administrative and economic organs and their personnel to carry out the party's policy without the slightest delay and make all the party members and working people work with a high sense of consciousness of being masters of the revolution.

Under the wise guidance of the party and the leader, the party's guidance of economic construction is fully ensured in our country. Today it has become the work method and work style of our party functionaries to actively put to the foreground economic functionaries and help them well when difficult and complex tasks arise so that they may carry out economic tasks with a clear-cut fighting method and confidence. Under the correct guidance of the party organisation amazing successes are being registered in the work for attaining the ten prospective targets of socialist economic construction.

In conformity with the demand of the developing reality today when the three revolutions, ideological, technical and cultural, are being promoted further in depth, the glorious party centre gave an all-round exposition of the problems arising in rousing the broad masses to the struggle for the implementation of the party's economic policy.

The article notes that an important problem arising in carrying through the party's economic policy is to make all the party members and working people accept the party policy as their own, energetically conduct economic agitation and vigorously keep up the speed campaign.

NODONG SINMUN MARKS CHAOSHUTAN MEETING ANNIVERSARY

[Text] Pyongyang, August 4 (KCNA) -- NODONG SINMUN on August 3 dedicates an article to the 45th anniversary of the Chaoshutan meeting of military and political cadres held in the period of the anti-Japanese armed struggle organised and led by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song.

The situation prevailing at that time made it urgent to give a scientific analysis and assessment of the prospect of the development of the Sino-Japanese war and, to cope with it, invigorate the military and political activities of the Korean People's Revolutionary Army, thereby dealing a hard political and military blow to the Japanese imperialists and further intensifying and developing the anti-Japanese national liberation struggle, the author of the article says, and continues:

In order to cope with this fast changing situation, the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song called the meeting of military and political cadres of the Korean People's Revolutionary Army in Chaoshutan, Changbai County, from August 1 to 5, 1937.

Giving an all-round analysis and assessment of the obtaining situation at the meeting, the great leader proved with a perfect logic that the Japanese imperialist aggressors who ignited the war would suffer a defeat and our revolution would certainly triumph.

Indicating the prospect of the development of the Sino-Japanese war with his scientific logic, he advanced a new strategic and tactical policy of intensifying operations for striking the enemy on the back and harassing its rear in broad areas including the banks of the Amnok and Tuman Rivers at a time when the Japanese imperialists were hell bent on aggression of China and dispatching more small units and underground political workers to the homeland to further expand and strengthen the anti-Japanese united national front movement.

This was a most active, wise policy for dynamically developing the anti-Japanese armed struggle and the Korean revolution as a whole with it as the centre in view of the fast changing revolutionary situation, and striking a hard blow from the rear at the Japanese imperialists getting frantic in their war of aggression, thereby precipitating their defeat and promoting the cause of the liberation of the fatherland.

It was also a chuche-based policy for overthrowing the Japanese imperialist colonial rule and accomplishing the cause of the liberation of the fatherland by our people's own efforts and a revolutionary policy for supporting the Chinese people in their revolutionary struggle under the banner of proletarian internationalism and promoting the development of the Asian and world revolution.

The great leader convened a meeting of commanders and men of the Korean People's Revolutionary Army on August 12, 1937, and put into a concrete form the strategic and tactical policies advanced at the Chaoshutan meeting of military and political cadres and set forth immediate militant tasks for their implementation and in September published "Appeal to the Korean People" arousing the members of the Korean People's Revolutionary Army and the entire Korean people to an active struggle for precipitating the defeat of Japanese imperialism and accelerating the liberation of the fatherland.

According to the new strategic and tactical policies of the great leader, an operation of the Korean People's Revolutionary Army for striking the enemy on the back and an active anti-Japanese struggle of broad popular masses were powerfully waged in face of the Sino-Japanese war.

As the great leader indicated the chuche-based strategic and tactical policies in keeping with the fast changing situation of revolution at the historic Chaoshutan meeting of military and political cadres, the Japanese imperialists' war of continental aggression was driven into a helpless confusion and predicament, the internal force of our revolution further increased and preparations for an all-people resistance were stepped up successfully, so that the Korean revolution as a whole could develop vigorously, stresses the paper.

CHEYSSON TO DISCUSS FRENCH RECOGNITION OF NORTH

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 5 (YONHAP) -- The French Government intends to recognize North Korea, but in doing so, it wants to avoid endangering its existing relations with South Korea, a high-level Western diplomatic source said Thursday. The source, who declined to be identified, told YONHAP that "the question is not when Paris will recognize North Korea, but how it is going to do that."

"France will not recognize North Korea 'tomorrow' as (French External Relations Minister) Claude Cheysson aptly said, because it wants to do so with concurrence of the parties involved, including South Korea," the source said. The source, however, refused to speculate on the nature of the offer which Cheysson is expected to make as he seeks to feel out the Korean Government on the French intention to recognize North Korea.

The French foreign minister arrives here Friday afternoon [as received] on a two-day visit and he is expected to discuss the sensitive issue with Korean officials including Foreign Minister Yi Pom-sok. There has been speculation that Cheysson will ask for Seoul's acquiescence in Paris's recognition of Pyongyang in return for France's good offices in the establishment of official links between South Korea and an unnamed communist country. But diplomatic observers are skeptical of the chance Seoul might accept such an offer unless the communist country to recognize South Korea turns out to be either Beijing or Moscow.

Cheysson is on record saying that France will proceed to recognize North Korea in "terms acceptable by all parties."

KOREA HERALD Editorial

[Editorial: "Cheysson's Seoul Visit"]

The two countries have continued all along to develop friendly cooperation in political as well as cultural and economic fields. Especially in the economic area, the two countries have remarkably increased their cooperation in recent years as may be underlined by the considerable volume of trade between them. The two-way trade has reached the $600 million level, although the latest statistics show a little decline which perhaps is attributable to the generally low performance of the world economy. French participation in Korea's economic development is likely to take on further impetus as Paris is one of the strong potential suppliers of technology and capital for some of the development projects to be carried out within this decade. It is noteworthy, in this context, that Korea recently became the first overseas market for French atomic power plants; France has supplied two of the 10 atomic power stations in Korea.

More significant, however, is the political dimension of Korea-French relations. France has continued to render firm support to Seoul's efforts to achieve a durable peace on the Korean Peninsula and unify the divided country by peaceful means. Seoul's consistent endeavor for inter-Korea dialogue to pave the way for reapproachement and eventual unity between South and North Korea has yet to be reciprocated by Pyongyang. Toward this end, the need for strong international backing of our northward initiative is as great as ever.

Cheysson made it clear earlier this year, during the then Foreign Minister No Sin-yong's visit to Paris, that there was no change in the French position on the Korean problem. His Seoul visit this time is a proper occasion to reaffirm that posture to stress the necessity for joint search by Seoul and Pyongyang for a peaceful settlement of the Korean issue. As the previous leg of his current Asian tour was in Beijing, Cheysson must be well aware of the present circumstances facing Korea and East Asia. This republic's open-door policy has received no positive response as yet from either China or the Soviet Union which has a major role to play in Korea.

What arouses our concern under these circumstances is the French Government's attitude to North Korea being or to be shaped by the ruling Socialist Party's foreign policy based on the "principle of universality." In fact, the party's campaign platform commits the Mitterrand government to extending French recognition to Pyongyang sooner or later.

This question may emerge as one of the important topics between the foreign ministers of France and Korea when they sit together here. But again, the answer is very clear. French departure from its present Korea position toward Pyongyang recognition at this time would breach the delicate equilibrium in the peninsula.

SEOUL SINMUN LAUDS ROK-U.S. DEFENSE STRATEGY

[Editorial: "The Firm Will for Joint Defense Between Korea and the United States"]

[Text] The basic concept of the current Korea-U.S. joint defense strategy, which rules immediate response and mass retaliation if the Korean Peninsula is invaded, has been reaffirmed by General Winfield W. Scott, deputy commander of U.S. forces in Korea and chief of staff of the Korea-U.S. Combined Forces Command.

At the summer symposium for top management hosted by the Korea Management Association held on 30 July in Cheju City, General Scott delivered a speech on "Reviewing the Situation in the Pacific and on the Korean Peninsula". In his speech, he revealed that the U.S. Pacific Area Command has the authority to immediately respond to a southward invasion by the North Korean puppets if they venture it. Thus, he made it clear that U.S. forces in Korea will immediately intervene in a war if it breaks out.

He said that if, miscalculating, the North Korean puppets venture briefly southward in invasion, by themselves, the Korea-U.S. Combined Forces will drive back the invasion all at once in the area north of Seoul by fully mobilizing the army, navy and air force and will lead the war to victory in a short time by destroying the military bases deep in the rear areas of the North Korean puppets. Thus, he again clarified the validity of the defense strategy of the Korea-U.S. Combined Forces to maintain the present frontline, assuming mass retaliation as its primary component. General Scott's remarks are nothing new in view of the fact that they are not only based on the strategic concept of the current Korea-U.S. joint defense treaty but also are similar to what was clarified by the Governments of Korea and the United States in the joint communique issued at the 14th annual Security Consultative Conference.

In the joint communique, Korea and the United States confirmed that "security in Korea is the main axis for peace and security in Northeast Asia and is essential to the security of the United States." The United States, in particular, clearly noted that it will continue strengthening security in Korea with its nuclear umbrella and will offer rapid and effective support, regarding armed aggression against Korea as a common peril to the two nations.

Therefore, the new significance in General Scott's remarks are that he warned the North Korean puppets -- who are showing an unprecedentedly tough attitude toward the South in an attempt to gloss over their internal feud connected with the inheritance of power by creating external tension -- not to underestimate, even in the slightest, the will for joint defense between Korea and the United States which is being perfectly preserved. In fact, such warnings played an important role in the past in preventing war on the Korean Peninsula. The North Korean puppets, greatly inspired by the communization of Vietnam in 1975, showed signs of venturing a southward invasion at any moment. However, they did not attempt a provocation since the Korea-U.S. Combined Forces announced an offensive defense strategy that they would not only check and destroy the aggressor forces along the present frontline but also would deal a critical blow to the heart of the enemy. We remember this clearly.

The North Korean puppets, however, have recently again been attempting to play with fire. In order to strengthen Kim Chong-il's position as successor, whose "career in the revolutionary struggle" is short, they formed an organization exclusively charged with operations against the South called "5-Man Committee" headed by Kim Chong-il. It has been learned that they are scheming to perpetrate a large-scale destruction operation against the South in the form of irregular warfare. However, as shown in the "Team Spirit 82" exercise last spring and in the "Myolgong 28" training last month, they should clearly realize that their provocative maneuvers for "camouflaged revolutionary war" are foolish acts which would cause our side's immediate countermeasures and mass retaliation and expedite their own downfall.

What the North Korean puppets have to choose at the crossroads is clear. We would like to stress that calmly responding to our peace proposals is the only way for their survival.

JAPANESE COMMITMENT TO TEXTBOOK CORRECTIONS URGED

[Text] Korean-Japanese relations are feared to be severly strained if the Japanese Government does not take prompt measures to rectify distorted historical facts in the new editions of Japanese high school textbooks. A government source yesterday said "all we have to do now is to wait for the Japanese Government's responsible reply to the Korean demands for a prompt correction of the historical errors." Korean diplomatic countermeasures, he said, will depend on how the Japanese Government will respond to the demand. Minister of Foreign Affairs Yi Pom-sok delivered the government message to the Tokyo government through Amb. Toshikazu Maeda Tusday.

"What the Korean Government is demanding is the Japanese firm commitment to a prompt rectification of historical descriptions concerning the Japanese annexation and invasion of Korea," he said. "However, concrete diplomatic measures have not been considered yet." If the Japanese reply is "lukewarm," he said, there will be a crisis in the Korean-Japanese relationship.

A diplomatic confrontation concerning the textbook issue is feared to spill over to overall relations, including the ongoing negotiations over "economic cooperation," between the two countries. A Japanese political decision, if made in consideration of friendly relations existing between the two countries, could solve the textbook issue with ease, the source said. Explaining that possible diplomatic steps following such a government demand are an ultimatum, recalling the ambassador, the reduction of the embassy staff and the withdrawal of the embassy, he said he cannot predict what course the government will take when the demand is not administered in a satisfactory manner.

GOVERNMENT URGED TO GIVE UP JAPANESE LOAN

[Editorial: "Ambassador Maeda's Remarks"]

[Excerpts] The Korea-Japan economic aid negotiations have reached a point where we can no longer be optimistic about a smooth settlement.

Our side has repeatedly made concessions to Japan. In the first place, we made concessions on ground rules, then in the amount of aid and finally on the loan conditions. Our foreign minister even made an uncheduled visit to Japan. Still, Japan has not shown its sincerity. And just when we began to feel that the time had come to seriously reconsider whether or not to continue the aid negotiations, Ambassador Maeda caught our country off guard with unexpected remarks in Cheju.

For more than 1 and 1/2 years, Korea and Japan have been engaged in negotiations, occasionally in a tug of war, over the amount -- our side requested $6 billion while Japan reduced it to $4 billion. Suddenly, Japan has stepped back, saying that the two countries cannot agree on the amount for 5 years. We find this hard to understand.

Ambassador Maeda said something to the effect that the total amount of $6 billion or $4 billion, as reported by the Korean and Japanese papers, is meaningless, because the Japanese budget system is based on an annual basis. The essence of Ambassador Maeda's remarks is that an agreement on the total amount of economic aid, assuming the two countries come to an agreement, is only "an idea" or "a guess," and only a year's portion will be made public when both countries reach an agreement. If this is true, then have we been running to catch a rainbow?

Could it be that the Japanese reporters assigned to the Japanese Foreign Ministry, who customarily begin their day by breakfasting with the foreign minister, have been reporting incorrectly on the expected total amount and conditions of the loan because they are less versed in the Japanese budget system than the ambassador?

As we understand it, Korea and Japan mutually agreed on the total amount of economic aid at the outset of the negotiations, or at least they arrived at an understanding to start the negotiations on such a basis. Now the Japanese ambassador, who has been following the negotiations, states that the two countries cannot agree on the total amount when public sentiment in both countries is at its worst. His motive is suspicious. According to him, even after the two governments finally agree on the scale of economic aid and sign the agreement, Japan can nullify the agreement in the event Japan's domestic situation changes. In addition, at least as he sees it, the two countries will have to repeat the negotiations each year to determine the annual portion of the loan, even if Japan undergoes no drastic changes. Even if the negotiations are to be conducted for form's sake within the boundary of the agreed "idea" or "guess," Japan will certainly try to wield the upper hand in Korea-Japan relations by taking advantage of the loan ploy.

Because of the dispute over the distortion of history in the Japanese textbooks, we have reached the situation of needing to reconsider Korea-Japan relations as a whole, whether we like it or not. And we think it is necessary to fundamentally reconsider the economic aid question. We made concessions to Japan on groundrules first, and then on conditions of the loan. If the two countries agree on the total amount at $4 billion, we get only $800 million a year. What is more, we are to borrow the money at much higher interest rates than we had hoped.

If we are to take a humble attitude and if we are to abstain from saying what we deserve to say on matters such as history textbooks only to gain $4 billion loan, we believe that it is right to give up the Japanese loan, regardless of the amount. We are not saying this out of emotion. We say this because we believe, in view of our economic scale and export quantity, we can find other lenders for commercial loans.

INFORMATION MINISTER ON DAMAGE TO, RESTORATION OF ANGKOR

BK041159 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0411 GMT 4 Aug 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 4 Aug (SPK) -- Recently the Voice of America broadcast incomplete testimonies on the efforts of the PRK in the preservation of the national cultural patrimony, particularly of the Angkor temples. In this connection, Minister of Information and Culture, Chheng Phon granted an interview to SPK.

To the question about the extent of the damage caused to the Angkor temples by Pol Pot, Minister Chheng Phon said: Thousands of foreign visitors, including journalists, television and magazine reporters from Western countries who have visited the PRK, have seen with their own eyes the great losses in human life, in materiel and in moral patrimony deliberately caused by Pol Pot and Ieng Sary.

Being a loyal disciple of his Beijing master, Pol Pot did not hesitate to implement the theory he had learned from the Cultural Revolution of Mao Zedong in 1967. This is why Angkor Wat and more than 1,000 other historic and cultural monuments spread throughout the country did not escape from this unforgivable destruction.

During the atrocious despotism of Pol Pot, Khieu Samphan and Ieng Sary, not only did the hangmen refrain from doing anything to protect and preserve the Angkor temples, but they began from the first day of their accession to power to destroy them systematically. They expelled the workers and guards who worked for the Preservation of the Angkor Monuments Service in Siem Reap and destroyed the equipment used for restoration.

Since then, the whole area of Angkor had been invaded by a thick vegetation which thereby obstructed the access to the temples. The Pol Pot gang felled big trees which in their fall crushed the eastern gallery of Bayon, the gallery of Freah Khan and the surrounding wall of Vimean Akas....handmade stone figures of our temples were scattered everywhere. The vandals destroyed statues and bas-reliefs, such as those at the thousand-Buddha images galley in Angkor Wat.

They dismantled the stone blocks from the temples and used them as basements for granaries. They used undamaged temples to store paddy or as stables. Worse still, the stone blocks of the Snoeng temple (Battambang) were used to pave roads and those of the Preah Theat temple (Kompong Thom) to build a dam, and so on.... Along with this merciless massive destruction, the Pol Gang bartered the statues and sculptured stones for salt and pharmaceutical products from Thailand.

"While recalling the destruction of Kampuchea's historic monuments, particularly the Angkor monuments, one cannot forget the damage caused by the U.S. bombings during their war which lasted from 1970 to 1975 in Kampuchea," the minister stressed.

Concerning the measures taken by the revolutionary authorities for the protection of the Angkor monuments, the minister of information and culture asserted: Despite enormous difficulties, the KPRP and the PRK Government have taken necessary measures by giving the Ministry of Information and Culture the facilities to set up a commission for the preservation of the Angkor monuments. We have undertaken the work to clear land and retrieve scattered fragments of blocks, stone or statues.

Despite the lack of material means, but thanks to the efforts of our valiant workers who are confident in our party and government and animated by a deep love for their cultural patrimony, the 98 persons of the Preservation of the Angkor Monuments Service have succeeded in undertaking small-scale repairs by strengthening the props of many parts of the monuments which would have crumbled, in restoring a workshop for the repair of artifacts and a chemical laboratory, in returning to their sites and restoring recovered statues, and so on....

Along with the above-mentioned accomplished concrete measures, the PRK Government promulgated an order in council on the protection and safeguard of the national cultural patrimonies (No 227/80-BP of November 1980) confirming its will toward the protection and preservation of national patrimonies.

Regarding the foreign assistance to the restoration of the Angkor temples, the minister said: We only bank on the material and financial assistance of generous persons, international organizations and all countries regardless of their political tendency, with the sole condition that they would not impose unacceptable conditions on us.

We would like to stress once again that, besides our particular efforts for the safeguard of the Angkor monuments, we have also repeatedly sent out SOS's for Angkor to various foreign organizations and countries. We have asked for contacts with experts in archaeology all over the world so that together we can solve the question of restoring Angkor. Soviet, Vietnamese, Polish, French and Indian experts have answered our appeal and visited Angkor. Recently, for the second time, a group of Indian archaeologists came to Kampuchea. They set up two laboratories, "photo and chemical," and worked there for 4 months.

MILITARY OPERATIONS IN TAKEO PROVINCE REPORTED

SK030112 Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian 1200 GMT 2 Aug 82

During the last 6 months of 1981 and first 6 months of 1982, all units stationed around Takeo Province launched a total of 86 operations against the enemies in such areas as Tram Kak District, Phnum Damrei Romiel and Kirivong District. Thanks to the high combat sprit and discretion of our people, we killed 19 enemy elements on the spot, wounded 5, captured 207 alive, accepted surrender from 187 and seized 41 weapons and some documents.

Because our armed forces launched these operations against them, our enemies have panicked, deserted or surrendered and no longer dare to come and commit their crimes.

KAMPUCHEA ON TASKS TO ENSURE RAINY SEASON CROPS

BK050753 Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian 0400 GMT 4 Aug 82

[KAMPUCHEA editorial: "Advance Enthusiastically Toward Achieving the Rainy Season Plan"]

It is necessary to increase the managing and organizing efficiency of the state power and of production solidarity groups; to follow up the implementation of production plans; to have a firm grasp of all the people's problems and needs and find solutions for them; and to report to higher authorities so that they can take timely and appropriate measures to check any untoward passiveness in the movement.

During the busy period of tilling and transplanting, the state power and the production solidarity groups should manage and bring into service all of the draft power and farm implements available in a locality in order that these productive forces will not lay idle when they could be used to increase production. The organization and distribution of productive forces and any methods for increasing production should be implemented carefully on the basis of the spirit of collectivism and in conformity with the acutal needs and size of the cultivable area.

In those localities which lack water for the transplanting of seedlings, the labor force should be mobilized to build networks of irrigation canals based on the spirit of mastery and improvisation and aimed at insuring immediate and long-term cultivation. All available water sources in and around the locality should be tapped to the maximum. For those places with enough water, collective tilling and transplanting should be done immediately. It is a fact that we lack water pumps. The state power should exercise their sense of economy and improvisation and use to their fullest capacity such primitive tools as scoops, water wheels and other types of buckets to irrigate ricefields. Each locality must see to it that it has enough seedlings for transplantation.

At the same time, care should be taken to look after draft animals. They should not be overworked because this will adversely affect the tilling. In a number of places, such as Svay Rieng Province, draft animals are suffering from diseases. The veterinary service should therefore provide urgent treatment on the spot.

While the tractor groups are helping to plow the land day and night, local state power should insure that there is enough fuel for the tractors and adequate food for the operators. Each locality should have an organizational structure and a detailed emergency plan in order to coordinate with the higher authorities to insure efficient contingency plans against all eventualities.

The transportation and communications service should insure the transportation of all kinds of materials and goods and other essential equipment, in particular it should provide a speedy transportation service to localities to meet the production requirements. In transporting goods from the provinces to remote areas, fuel should be saved by using to the greatest extent ordinary means of transportation, such as ox and buffalo carts, boats and sampans.

The trade service should have measures and emergency plans for providing seeds and necessary goods to ensure production in the event of natural disasters. The planning, finance and bank services should provide capital and assistance to the provinces so that they can carry out their plan to expand the cultivated area and in this way encourage the peasants who have volunteered to participate.

When weather conditions are unfavorable for transplanting rice seedlings, efforts should be turned to intensifying the planting of food and industrial crops, such as corn, peanuts, soy beans and sesame.

RADIO STRESSES COMMUNICATIONS, TRANSPORT WORK

BK021430 Vientiane Domestic Service in Lao 0000 GMT 1 Aug 82

[Unattributed editorial: "Vigorously Promote Communications and Transport Work"]

[Summary] "Communications and transport work is extremely significant, not only for our economy and our people's livelihood, but also for our national defense and political and cultural development. Therefore, in the coming years we must strive to build more land transport networks in order to link all villages, districts and provinces throughout the country, build highways to the eastern sea coast and complete the oil pipeline from Vietnam to Laos. We must also improve water networks and constantly repair and maintain airstrips. Plans must be mapped out to consolidate, enlarge and build warehouses, boat landings, bus stations and storage facilities in certain vital localities. At the same time, a survey must be energetically conducted prior to building railway lines in our country in the late 1980's. All this constitutes the primary goals of communications and transport work as outlined by our party and state in the first 5-year state plan."

To fulfill these tasks we must clearly divide responsibilities between the central and local or grassroots levels. In addition, all rudimentary construction equipment must be used to carry out this work. It should be clearly defined which central organizations or localities are responsible for building which roads. We must avoid a tendency to rely only on the center, the province or the district to build small rural roads linking villages and cantons. The people of all tribal groups must be convinced of the necessity of expanding communications and transport networks. They must be encouraged to build paths for oxcarts or small roads to link all rural communities so as to closely supplement the construction of strategic routes by the center and the province, thus linking all communications and transport networks from the center down to the grassroots levels throughout the country.

Hitoshi Hattori, Bangkok bureau chief of the Nihon Denpa News (NDN) film company, said he was the only journalist of any nationality at the Highway 1 border when about 40 trucks and buses, each carrying about 60 troops, left Kampuchea for Vietnam on July 17. It was the first, and likely the only, eyewitness report of the Vietnamese withdrawal, which Hanoi has described as a "good will gesture." Other sources have described it as a regular rotation of troops during the rainy season, and some have claimed that Hanoi has already begun sending fresh soldiers to Kampuchea to replace those withdrawn.

Hattori said he followed the troops to the headquarters of the 7th Military Region, a 30-minute drive northeast of Ho Chi Minh City, where the soldiers dispersed for leave. Earlier reports from Ho Chi Minh City and other areas had cast doubt upon Hanoi's claims of a partial withdrawal, since there were no signs of the pullback in the former South Vietnamese capital.

"I expected the soldiers would go into Ho Chi Minh City for some sort of ceremony, to be greeted by the population, but in fact they did not," Hattori said yesterday.

In interviews with the Japanese cameraman, most soldiers said they had come from Siem Reap Province, although several said they had been pulled out of other areas near the Thai-Kampuchea frontier. Hattori quoted an NDN correspondent in Phnom Penh who told him that a total of 71 buses, trucks and tanks left Kampuchea in the withdrawal, but that some had taken different routes back to Vietnam. The soldiers he saw, he said, were mostly young and looked healthy. Most had been in Kampuchea more than two years, although they claimed they had had home leaves during the tours. Most were southern Vietnamese, Hattori said.

During the drive from the Vietnam-Kampuchea border along Highway 1, obviously organised villagers along the route lined the road and waved flags of Vietnam and the Heng Samrin regime. Soldiers waved back and smiled, the Japanese correspondent said. Each soldier wore a small badge given earlier in the day at a departure ceremony at the Phnom Penh independence monument.

The NDN Phnom Penh correspondent said between 5,000 and 6,000 Vietnamese soliders were at the ceremony, but it was unclear if all were scheduled to leave Kampuchea in the partial withdrawal. Vietnamese officials have refused on the grounds of military secrecy to give any details on the size of the withdrawal or to say where the troops were withdrawn from.

THAI RAT SAYS KAMPUCHEANS MUST FIGHT FOR VICTORY

[Editorial: "Return to the Motherland"]

[Text] The BANGKOK POST on 2 August reported that 39,000 Kampuchean refugees in Thailand have volunteered to return to their homeland to fight and sacrifice their lives for the liberation of Kampuchea from foreign occupation. The decision by these Kampuchean refugees shows the love they hold for their homeland and their solidarity and determination to fight for the independence of their country.

World public opinion also wants the Kampuchean people to have their own legitimate government. The country now occupying Kampuchea has arrogantly and obstinately thwarted the aspirations of the Kampuchean people, who are the true owners of Kampuchea. We have pointed out before that the sovereignty of any country, big or small, is inviolable. The efforts exerted by the United Nations to make Kampuchea an independent, sovereign and stable country met with success when the tripartite coalition government was formed. However, the problem does not end here. The Kampuchean people themselves must fight and overcome the difficulties ahead in order to restore peace and develop their country.

Who can help the 4 million Kampuchean people? The Kampucheans themselves must unite with each other to fight for genuine independence and sovereignty. Some of the Kampuchean refugees in Thailand have already decided to return to their motherland. Other Kampucheans who are now scattered all over the world must contribute to their compatriots' national reconstruction.

We sympathize with these Kampuchean refugees. They have lost everything except the will to fight to liberate their country from the foreign aggressors so that they can have full independence and freedom. Kampuchea, a poor country which has been in a continuous state of war, will be developed and led to prosperity by the Kampuchean people themselves.

COMMERCE MINISTER VIEWS MILITARY GOODS TO LAOS

[Text] Commerce Minister Punmi Punnasi said yesterday he hoped to discuss with Lao authorities the possibility of relaxing restrictions on the sales of Thai military goods to Laos when he visits the country next week. Punmi will lead a 14-man delegation for a visit to Vientiane to discuss bilateral trade and problems, including smuggling of goods along the border.

Thailand exports no military goods to Laos but Punmi said he hoped to explore the possibility of relaxing some restrictions governing the export of this kind of goods.

HMONG RESISTANCE FIGHTERS FLEE FROM LAOS

[Text] Chiang Rai -- Eight Hmong resistance fighters were detained yesterday morning when their raft crossed from the Lao side and landed on the Mekong River bank in Chiang Khong District, Provincial Superintendent Pol Col Win Prasopchok said. The eight hilltribesmen told police that they fled from Laos in a large group of about 150 men in roughly-built rafts early yesterday morning, adding that they didn't know the fate of the rest. Three of them told police that they came directly from China but the rest came from Houai Sai District in Laos. Police found in their possession three assault rifles, a machinegun, a camera and ammunition.

PRAYUT HEADS COMMUNIST SUPPRESSION COMMAND

[Text] The prime minister has transferred his responsibility as director of the Communist Prevention and Suppression Command (CPSC) to Army Commander-in-Chief Gen Prayut Charumani, Gen Athit Kamlang-Ek disclosed yesterday.

The transfer was ordered by Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon himself last Thursday, according to the assistant commander-in-chief. Asked about the motive behind the transfer of office, Gen Athit said that it might be because Gen Prem could not find enough time to perform his duty as the chief of the CPSC.

Gen Athit also told reporters that the situation along the Thai-Kampuchean border has improved greatly, probably because of reduction in assistance to the Vietnamese from the Soviet Union. Vietnam now receives about one million baht worth of assistance daily from the Soviets which is only a third of what it used to get in the past, Gen Athit said.

PREM REVIEWS GOVERNMENT INTERNAL SECURITY POLICY

BK041331 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 0000 GMT 4 Aug 82

[Text] Spokesman of the prime minister's office Trairong Suwannakhiri reported to newsmen that, before the weekly Cabinet meeting yesterday, Prime Minister Gen Prem Tinsulanon told the meeting about the government's internal security policy, emphasizing the two following policies:

First, he noted that internal situation has constantly improved as a result of the implementation of the communist suppression policy, especially policies No 66/23 and No 65/25. Operations carried out by the army regions have achieved overwhelming successes. The prime minister, however, noted that military operations have been too far ahead of the political operations. This is not what it should be, he said. He stressed the government's policy of giving priority to political operations and not to military actions. In order to achieve results for the political operations, the prime minister said all parties concerned must coordinate in solving political, economic and social problems, promoting the democratic system of government and eliminating official corruption. The prime minister urged that political work should take precedence over military operations.

Second, the prime minister reaffirmed that there will be no change in the policy towards communist defectors. The government will not punish defectors who surrender to the authorities. The government will give guarantees to the defectors concerning their civil rights and safety. There are still a large number of misled people who wish to leave the jungle and surrender to the government, but they are still not confident about the government's policy toward defectors.

The spokesman of the prime minister's office said that an effective implementation of the two above-mentioned policies will make it difficult for the communists' mobilization strategy and will contribute to the weakening of communist strength in the future.

National Security Council Secretary General Sqn Ldr Prasong Sunsiri, in his capacity as chairman of the committee in charge of communist suppression policies, also reported that the prime minister wished to make clear the policy and intention of the government regarding defectors' civil rights and security. All responsible government agencies have therefore been assigned to work out appropriate measures pertaining to the law and other aspects in order to give assurance to defectors. Those people should be given a chance to lead a normal life in our society and also contribute to our efforts to promote the democratic system of government with the king as head of state and to the progress of the country. This will also create national unity.

The prime minister also stressed at yesterday's Cabinet session that both executives and officials of government agencies must pay serious attention to the implementation of the prime minister's orders No 66/23 and No 65/25 in order to reduce conditions favorable to factors obstructing the development of democracy, civil rights and internal security.

BANGKOK POST Editorial

[Editorial: "Good Chance for True Democracy"]

The timing of the appeal could not have been better in another sense. August 7 is the anniversary of what the communist insurgents celebrate as the "Rifle Burst Day," which they regard as the starting point of their revolutionary war. On that day they might try some sort of show of strength, if they still have that strength or if their strength is not further sapped by more breakaway groups or major desertions to the government. If the CPT is so hampered that it cannot make a show of force, it will lose its credibility.

The "people's war," which is how the communists like to describe their struggle, is a war for the people's minds and hearts. It is an all-out war on all fronts -- political, economic, social, propaganda. In fighting this war, the government has to strengthen any weakness on these fronts. One of the first things it has to do is to get rid of bad officials, officials who are corrupt, who oppress the people, who take advantage of them, who do not serve them and help them with their needs. Officials are considered the extension of the central government into the rural areas and the remote corners of the kingdom. If they behave outrageously, the people will think of the government in unflattering terms.

Another most important task for the government is to make moves to ensure real progress towards true democracy. National Security Council Secretary-General Prasong Sunsiri, who is also chairman of the anti-communist policy committee, should take note of the fact that the best weapon with which to combat communism, a totalitarian ideology, is democracy. People's participation in government is the essential ingredient.

It must be recognised that many people have fled to join the outlawed Communist Party of Thailand (CPT) not just because they have been mistreated by officials or because they have been disgusted with what the officials do but also because they feel that they have no role to play in the administration of their own country. Many of them have gone into the jungles believing that the CPT could provide them with the opportunities to attain their ideals. They must have found disappointment, instead, because the CPT imposes what is known as "iron discipline" and they know, too late, that communism would want to establish a dictatorship. If the anti-communist policy committee can get the government and Parliament to issue laws which will provide Thailand with true democracy the desertions from the CPT will be so great that the government can for the first time claim a genuine victory in the "people's war."

FORMER CPT MEMBERS FORM NEW PARTIES IN LAOS

[Text] Maj Gen Prayat Rotphothong, 3d Army Region deputy commander, told MATICHON on 29 July that the Nan Romyen and other suppression operations which were launched in the areas of Cheng Meng, Lao Hu and Nam Yao villages of Chiang Kham District in Chiang Rai Province and Doi Pha Chi Mountain of Tha Wang Pha District in Nan Province have forced communist terrorists and student groups under the Communist Party of Thailand [CPT] to flee into Laos and to later join with the Vietnamese-backed Siam Party.

Major General Prayat disclosed that three parties have been set up by former CPT members in Laos. They are the Siam Party led by Comrade Muangthong, the Isan Ekkarat [Independent Northeast] Party led by Bunyen Wothong and the Mai [New] Party whose leader is still unknown. These three parties receive support from Vietnam. The deputy commander of the 3d Army Region said: "Because of the discontinuation of Chinese support for the CPT, they have had to turn to Vietnam for assistance and have had to form their own parties." The deputy commander said that the policies of these three parties are still unknown.

Regarding the prime minister's new anticommunist order No 65/1982, Major General Prayat said that the new order was issued to reinforce the previous order and aimed at eliminating influential groups in the lowlands or in towns which are in the CPT's united fronts.

SHAN FORCES, BURMESE COMMUNISTS CLASH 4 AUG

[Text] Chiang Mai -- Fighting erupted early yesterday morning on both sides of the Thai-Burmese border between a combined force of Shan, Lahu and breakaway Kuomintang [KMT] troops, with the Burmese Communists.

The scene of fierce skirmish was at Ban Huai Sala in Tambon Thaton, Mae Ai District close to a Lahu (Muser) village of Huai Muser. Police sources said that fighting started at about 8 am in and around the village, forcing the hilltribe villagers to flee into Mae Ai district. The sources said that the Shan United Army (SUA), Lahu and KMT troops attacked about 150 Burmese Communists led by A Bi who earlier crossed into Thailand in a bid to transit to Doi Sam Sao, about three kilometres to the north of Doi Lang on Burmese territory. The first clash between the heavily armed Shan-led troops and the communists began at about 4:30 am in Ban Na Yoi of Tambon Thaton, continuing throughout the day and spreading to other villages. The sources said that so far, they could not obtain casualty figures from either side.

NATURAL GAS RESERVES -- Proved reserves in the Erawan natural gas field in the Gulf of Thailand are less than a third of the original estimace, industry experts said yesterday. Contrary to earlier estimates that the reserves totalled about 1.5 trillion cubic feet, up-to-date data has now put the proved reserves at less than 500 billion cubic feet, the experts said. Union Oil Company officials have informed the Petroleum Authority of Thailand (PTT) that there may be another 200 billion cubic feet, but that these are "probable reserves" only. The latest estimate is said to be more accurate than the earlier predictions because it is based on new production and pressure performance data. Previous estimates were made before the gas began flowing last October, and some were made as long ago as 1978. [Excerpt] [Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 30 Jul 82 p 1 BK]

TRUONG CHINH SCORES U.S., PRC 'WAR OF SABOTAGE'

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, August 4 -- "The enemies of Vietnam at present are U.S. imperialism and Chinese expansionism and hegemonism," said President of the Council of State Truong Chinh during his recent visit to the Infantry Institute.

He went on: "They collude with each other to conduct a war of sabotage in many fields against Vietnam and against the Lao and Kampuchean revolutions, and to divide the three Indochinese countries and the world revolutionary movement." He stressed the necessity to build an all-sided and modern national defense of the entire people and to combine the economy and defense, thus creating a comprehensive strength of the revolution.

FOREIGN MINISTER THACH COMMENTS ON ASEAN TOUR

[Report on interview by Vietnamese Radio and TV correspondent with SRV Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach on his recent tour of Southeast Asia -- date not given]

[Text] [Begin Recording] [Question] You have just visited Burma and several ASEAN countries. Would you please tell us about the results of these visits?

[Answer] I am very satisfied with the results of my last visits to ASEAN countries. The result of my visits is beyond our own expectations. Our expected objective is to explain to the ASEAN leaders the proposals of the Ho Chi Minh City of the three foreign ministers of Indochinese countries and to explore whether there is a possibility of dialogue between ASEAN countries and Indochinese countries. [sentence as heard] Now, the result, the first result is that we have established dialogue between the three Indochinese countries and the ASEAN countries. The second thing is that we have agreed to the principle of dealing with the problems facing the two groups of countries in Southeast Asia. The first principle is that we must meet the legitimate interests of both sides, not only one side. For example, so far as the question of the withdrawal of our forces from Cambodia, it is the interest of the ASEAN countries. We meet their request. At the same time, they must meet our interests, that is, the cessation of threats from China. Secondly, they would like to have the neutrality of Cambodia, we would like to have the neutrality of Southeast Asia. So, these two requests must be met at the same time. Thirdly, they are concerned about the security of Thailand, we are concerned about the security of Cambodia, Vietnam and Laos. So both sides must meet these interests. And fourthly, for instance, the international conference of Southeast Asia on the questions of participants, the agenda, the seat of the conference and the date of the conference must be discussed and must be agreed upon by two sides. this is the second result. The third result is that we have discussed bilateral relations between our two countries. I think the result is very good because if we see (?realities) these past 3 years, there is a great struggle between confrontation and dialogue. We could not solve any problem yet but there is a way for dialogue. [end recording]

Concerning the partial withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea, Mr Thach said it is being highly valued by world public opinion: In face of this situation, the Chinese and other reactionaries have distorted the fact saying that Vietnam only withdrew sick soldiers or, before withdrawing part of its troops, Vietnam had sent more troops to Kampuchea. But when I met leaders of the ASEAN countries, they all said the partial withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea was a fine expression or at least a positive step that they all hailed.

Everyone sees that this is our good will which contributes to stabilizing the situation and bringing about peace in Southeast Asia. We hope that if Thailand takes another action or gives a positive response, we will withdraw more troops from Kampuchea.

HANOI DERIDES CGDK FORMATION AS 'BEIJING TRICK'

OW041355 Hanoi Domestic Service in Vietnamese 1100 GMT 3 Aug 82

["Current Events" talk by Dao Nguyen: "Beijing Play on the Thai-Kampuchean Border"]

[Text] The FAR EAST ECONOMIC REVIEW, in its 16 July issue, carried a report describing some very comic scenes in the play of rigging up the disguised Pol Pot coalition government of Kampuchea, staged by the Beijing and Washington managers, with Bangkok's assistance, on the Thai-Kampuchean border.

Following is a brief account of these scenes: On the afternoon of 8 July, in a persistent light rain, Prince Sihanouk and Khieu Sampham were seen riding two elephants while Ieng Sary, dressed in hunter's garb, an umbrella in one hand and his shoes spattered with mud, eagerly followed behind on foot to disappear in a grove. Thirty minutes later, Sihanouk came out of the thicket and mounted a car, flanked by Thai motorized policemen, which speeded to Bangkok where he held a press conference to announce that he had finished forming a coalition government and that he had just returned from a visit to rice paddies deep in the Khmer Rouge-controlled area.

Not only newsmen, but anyone who had a chance to hear that story could not help laughing at this trick of Beijing which, though still in great trouble over its four modernizations, even outdid, in terms of magical powers, Sun Wukong [the monkey king in Chinese mythology] who could travel as far as 130,000 li in the twinkling of an eye. Unlike Sun Wukong who had to travel long distances and resort to his magical powers to achieve his goal, Beijing only had the Kampuchean lackeys enter a grove and then come out of it, and in the process they created a monster, the so-called Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea [CGDK], and visited large areas of the liberated zone.

Admittedly, Beijing's talents are extraordinary, but still Sun Wukong was superior to Beijing because of his powers of metamorphosis which Beijing is obviously lacking. The actors put on stage by Beijing and Washington are still the same ones whose image they had failed to promote. The same actors were seen riding elephants and going by car to Bangkok, although their managers were speaking about them as if they were new people. If Sun Wukong had been in Bangkok that day, he would have sneered at Beijing's trick of trying to present its stale commodity labeled "Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea," which is still reeking of the Khmer Rouge's barbarous massacres but which Beijing, Washington and ASEAN contractors are doing their best to promote.

NHAN DAN SAYS U.S. RESPONSIBLE FOR LEBANON CRISIS

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, August 5 -- The United States is largely responsible for the genocidal crimes committed currently in Beirut by the Zionists, says NHAN DAN today.

The paper points out that the United States has unconditionally aided and abetted the Zionist warmongers, the perfidious enemies of the national independence and sovereignty of Arab nations. Since the beginning of Israeli aggression against Lebanon, it recalls, Washington's repeated words and deeds have entirely chimed in with and served Tel Aviv's war schemes.

The paper condemns both the United States and Israel for pressuring Palestinian fighters and the Palestine Liberation Organization, victims of Israeli aggression, to stop their self-defensive struggle and to withdraw from Beirut and other parts of Lebanon. It also denounces Philip Habib as pressuring, threatening and dividing Arab nations and the various political factions in Lebanon in an attempt to create the biggest obstacle to the united action of the Arab community and to limit their assistance and support for Palestine's just resistance under the P.L.O. leadership.

Obviously, the paper says, Washington and Tel Aviv have joined a plot in weakening and eventually eliminating the Palestinian people's armed struggle, partitioning Lebanon, rigging up a pro-U.S. and pro-Israeli administration in that country, luring Lebanon and several moderate Arab regimes into the Camp David accord, and eventually imposing a U.S.-Israeli neo-colonialist rule on the Middle East. It praises the militant determination of the Palestinian combatants and patriotic Lebanese forces supported by Arab nations, the socialist community, the Non-Aligned Movement and the whole of progressive mankind.

NHAN DAN concludes by hailing Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's recent letter to U.S. President Ronald Reagan as a new, timely demonstration of the Soviet Union's solidarity with the P.L.O. and the peoples of Palestine and Lebanon in their just struggle.

AMBASSADOR TO USSR PRESENTS CREDENTIALS 4 AUG

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, Aug 5 -- The new Vietnamese ambassador to the Soviet Union, Dinh Nho Liem, yesterday presented his credentials to V.V. Kuznetsov, first vice-president of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R.

Speaking on the occasion, Ambassador Dinh Nho Liem expressed the profound gratitude of the Vietnamese party, government, and people to the Communist Party, the Supreme Soviet, the government and the people of the Soviet Union, and President Leonid Brezhnev personally, for their strong support and great, disinterested and effective assistance to the Vietnamese people's long struggle for national independence and socialism.

He quoted the political report of the Fifth Congress of the Communist Party of Vietnam as underlining that solidarity and all-round cooperation with the Soviet Union has always been the keystone of the foreign policy of our party and state. He reaffirmed Vietnam's full support for the peace programme for the 80's and the constructive proposals in the interests of world peace and security put forth by the Soviet party and government and President Leonid Brezhnev.

In his reply, Vice-President V.V. Kuznetsov quoted President L.I. Brezhnev as saying that the Soviet Union puts a high value on its friendship and cooperation with Vietnam and that the Soviet people will remain a reliable friend and ally of the heroic Vietnamese people.

Vietnam, he continued, is actively contributing to making the international atmosphere healthier. It is the outpost of socialism and peace in Southeast Asia. Together with Laos and Kampuchea, Vietnam is countering the imperialists' and hegemonists plans and persistently striving for a healthy situation in the region. The Soviet Union fully supports the efforts of the three Indochinese countries in this direction, particularly their latest constructive initiatives put forth at the foreign ministers conference of Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea held in Ho Chi Minh City recently, he added.

AUSTRALIA

CORRESPONDENTS VIEW FRASER'S PRC VISIT

BK041502 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 1110 GMT 4 Aug 82

[Excerpt] The Australian prime minister, Mr Fraser, has just arrived in Beijing after spending 3 days in Malaysia. This is his second trip to China, and as political correspondent (John Lombard) reports from Canberra, Australian officials view the prime ministerial visit as being very important to the Sino-Australian relationship:

[Begin (Lombard) recording] There have been some important changes in China since Mr Fraser was last there in 1976. Mr Fraser is scheduled to have 3 hours of talks with Premier Zhao and, according to government officials, he is anxious to discuss economic and political issues.

China is desperately seeking new investment and the current leadership is re-emphasizing the need to build relations with Third World developing countries. The significance of Mr Fraser's current visit is that none of the party leaders in power now was there during his last trip in 1976.

Mr Fraser believes in the importance of seeing the new Chinese leaders at the highest level, and there is provision for the Australian prime minister to meet Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping. Mr Fraser's program has 2 hours which are marked: reserved for meeting with senior Chinese officials, which is the Chinese way of indicating a meeting with Deng.

However, Mr Fraser is not the only world leader who is devoting time to a first-hand study of the changing situation in China. The British prime minister, Mrs Thatcher, and the Japanese prime minister, Mr Suzuki, are also scheduled to go to the Chinese capital in the near future. [end recording]

For a look at Mr Fraser's visit in the context of the overall relationship between Australia and China, here's our Beijing correspondent Richard Thwaites:

[Begin Thwaites recording] Apart from the inevitable protocol ceremonies, almost all the available time will be taken up in talks covering, in order, global issues, Pacific and Asian regional issues, and lastly, bilateral issues. If things go as expected, the bilateral relations between Australia and China will occupy the briefest part of the talks. The reason, I have been told, is that Australia-China relations are in such good shape that there'll be few issues to raise. Chinese leaders have every reason to be pleased with these bilateral relations as Australia gives the most and demands little in return.

China always describes its foreign relations as being conducted in the spirit of equality and mutual benefit. Australia's aid agreements with China are all described as cooperation and exchange agreements though it is rare to find an example where the Chinese Government is actually giving anything in return to Australia.

The Australian Development Assistance Board has a program of technical cooperation agreement which will cost Australia some $15 million during the next 5 years. Under these schemes, 6 Australian English-language teachers are working full time in Beijing while 22 Chinese teachers receive training in Australia.

Six Australian forestry experts are working in China's southwest on developing eucalyptus forestry for China. A stream of engineers and surveyors from the Snowy Mountains Engineering Corporation are carrying out surveys for a major hydroelectric scheme near the Burmese border. Four experts are planning a training program for agricultural aviation in China's far western region of Xinjiang. An agreement was signed in Beijing this week under which by the end of this year, 20 Chinese medical postgraduates will be studying in Australia while new equipment and Australian visiting lecturers travel to their medical college in Shandong Province.

Teams of Austalian lecturers in auditing will give courses to help China train the government and commercial auditors it has lacked until now. Australia spent $2.5 million on these schemes last year but the figure should reach over $10 million this year.

Under cultural programs, Australia has some 17 teachers gathered around tertiary institutions in China, and by the beginning of the coming academic semester, we will have about 40 Australian students in China, mostly studying language. By contrast, China will have close to 200 students in Australia, about half studying language while the rest study technical subjects.

The Austalian Embassy has been boosted over the past year or so with an information officer and a military attache. The rented premises are now bursting at the seams with officers working in converted bathrooms and kitchen. Plans for the building of a new and much larger embassy compound have moved slowly through the Chinese bureaucracy, but may finally reach the point of agreement during Mr Fraser's visit.

Trade remains healthy, though China has not been buying as much wheat or metal in the last year or so. Australia retained a surplus of $226 million in last year's figures in spite of a 38 percent increase in imports from China and a 20 percent drop in exports to China. China is pleased with Australia's policy of progressive lowering of import quotas from which China, with its fully controlled labor costs, expects to be the major beneficiary in sales of clothing and footwear.

Internationally, China is likely to seek Australian recognition or at least more open support for the new Kampuchean anti-Vietnamese resistance coalition headed nominally by Prince Sihanouk. In most other fields, Mr Fraser and Beijing's policymakers will find themselves in a great deal of sympathy. On the other hand, there remains a generalized deep suspicion of all foreigners which leaves the Chinese to see ulterior motives in all forms of assistance from foreigners, and therefore, to feel little gratitude or loyalty as a result of aid programs. It remains extremely difficult for Australian students or visiting scholars to gain access to Chinese historical or technical study material such as are freely avaialble to Chinese students in Australia. [end recording]

KOMPAS VIEWS DEFENSE MINISTER'S U.S. VISIT

BK041509 Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 30 July 82 p 4

[Editorial: "The Visit of the Minister of Defense and Security to the United States"]

[Text] The visit of the minister of defense and security, General Muhammad Yusuf, to the United States has been extensively covered and examined from various angles by our correspondent in that country. The minister said he was very satisfied with his meeting with President Ronald Reagan, and described his meeting with U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and the talks between the two delegations as very cordial and held in a very good atmosphere.

Judging from the status of the U.S. civilian and military leaders who came to meet the Indonesian delegation as well as the scope and dimension of the talks, we can conclude that the U.S. Government regarded the visit as important. The United States cannot ignore Indonesia's geographic or strategic position in the Asia-Pacific region.

With the visit of the minister and the invitation to President Suharto to visit the United States next October, certain quarters are inclined to believe that Indonesia is gradually leaning toward the United States. Considering the question of the supply of military equipment, there are even people who think that Indonesia is gradually becoming dependent on the United States. These people are questioning whether Indonesia is still adopting an independent and active policy. It is the same question as when, during the old order, the Indonesian Government received its military supplies from the Soviet Union and maintained active contacts with the Eastern bloc while adopting a cool attitude toward the West, especially the United States.

By obtaining military supplies from a certain country and maintaining cordial relations with that country, we cannot say that the recipient country automatically abandons its independent and active policy. We cannot even say that a recipient country no longer adopts an independent and active policy even though it and the supplier country follow the same policy.

We can say that a country is regarded as being no longer independent and active in its international policy if it forms a political or military alliance with one or more countries belonging to a similar alliance. Under such circumstances, that country no longer decides its own policy but frames its relations with other countries in terms of a hostile attitude.

We must examine whether or not our independent and active policy is still functioning, in other words, is it still functioning in the national interest or in the interest of mankind? If the foreign policy we are following still benefits our national interest and paves the way for our participation to create a world order based on national independence, everlasting peace and social justice -- in line with Article 4 of the Preamble of the 1945 Constitution -- then we can say that we are still following an independent and active foreign policy.

If we consider that our national interests at present could be guaranteed by obtaining military supplies from the United States -- although facts show that not all our weapons come from the United States -- then there is nothing wrong if we take this course, because it will not restrict or hinder our efforts to develop our international relations in line with the provisions of the Preamble of the 1945 Constitution. It is this provision which constitutes the essence of our independent and active foreign policy.

TALKS WITH SINGAPORE COMMUNICATIONS MINISTER HELD

[Text] Jakarta, Aug 4 (ANTARA) -- Singapore Minister of Communications Ong Teng Cheong held talks here Tuesday with his Indonesian counterpart Rusmin Nuryadin. The discussions, held at the Minsitry of Communications here, had the nature of routine consultations and this time dealt with telecommunication and air transportation between the two countries, the spokesman of the Ministry of Communications, Abdullah, told newsmen after the meeting.

The Singapore minister arrived at Halim Perdanakusuma Airport at 0900 yesterday for a 2-day visit in the company of senior officials, including Secretary General of the Ministry of Communications Sim Kee Boon and Director of Telecommunication Sun Siauw Ma. He was accompanied at the talks by the Singapore ambassador here, J.F. Conceicao.

One of the topics discussed was the possibility of Australia's participation in the submarine cable communication system (SKKL) linking Southeast Asia with the Middle East and Europe. This project is an extension of the Medan-Singapore SKKL system built on the basis of a memorandum of understanding signed by the two communications ministers on May 23, 1981.

The two countries have agreed to build the two systems -- one linking Medan-Singapore-Middle East-Europe and the other serving Singapore-Indonesia-Australia. The two projects are now still in the feasibility study stage. The western project is being handled by the four countries Indonesia, Singapore, Saudi Arabia and France and the eastern project by Indonesia, Singapore and Australia.

In the field of air transportation the two sides discussed matters concerning the "Flight Information Region" in the South China Sea area in the light of the best interests of civil aviation in the surrounding countries, including Indonesia. They also discussed the two of the Indonesian Palapa A-1 satellite for border communication between the two countries for realization early next year [sentence as received]. AUSTRALIAN PREMIER'S VISIT 'HIGHLY SUCCESSFUL'

It was pointed out that despite the tariff and other barriers, Taiwan and Japan had penetrated the Australian market successfully. It was also shown that while Australia imported 1.4 billion ringgit a year of textiles and footwear, Malaysia's share of this trade was only 19 million ringgit. The Malaysian Ministry of Trade and Industry can thus be expected to mount a sustained effort to increase Malaysia's share of the Australian market and they are pleased at noting the decision by the Australian prime minister to initiate a joint trade department discussion as well as to help Malaysians learn the Australian system of direct selling to customers.

On the Kampuchean issue, the Malaysian prime minister, Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir Mohamed, made no attempts to change the Australian stand that it cannot support the Pol Pot group as the representative of Kampuchea in the United Nations. Malaysia showed its understanding and respect for the Australian view of recognizing neither the Pol Pot nor the Heng Samrin faction. But Malaysia was successful in allaying the Australian fears that the new Coalition Democratic Kampuchean Government led by Prince Norodom Sihanouk would be dominated by Pol Pot. But, while Malaysia understood Australia's apprehension of the Pol Pot group, it was successful in getting greater Australian understanding, if not support, of the new Coalition Democratic Kampuchean Government.

The Malaysian Government also expressed its appreciation over the question of Malaysian students studying in Australia. The 6,000 Malaysians formed the largest foreign student group and Australia has made no attempts to reduce this intake which has doubled every 3 years. We are also grateful that the Australian Government has continued to maintain its current policy that private students should be made to pay 35 to 40 percent of the total cost of their education. This has meant that more Malaysian students can now afford to study in Australia, thereby reducing the tremendous demand on university places in Malaysia's five universities.

Mr Fraser's expressed willingness to continue the present 15,000 people a year quota of Vietnamese refugees was also welcomed by the Malaysian Government which is now facing a residual problem of these displaced persons. Thus, it can be said that the visit of Mr Malcolm Fraser was a highly successful one. It may lead to even closer contacts between the two friendly nations.

GHAZALI CLARIFIES REMARKS MADE TO SRV'S THACH

BK311311 Kuala Lumpur Domestic Service in English 1130 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] ASEAN is confident that both internally and internationally Prince Sihanouk and Mr Son Sann have the credibility and ability to lead the Kampuchean people. However, in military terms the Khmer Rouge is the strongest of the three groups at this moment. This is what the minister of foreign affairs, Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie, told the Vietnamese foreign minister, Mr Nguyen Co Thach, during his recent 4-day visit to Malaysia. Tan Sri Ghazali said this in a statement issued to clarify an agency report quoting Mr Thach as saying he had told him that the coalition government was at present dominated by Pol Pot and that Prince Sihanouk and Mr Son Sann were junior partners.

In the statement Tan Sri Ghazali explained he had informed Mr Thach that after the Vietnamese withdrawal and with the process of self-determination, it would be entirely left to the people of Kampuchea to decide who should run their affairs. Nobody could have any objection to the Pol Potist elements being dropped out. By the same token nobody would have any objection to the Heng Samrin group running the affairs if it was the wish of the Kampuchean people.

When Mr Thach said that this was an illusion, Tan Sri Ghazali said it was the Heng Samrin regime which was an illusion because it was a puppet government being put into place by Vietnam after its occupation of Kampuchea.

NEW STRAITS TIMES VIEWS NGUYEN CO THACH TOUR

BK311138 Kuala Lumpur NEW STRAITS TIMES in English 30 Jul 82 p 16

[Editorial: "Hanoi's Line"]

[Text] The contrast in the results of Nguyen Co Thach's visits to Singapore and Malaysia must have mystified many. Reports from the island republic obviously showed that the Vietnamese leader and his Singapore counterpart Mr S. Dhanabalan had some pointed exchanges. The Vietnamese were just as inflexible as before was how the Singapore minister summed up Hanoi's attitude.

In Kuala Lumpur, both Malaysia and Vietnam expressed satisfaction and optimism over the outcome of the talks. Malaysia's optimism, however, is not unbridled as graphically illustrated by Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie. "Like a bunch of roses, I enjoy the flowers but I take care of the thorns as well," said he. He would not commit himself when asked if Vietnam wanted a way out of the Kampuchean problem, saying that it would be presumptuous to pass that kind of judgment. But he perceives that Vietnam has a great deal of desire to be a close friend of ASEAN's.

The Vietnamese also left the impression that they have changed their rigid position over the Kampuchean issue. Ever since the January 1979 invasion of Kampuchea, open discussion by the Vietnamese on the conflict has been inconceivable. In fact, Hanoi chose all this while to deny there was a Kampuchean problem and had maintained that the situation there was non-negotiable and irreversible. This time around, both privately and openly, after the pleasantries, the Vietnamese leader dwelt entirely on the Kampuchean problem, including withdrawal of Vietnamese forces. The Vietnamese, however, have not come down from their maximum position. Given the differences between Vietnam and Malaysia and the other ASEAN countries, only time can tell if there is any sincerity on the part of Hanoi to bring to a peaceful end the protracted hostilities, the source of tension in South-East Asia. A definite positive outcome of the visits is keeping the communication lines open between ASEAN and Hanoi.

MAHATHIR SAYS INTERNAL SECURITY ACT 'ESSENTIAL'

BK041315 Kuala Lumpur Domestic Service in English 1130 GMT 4 Aug 82

Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir Mohamed assured the group that all possible precautions were taken to ensure only the guilty were tried under the act. He expressed concern that if the ISA was relaxed, guilty persons would escape. The prime minister explained that it was the right of all Malaysians that they are not threatened by people who do not care about their lives, such as communist terrorists. Human rights must also consider not only the accused but also the fate of the victims and their families. He pointed out that there are 365 people who had lost their limbs and eyesight due to communist activities. Countless others had lost their lives.

The prime minister told the group that Malaysia had nothing to hide. He disclosed that another group from the Amnesty International had written to him requesting permission to visit Malaysia. He had no objection to the visit. Malaysia, he added, fully subscribed to the human rights clauses of the United Nations.

Police have reminded the people that any demonstration or rally in public places without police permission is against the law. A statement from the police headquarters advised the public that rallies might be used by subversive elements to create unrest among the people. It pointed out several organizations and individuals have staged protests to the visit by a group of foreign lawyers representing the so-called Human Rights Action Group to Malaysia with regard to the Internal Security Act. The public has been advised that any form of protest against the visit should be done within the law.

BUSINESS DAY SCORES U.S. OVER TRADE PROPOSALS

[Editorial: "Parity Rights Myth Is Dead and Buried"]

[Text] The reported insistence of the United States for a grant of "national treatment and special preference" in the proposed trade agreement with the Philippines has again brought the issue of parity rights into focus.

The same arrangement was contained in the trade agreement the two countries signed in 1955. Even before the treaty lapsed in 1974, it had become clear that parity rights were a myth. The Americans came as colonialists and were rewarded with equal treatment. Their capitalists were placed on equal footing with local entrepreneurs in the exploitation of our natural resources. It was during the period of parity rights when American interests took roots here. But it can never be said that Filipinos have won the same headway in America's territory.

Under the parity rights atmosphere, Philippine exports of sugar to the United States took no less than four years to match quota levels set under the trade treaty. Once they reached the proper level, sugar exports needed the support of an external crisis -- that in Cuba -- to gain assurance of a steady market. Another major source of revenue for the Philippines, coconut oil, although given preferential duty at that time, could not fully penetrate the American market because the American vegetable oil producers were crying for protection. Protection of the American producers won.

On foreign investment, one established fact in the trends is that American firms preferred to stay in the Philippines because of high market penetration and high rates of profits. In one survey of American companies here, the parity rights was never mentioned as a basic consideration for putting their capital.

The Americans' demand for parity rights -- which surprisingly has been followed by at least one local proposal to hold a national referendum to determine the true sentiments of the Filipinos -- can only be viewed with alarm -- especially considering that the Americans are also proposing to impose absolute restrictions on Philippine exports to the U.S. under the same trade agreement. There are rules on international trade established by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade which must be our guide in our foreign trade relations with other countries. Surely it is only logical to assume that the United States will also follow these rules in the spirit of free enterprise, which the American Government never fails to champion. Agreeing to difficult demands being presented to us now by American trade negotiators would only represent a giant step backward in our march to boost trade.

Only the Americans have benefited from the parity rights arrangement between the Philippines and the United States. Simple evidence are the American consumer goods in the domestic market.

When the Philippine Government took the ending of parity rights in 1974 as a matter of fact rather than a cause for alarm, it took the most intelligent position. Philippine business was well aware of that event, and instead of panicking, became more imaginative in seeking new markets, new investors, and a fresh outlook towards growth. That led us to whatever advances we have achieved so far.

Parity rights perhaps can work if the two parties involved are of the same class. Between a developing country like the Philippines and an economic giant like the United States, there can be no parity. It is clear then that there can never be equality among unequals. For this reason alone, the U.S. demand for new parity rights with the Philippines must be rejected vigorously by the Filipino people.

But this is not to entirely belittle the wide perspective of economic relations between the United States and the Philippines during the effectivity of parity rights. For instance, the economic policies implemented by the Philippine Government and the uncertainties in the American political arena during the time did not help the arrangement to succeed. Nevertheless, it seems incongruous to have parity rights in bilateral relations now when interdependence among nations and multilateral arrangements are the best strategies. The parity rights myth is long dead and buried. Let's see it stays that way for good.

TIMES JOURNAL ON JAPANESE 'REWRITING OF HISTORY'

[Editorial: "Is Japan Reviving Its Pre-War Dreams?"]

[Text] Considerable sound and fury have been generated by the attempt of Japanese historians to rewrite the history of their country. The historians recently wrote a new history textbook for use by Japanese schoolchildren. It was not simply a matter of writing a textbook. It was more a rewriting of history. And that has made a lot of difference and explained why Tokyo is now having difficulties with its neighbors, notably, China, and North and South Korea. Member countries of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) have not yet joined the chorus of complaints.

In the new textbook on Japanese history, the word "invasion" has been substituted with the more neutral word "advance." Thus, Japanese soldiers did not "invade" Southeast Asia, China and Korea. They just "advanced." Similar window-dressing has been done on the most ignominious events in modern Japanese history: The 1931 occupation of Manchuria, the conquest of Korea, and the infamous rape of Nanking in 1937. Japanese historians now simply refer to the Nanking massacre as an incident in which the Japanese "killed many of the Chinese Army." Previously, textbooks were more specific about Japanese atrocities: "The Japanese Army promoted killing, violence, robbery and arson... the victims numbered 200,000."

It may be that Japanese historians are trying to erase the lingering negative effects of Japan's past. They may be also trying to show that Japan no longer has designs for a Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere.

Understandably, Japan's neighbors do not look kindly on such efforts to obliterate the stigma of the past. China considers the revision of history serious enough to cancel this week the projected visit to Beijing next month of Japan's education minister, Heiji Ogawa.

The Philippine Foreign Ministry, for its part, should inquire whether this country has been affected by what seems to laymen to be a Japanese attempt to distort Asia's history. If so it behooves the government to comment -- even if only for the record.

REPAIR FACILITIES FOR SOVIET SHIPS URGED

HK050133 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 4 Aug 82 p 19

[Text] The Philippine Shipbuilders and Repairers Association (Philsar) urged President Marcos yesterday to reconsider the negative recommendation of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on the offer of Russia and other socialist countries to repair their ships in Philippine shipyards.

Philsar President Capt. Hermenegildo Domingo said the ship repair offer would be a great boost to the development and growth of the shipbuilding and ship repair industry which has been suffering from recession for sometime now.

He said that despite the incentives given by the government, through PD [Presidential Decree] 666 to bail out the industry, practically all shipyards have been losing due to overcapacity compared to the number of ships to be serviced.

Domingo said that the Ministry of Foreign Affairs was reported to have recommended to the president to shelve the offer based on intelligence reports of "Russian spies." He said the offer should be studied carefully based on the best interest of the country and not on "hysterical" intelligence reports.

According to Domingo, the number of Russian ships which called on Philippine ports in 1981, based on records of the Philippine Ports Authority and the Filsov Shipping Agency, Inc., local agent for Russian shipping lines, was about 155 vessels. Based on this figure, he said, the estimated volume of ship repair business for local shipyards would be between $25 to $30 million a year.

The shipbuilders said the negative recommendation of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on the offer runs counter to the policy of the president and the first lady and Human Settlements Minister Imelda R. Marcos to open up trade links with all countries, including socialist countries like the Soviet Union.

"We are fully supporting the president and the first lady in finding new business opportunities for our country such as socialist flag ship repairs in a local and rational fashion, instead of yielding too quickly to the panicky and hysterical reporting of the so-called intelligence sources," they said.

They said that in the case of Singapore after discovering a Russian spy, the Singaporean Government just deported him, but kept the Russian ship repair business without unnecessarily depriving their shipbuilding industry the needed business.

"If we accept the offer of Russia to have her ships repaired in local shipyards, the proper government agencies are dutybound to go after so-called Russian spies if there are any," they said.

Russia and other socialist countries are a major buyer of Philippine coconut and sugar.

ASEAN FOREIGN MINISTERS MEET IN BANGKOK 7 AUG

Dhanabalan Arrives

In a hard-hitting statement, the Singaporean diplomat referred to Vietnam's attitude on Cambodia as "inflexible", and said that no amount of talking would change it. "Vietnam has not yet come to a point where it is prepared to negotiate a political settlement in Cambodia", he said. "The situation in Cambodia is the main point of difference between Hanoi and the ASEAN, and Hanoi has shown that it is not prepared to discuss a solution to the Cambodian problem".

Mr Dhanabalan said in spite of efforts by Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach to give the impression that his country is flexible, there has been no change in the Vietnamese position. He said that Mr Thach had made it clear during his visit to ASEAN countries last month that there will be no withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia until China signs a non-aggression pact with Vietnam. "Vietnam is prepared at a regional conference to discuss any other regional matters, but they will not talk about Cambodia", Mr Dhanabalan said.

The Singaporean foreign minister reiterated the ASEAN stand that Vietnam must withdraw its troops from Cambodia, and that the Cambodian people must be allowed the right to choose their own government. He said that the Cambodian issue would be discussed at tomorrow's meeting, which would be to finalise ASEAN's strategy at the U.N. General Assembly starting next month. "We have persuaded other countries not to give aid to Vietnam while she has this militant attitude, and we will continue to call on countries in the U.N. to support Cambodia with humanitarian aid", he said. He added that any aid funnelled to the newly-formed Cambodian coalition government made up of former head of state Norodom Sihanouk, ex-Premier Son Sann and the ousted Chinese-backed Khmer Rouge would not necessarily go to the Khmer Rouge, the only viable guerrilla force in Cambodia.

Talking about the alleged threats to ASEAN, Mr Dhanabalan said that the Vietnamese foreign minister had issued a warning to the ASEAN countries. He said that along with China, ASEAN was interfering in the internal affairs of the Indochinese states. He said that China had Maoist parties in the region, and told me that Vietnam could do the same thing. He warned that if ASEAN did not accept the situation in Cambodia, there would be danger for us, Mr Dhanabalan said.

[Text] Bangkok, Aug 6 (AFP) -- There is no real change in Vietnam's objective of keeping its troops in Cambodia, the foreign ministers of Indonesia and Malaysia said today in Bangkok. Mokhtar Kusumaatmaja of Indonesia and Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie of Malaysia arrived together in Bangkok this afternoon for tomorrow's special one-day meeting of the foreign ministers of the five countries in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, ASEAN -- Thailand, Singapore, Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines.

"Vietnam feels that the only way to preserve its own security is to continue to occupy Kampuchea," Mr Ghazali said on arrival at Don Muang airport.

"But it is Hanoi's occupation of Kampuchea that will bring the threat to all of us (in ASEAN), both from the Soviet Union and China." He said that during the recent visit of Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach to Malaysia, Mr. Thach had reiterated that Vietnam would consider a total withdrawal of troops is the threat from China was removed. He added: "With China's involvement with local revolutionary forces (in ASEAN countries), Vietnam thinks that if they bring in the 'bogy' of the Chinese, we in ASEAN would feel much more sympathetic with the idea of a China threat." He said that what Vietname meant was the threat of subversion internally by China, not direct aggression from Beijing.

"I told Mr. Thach that if Vietnamese troops leave Kampuchean soil, a neutral Kampuchea under (former head of state Prince Norodom) Sihanouk would free Vietnam from subversion." Asked if the Chinese-backed Khmer Rouge should be drooped from the newly-formed Cambodian coalition, Mr Ghazali said that it was for the Khmer people themselves to make that decision, not ASEAN, in spite of the fact that many Western countries disapproved of the regime. "We do not link approval with recognition," he said. The Khmer Rouge, ousted from Phnom Penh in January 1979, is still recognised by the United Nations as the legal representative of Cambodia.

Both foreign ministers said that in spite of Mr. Thach's recent visit to three ASEAN countries, "there is no real change in the objective of Vietnam to stay in Kampuchea". Mr. Mokhtar said that although Mr. Thach's visit had not brought any solution to the Cambodian problem closer, it had not been completely useless. "It is a good sign that he came on the planned tour in spite of the formation of the coalition," he said. "There is a need to maintain this dialogue between ASEAN and Vietnam."

Press Conference Held

[Text] The five ASEAN foreign ministers gave a joint press conference at the Oriental Hotel this evening on the ASEAN foreign ministers' special session. The session studied the Kampuchean problem and agreed that Vietnam has not changed its attitude and policy on the issue. ASEAN, meanwhile, if firm in its resolution to seek a political settlement to the problem by having all foreign forces pull out of Kampuchea and allowing the Kampuchean people to enjoy the right to self-determination. The session also assessed the result of the visit to Vietnam by the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference of Kampuchea. [sentence as heard] It expressed thanks to the committee for its effort to seek ways to solve the problem.

Asked how the image of the tripartite coalition government of Kampuchea can be improved since its includes a faction unacceptable to others, the ASEAN foreign ministers explained that most UN members gave overwhelming support to Democratic Kampuchea. The new coalition government is made up of three Khmer factions. Prince Sihanouk himself agreed to forget the bitter past of his detention in Kampuchea for the sake of his country's future.

Concerning the meeting's assessment of the Vietnamese foreign minister's visit to ASEAN and some European countries, the meeting considers that the Vietnamese foreign minister's trip was a diplomatic offensive. Vietnam wants to mount its campaign against China by stressing China's threats and its support for communist parties in certain countries. Vietnam also wants to obstruct ASEAN's efforts to seek a political settlement of the Kampuchean issue. There is nothing new in Vietnam's proposals.

Asked whether there is any hope for a Vietnamese withdrawal from Kampuchea, the foreign ministers said the formation of the tripartite coalition government of Kampuchea is a means towards a political solution to the problem.

BANGKOK POST Report

[Text] ASEAN foreign ministers concluded yesterday that Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach's visits to three ASEAN countries showed no change in Hanoi's policy on the Kampuchean problem. In their turn, they reaffirmed ASEAN's stand on the principles of total withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea and self-determination for the Khmer people under the United Nations General Assembly resolution and International Conference on Kampuchea decisions.

Before he left for home last night, Indonesian Foreign Minister Mokhtar Kusumaatmaja said he hoped that when Thach visits Jakarta and Manila in October there would be signs of some change.

At a press conference at the end of a one-day meeting, Malaysian Foreign Minister Ghazali Shafie said that Thach had three objectives during his recent tour of Southeast Asia: To mobilise opinion against China, to frustrate ASEAN strategy and to regain Western sympathy. Thach tried to use the so-called "Chinese threat" to exploit the problem created by China in Malaysia and other Southeast Asian countries previously. He tried to use "genocide" by the Khmer Rouge to regain the sympathy of European countries which used to occupy other countries. "It was a diplomatic offensive," Shafie said.

Philippine Foreign Minister Carlos Romulo emphasised that what the Khmer Rouge did "is condemned by every ASEAN foreign minister." However, the three factions -- including Prince Norodom Sihanouk, five of whose children were killed and who was imprisoned for three years by the Khmer Rouge -- submerged their animosities to form a coalition government. Now, instead of just the Khmer Rouge, the Democratic Kampuchea Government comprises three nationalist forces. Asked where ASEAN would go from now, General Romulo said: "We are staying where we are, on our principles."

Mokhtar said that steps have been taken to get Prince Sihanouk an invitation to speak at the Non-aligned Conference to be held in Baghdad later this year. It was learned that the ASEAN foreign ministers considered all options open to ASEAN, discussed tactics to implement strategy based on the UN and ICK resolutions, and exchanged views on global problems with particular reference to Lebanon.

Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila, chairman of the ASEAN Standing Committee, noted that the ASEAN foreign ministers held their special meeting on the eve of the 15th anniversary of ASEAN. Today is the anniversary of the Bangkok declaration. Air Chief Marshal Sitthi, reading a press statement, reported that an ASEAN task force had been formed and it will undertake a comprehensive review and appraisal of ASEAN cooperation on September 15 in Bangkok. The task force comprises three delegates from each country. It was learned that Thailand's team is headed by former Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Anan Panyarachun.

The foreign ministers "reaffirmed ASEAN's policy to make every effort and to continue with consultations to seek a comprehensive political solution within the framework and principles of the ICK declaration and other relevant UN resolutions, which have been overwhelmingly endorsed by the international community." When a foreign correspondent challenged this statement by saying that the abstentions were votes against Democratic Kampuchea, General Romulo explained how abstentions were used and meant what they were -- abstentions. ACM Sitthi read out voting figures for the past three years to show increasing support for Democratic Kampuchea.

The ASEAN foreign ministers stressed that total Vietnamese withdrawal from Kampuchea and self-determination for the Khmer people "would restore Kampuchea as a free, independent, sovereign and neutral country, and is vital to the establishment of the zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in Southeast Asia."

The ministers "welcomed the Government of Democratic Kampuchea under the presidency of Prince Norodom Sihanouk as a positive step towards the comprehensive political solution." They "urged the international community to render full support to Prince Sihanouk's government."

When asked what was meant by "full support," Shafie said that each government would make its own decision.

On Lebanon, the ministers "expressed their grave concern over the prevailing situation and called for the immediate implementation of the relevant Security Council and General Assembly resolutions."

They also called for "global negotiations."

ACM Sitthi will inform Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr, ICK Chairman, of the results of yesterday's ASEAN conference. All Thai embassies were instructed to inform the governments to which they are assigned about the results. The ASEAN foreign ministers are scheduled to meet with Pahr at the UN in New York on September 27. Thai officials commenting on yesterday's meeting said the conference showed solidarity among the ASEAN governments and the clarity of the ASEAN position on Kampuchea.

SUZUKI SAID DETERMINED TO REWRITE TEXTBOOK REVISIONS

[Excerpt] Tokyo, Aug 8, KYODO -- Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki has been determined to rewrite revised descriptions on Japanese history textbooks to calm down the storm in Japanese-Chinese and Japanese-South Korean relations, the ASAHI SHIMBUN reported Sunday. The influential daily newspaper, in a frontpage story, said the prime minister has delivered his intention to Education Minister Heiji Ogawa and has begun preparations to persuade his Liberal-Demoeratic Party to agree with him.

ASAHI, without making clear its news source, said Suzuki is concerned that anti-Japanese sentiments may flare up in China and South Korea should the textbook controversy be prolonged.

Suzuki: Issue Soon Resolved

OW081005 Tokyo KYODO in English 0947 GMT 8 Aug 82

[Text] Nagasaki, Aug 8, KYODO -- Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki said here Sunday the current controversy over textbook revision regarding Japan's wartime record in China will be resolved before his scheduled visit to Beijing in late September.

The prime minister expressed his belief at a news conference following his arrival here to attend the annual memorial service for victims of the atomic bombing of Nagasaki 37 years ago. The rites will be held at the city's Peace Park Monday morning.

Prime Minister Suzuki said his government will deal with the Japan-China dispute over revision of high school book descriptions of the actions of the defunct Imperial Army in China before and during World War II with "sincerity." He expressed the belief that the matter will be settled satisfactorily before "my trip to China" in late September.

He is scheduled to visit Beijing on September 26 on the 10th anniversary of the normalization of relations between the two countries. Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang visited Japan May 31-June 5.

"Japan-China friendly relations are now mature," Prime Minister Suzuki said. "I believe (the textbook issue) will be settled satisfactorily if we strive for it with sincerity."

He also indicated that he will call for a special session of the Diet in autumn to deal with administrative reform -- the streamlining of the burgeoning government structure -- measures to prop up the sluggish domestic economy and financial reconstruction.

Asked if his government was prepared to retract textbook terminology of the wartime Japanese "invasion" of China which has been revised to an "advance" touching off the current row with China, the prime minister said the issue has not yet reached such a "concrete" matter.

He said he will tackle the issue with sincerity by listening to views he obtains "through diplomatic and other channels." This apparently meant that he will wait for reports to be brought home by two government officials who flew to Beijing Sunday for a four-day visit.

Officials Leave for PRC

They are Hiroshi Hashimoto, director general of the Foreign Ministry's Public Information and Cultural Affairs Bureau, and Hitoshi Osaki, director general of the Science and International Affairs Bureau of the Education Ministry.

They are scheduled to stay in Beijing for four days for talks with Chinese Government officials on textbook revision which has become a bitter diplomatic issue involving Japan, China and South Korea. Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki's government has also expressed a desire to dispatch officials to Seoul but South Korea has thus far given no official indication of when it can accept them.

Both China and South Korea have officially demanded that Japan delete such expressions as "advance" for "invasion" of the defunct Japanese army into China and "mobilization" for "forced conscription" of Korean workers into Japan.

Hashimoto and Osaki are expected to tell Chinese officials that Japan would make all-out efforts to settle the issue and that friendly relations between Japan and China would remain unchanged. The two men are also likely to explain to the Chinese the Japanese perception of its obligations for the war, its diplomatic stance and the Education Ministry's textbook screening system, and seek Chinese understanding.

FTC REFUTES U.S. UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES CHARGE

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 6, KYODO -- A U.S. Government official has charged some Japanese trade practices unfairly discriminate against foreign products, officials of the Fair Trade Commission (FTC) said Friday. The officials, who declined to be named, said James Murphy, U.S. assistant trade representative, had met senior officials of the commission, the Japanese watch-dog of trade practices under the antimonopoly law.

Murphy is visiting Japan to lead the U.S. delegation at the four-day Japan-U.S. working-level consultations on the second package of market-opening measures which opened Tuesday.

Murphy, at an unusual meeting with FTC officials, cited some specific examples of alleged unfair trade practices by Japanese firms or government agencies, the officials said. He said Japanese import systems for lumber and petrochemicals may be unfairly discriminating against foreign products and that the Japan Tobacco and Salt Public Corporation, a government agency, also is conducting unfair advertising for U.S.-made tobacco. He also noted there are also some examples of Japanese firms restricting American exports to Japan through equity participation in U.S. export companies, the officials added.

The FTC refuted the charges saying that the specific cases cited by the U.S. official do not necessarily represent unfair import restrictions. But it promised to take measures to correct unfair practices if they are detected, they said. The FTC also emphasized it is making every effort to improve Japan's distribution machinery -- which has been under growing criticism from overseas as a major aspect of protectionism -- as part of the second package of market-opening measures.

Murphy and Japanese FTC officials have agreed to cooperate in the exchange of information, they said.

HIGH TECHNOLOGY COOPERATION TALKS WITH U.S. END

OW070757 Tokyo KYODO in English 0507 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 7, KYODO -- Japan and the United States Saturday ended two days of informal but "productive" consultations on expansion of high technology cooperation and promotion of research and development. The meeting focused on semiconductors, microprocessors and communications equipment, according to the Ministry of International Trade and Industry.

The Japan-U.S. high technology working group, created earlier this year, held its first formal meeting in Hawaii July 7-9. A MITI official said the informal Tokyo meeting touched on various subjects, including those covered in the Hawaii conference. The working group will hold its second formal meeting sometime in September, he added.

The U.S. delegation, headed by Assistant U.S. Trade Representative James M. Murphy, complained about a slump in the share of U.S. semiconductors in the Japanese market following the entry into the market of local makers. The Japanese group, led by Kengo Ishii, deputy director-general of MITI's Machinery and Information Industries Bureau, insisted this was not the case and pointed to the fluctuating state of the microprocessor market.

The two countries also discussed the discrepancies in the amount of bilateral shipments of semiconductors with the Japanese putting U.S. semiconductor exports to Japan in 1981 at dollar 350 million while the U.S. estimated only dollar 150 million.

But the two countries agreed on the figure for Japan's semiconductors exports to the United States last year, dollar 350 million, a MITI spokesman said. The spokesman said the discrepancies were important in that both countries were nervous about the trade imbalance to be caused by such sensitive products as semiconductors.

INDIRA GANDHI CONCLUDES UNOFFICIAL VISIT 6 AUG

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 6, KYODO -- Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi left here for home by a special plane Friday evening after ending a two-day unofficial visit. She made her first visit to Japan in 13 years on her way home from the United States.

While in Tokyo she met with her Japanese counterpart Zenko Suzuki, during which she obtained Japan's assurance of its technological and economic cooperation for India's 1980-84 development plan.

SUZUKI PLEDGES GREATER EFFORTS FOR WORLD PEACE

OW090719 Tokyo KYODO in English 0345 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Nagasaki, Aug 9, KYODO -- Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki marked the 37th anniversary of the atomic bombing of Nagasaki Monday with concern over growing arms race and a pledge to make greater efforts for peace. He was the first government leader in six years to attend the anniversary ceremony for the 1945 nuclear bombing of this southwestern Japan city.

In a prepared speech, Suzuki said the growing arms race is posing a threat to world peace. But he assured an audience of A-bomb survivors and other citizens that his government will maintain a three-point non-nuclear principle, banning production, possession and introduction of nuclear weapons in Japan.

Suzuki said, "We have been making efforts to bring about permanent world peace on the basis of this principle. Visiting Nagasaki now, I'm newly determined to continue the peace efforts."

The anniversary was held at the Peace Park built at ground zero of the second nuclear holocaust experienced by the Japanese toward the end of World War II.

U.S. GENERAL'S REMARKS ON U.S. FORCES CRITICIZED

SK071122 Pyongyang KCNA in English 1044 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 7 (KCNA) -- Scott, deputy commander of the "South Korea-U.S. Combined Forces," spoke ill of us at a "seminar," blaring that in case of emergency the U.S. forces in South Korea would be promptly involved with war without congressional sanction and the U.S. forces would not be withdrawn from South Korea for the maintenance of peace of the Korean Peninsula.

The signed commentary of MINJU CHOSON says: This sophism of Scott was a war jargon openly revealing the heinous scheme of the U.S. imperialists to keep their aggression troops in South Korea and promptly hurl them on to the battlefields with the provocation of a new war of aggression and attack the northern half of the republic.

"Prompt involvement" and so on trumpeted by the U.S. imperialists, as a matter fact, made it clear that, in case of a war in Korea, the U.S. forces would automatically be involved without congressional approval.

It is shameless of the U.S. imperialists to argue for the "benefit" of the occupation of South Korea by the U.S. troops and cry over someone's "provocation" while mumbling about "maintenance of peace."

The U.S. imperialists' talk about "peace" and "provocation" is a deceptive slogan, to all intents and purposes, for justifying their policy of occupation of South Korea and war preparations against the northern half of the republic and an artifice to allay the anti-U.S. opinion growing everywhere in the world.

There has not existed and does not exist "threat of southward invasion" in Korea, and it is known to everyone that the U.S. imperialist aggression troops are present in South Korea to keep hold on South Korea permanently as their colony and invade the northern half of the republic.

With no crafty ruse can the U.S. imperialists conceal (?their heinous) design.

VRPR URGES STRIKES BY WORKERS AT U.S. BASES

SK061015 (Clandestine) Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in Korean to South Korea 1000 GMT 5 Aug 82

[Dialogue on "The Need To Have a Correct View of the United States" from "Today's Feature" program]

[Text] [First speaker] To achieve the fatherland's reunification -- the supreme, long cherished desire of the people -- our people should rise up as one in the struggle to force the U.S. forces, the basic obstacle to our national reunification, to withdraw from this land. So, for this struggle, we should have a correct view of the United States.

Clamoring -- no matter how sweetly -- about national reunification while speaking no word about the withdrawal of U.S. forces from South Korea is not an attitude of desiring reunification. The point is that we should have a correct view on the U.S. forces in South Korea.

[First speaker] That's right. Only when we have a correct view on the U.S. forces in South Korea can we actively join the anti-U.S. struggle and resolutely struggle under all adverse circumstances.

[Second speaker] That's right. The recently mounting anti-U.S. sentiment among the people along with the slogan "Yankee go home" are an expression of our people's firm will to restore national sovereignty by driving the U.S. forces out of this land. Therefore, our people should not have even the slightest delusion about the U.S. forces occupying South Korea but should have a view and a stand -- a view regarding them as aggressors and maurauders.

[First speaker] You are correct. Now, I think that important in the struggle to drive out the U.S. forces in South Korea is to correctly combine all forms of struggle.

[Second speaker] Yes, it is important to properly combine various forms of struggle. As you know, the forms of struggle can include protests, appeals, demonstrations, sit-ins, terror and strikes. In opposing the U.S. forces occupying South Korea we should properly utilize and combine these forms. In other words, it is important to actively and properly combine these forms of struggle if they are found conducive to the struggle opposing the U.S. forces in South Korea. These forms of struggle should be combined in conformity with the demands of the prevailing situation and with the intellectual level of the masses. At the same time, through this combination of these forms of struggle we should deal constant blows at the foreign aggressors [words indistinct].

[First speaker] I think it is most important for us to prevent U.S. forces in South Korea from setting feet in this land. [sentence as heard]

[Second speaker] That's right. The patriotic people of all walks of life as well as employees at U.S. military bases should everywhere resolutely refuse to participate in the transportation of war supplies of U.S. forces and in loading and unloading cargo and should strongly oppose frantic war exercises and the expansion of military installations. They should not overlook the barbarous acts committed by the U.S. forces in South Korea, such as acts defaming our people through rape, bloodshed, robbery, and maurauding. If our people wage a strong anti-U.S. struggle everywhere there are U.S. forces in South Korea, the latter will be unable to (?withstand this.)

[First speaker] To drive the U.S. forces out of this land and to reunify the divided fatherland, our people should firmly unite under the banner of anti-U.S. independence and struggle on a nationwide scale. This is important.

[Second speaker] That's right. History has never witnessed aggressors withdrawing by themselves from an area they occupied. The struggle to drive out the U.S. forces -- who are the most atrocious and cunning in the world -- in South Korea cannot be achieved with the strength of one or two men or with the strength of one social segment. Therefore, the people of all walks of life should firmly unite and struggle.

[First speaker] Unity is the only weapon of struggle and the key to victory.

[Second speaker] Yes. We can win victory in the anti-U.S. national salvation struggle only through the united strength of the people. Therefore, anyone, if he desires national reunification, and if he is concerned about the country's destiny, should firmly unite under the banner of anti-U.S. independence, transcend differences in ideologies and political views, form a strong united national front and unfold a massive joint struggle. If our people firmly unite and wage an anti-U.S. national salvation struggle, the dawn of the fatherland reunification will come without fail.

[First speaker] That's right. We can discuss various other matters to banish U.S. forces from this land. Let us discuss them at some other time. Our people should firmly unite under the anti-U.S. banner for independence and should rise as one in the nation-saving, anti-U.S. struggle to banish U.S. forces from this land and expedite the cause for the fatherland's reunification. Now it is time for us to close. I will see you later. Thank you.

U.S. SEEN AS MASTERMIND OF KIM TAE-CHUNG CASE

[NODONG SINMUN 8 August special article: "The U.S. Imperialists Are the Mastermind of the Kim Tae-chung Case"-- KCNA identifies this as a signed commentary]

[Text] Already 9 years have elapsed since the South Korean democratic personage Kim Tae-chung was illegally kidnapped in Tokyo, Japan, by the former dictator.

Kim Tae-chung, who has suffered all sorts of repression under the shackles of the cursed Yusin dictator, remains the victim of the fascist military dictatorship of Chon Tu-hwan, languishing unimaginably in his jail cell. He is in a dangerous situation, not knowing when he will die.

Expressing deep concern over the fate of the democratic personage Kim Tae-chung, broad social circles of the world are raising their voices, demanding the immediate release of Kim Tae-chung.

The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught: The barbarous acts of the South Korean fascist military elements who are evoking indignation from the people of the world are being committed under U.S. protection and control.

As is the case of all the maneuvers being committed by the South Korean fascist military elements, the U.S. imperialists are the mastermind of the act of suppression directed against Kim Tae-chung. The traitorous Pak Chong-hui clique's kidnapping of the democratic personage Kim Tae-chung in Tokyo in broad daylight in the early 1970's was in accordance with a U.S. CIA scenario.

Frightened by the aspiration for democracy and reunification growing among the South Korean people and Kim Tae-chung's political activities abroad following the announcement of the North-South joint communique, the U.S. imperialist aggressors maneuvered to eradicate him and craftily organized a kidnap plot when he arrived in Tokyo from his visit to the United States.

The kidnapping of Kim Tae-chung was a joint international terrorist act which was formulated by the U.S. CIA and executed by South Korea's puppet Central Intelligence Agency with the Japanese reactionaries' tacit approval.

The traitorous Chon Tu-hwan clique's suppression of Kim Tae-chung is being committed at the order of the United States. Following the October incident, the people's aspiration and demand for social democratization and peaceful reunification rapidly grew in South Korea, deepening the crisis facing the U.S. imperialists' colonial rule. By establishing a fascist military dictatorial system more wicked than the Yusin dictatorship in South Korea, the U.S. imperialists schemed to overcome the weak colonial rule's crisis. The biggest obstacle facing the U.S. imperialists in their scheme were democratic personages such as Kim Tae-chung and the brave advance of the people of all walks of life who aspired to democracy and reunification.

It was for the eradication of such obstacles hindering their scheme to establish a fascist military dictatorship that the U.S. imperialists had Wickham, commander of U.S. forces in South Korea, order the Chon Tu-hwan military hooligan group to obliterate the forces aspiring for democracy and reunification in the 17 May fascist violence.

At the orders of his master, the Chon Tu-hwan ring surrounded Kim Tae-chung's house by mobilizing some 70 martial law army troops on the evening of 17 May, 1980, and committed fascist acts of arresting Kim Tae-chung, who was in his pajamas in his study, and taking him to prison. Thus, the Kim Tae-chung case originated by the former dictator in the early 1970's took on a new twist with the political scheme of the Chon Tu-hwan hooligan clique in the 1980's.

Since Kim Tae-chung was placed in a cellar of the puppet security command, the fascist Chon Tu-hwan clique has committed vicious acts of sentencing him to capital punishment on charges of so-called sedition, violation of anticommunist laws, national security laws and martial law decrees -- fabricating preposterous charges after subjecting him to barbarous torture beyond imagination.

The snare set for Kim Tae-chung by the puppets was in fact ordered by the U.S. imperialists. Clearly, the U.S. imperialists openly supported the fascist clique's acts of fratricide and trampling on human rights by saying that the security of South Korea takes precedence over human rights when the murderous Chon Tu-hwan hooligan group, after covering the city with blood and dead bodies, was engaged in a game of murderous trial against democratic personages such as Kim Tae-chung and patriotic peoples.

Unable to execute their vicious plot to put Kim Tae-chung to death in the face of the strong denunciation and protest of the peace-loving people of the world, the U.S. imperialists, saying that they could appease public opinion at home and abroad and save face only by commuting the death sentence imposed on Kim Tae-chung to a life sentence, ordered the puppets to commute his death sentence.

This was an act designed to save U.S. face before public opinion at home and abroad. Their intention to destroy Kim Tae-chung in his prison cell has not changed.

Facts clearly show that the U.S. imperialists are the mastermind of the Kim Tae-chung case. Nevertheless, the U.S. imperialists have been expressing regret and concern over the fate of Kim Tae-chung from the beginning, pretending that they had nothing to do with the Kim Tae-chung case and babbling preposterous lies. This is ignominious mockery of all the Korean people and the world's conscience demanding the release of Kim Tae-chung, who is being held without charge.

The U.S. imperialists are trying to appease the spirit of the anti-U.S. struggle for independence which is daily growing among the South Korean people and to dodge the protest and denunciation of the world by covering up their nature as the mastermind of the Kim Tae-chung case.

Such tricks of the U.S. imperialists will be exposed in broad daylight.

South Korea is a colony of the U.S. imperialists, and the puppet clique is a perpetrator serving the U.S. imperialists. The U.S. imperialists are monopolizing all real power in South Korea, ranging from appointment of puppets to commanding even puppet soldiers. Under such conditions, both the traitorous Pak Chong-hui clique and the Chon Tu-hwan clique, nothing but a marionette, would not have been able to fabricate such a big political scheme as the Kim Tae-chung case without the control or approval of the United States.

No matter what kind of tricks they may employ, the U.S. imperialists cannot cover up their vicious nature as the mastermind of the Kim Tae-chung case.

According to recent news reports from South Korea, the Chon Tu-hwan ring, not satisfied with its former plan to kill Kim Tae-chung slowly in the prison cell, is now hatching a new plan to hasten his death. With the purpose of poisoning Kim Tae-chung by giving him poisoned food, the murderous clique is reportedly looking for a man capable of executing such a scheme. With a vicious plot to kill Kim Tae-chung by injecting poison under the pretext of treating his illness, the murderous clique is reportedly training a puppet security command agent to conduct medical treatment under cover of a civilian doctor to produce in Kim Tae-chung complications commonly found in men his age.

Such a vicious plot is a joint scheme fabricated by the U.S. imperialists and their puppets. Saying that the U.S. imperialists were regarded as an accomplice in the suppression of Kim Tae-chung just as they were an accomplice in the Kwangju massacre, a Japanese paper wrote that the United States pretends to be criticizing Chon Tu-hwan out of consideration for international opinion, while in fact chortling about murdering Kim Tae-chung. This is no accident.

The U.S. imperialists' maneuvers to suppress and murder democratic personages such as Kim Tae-chung and patriotic and democratic forces and to perpetuate their colonial domination of South Korea cannot be tolerated.

The South Korean people recently have waged a brave anti-U.S. struggle for independence despite brutal suppression. This is an expression of the firm will of the South Korean people, who are determined not to tolerate aggressors trampling on their national pride and sovereignty and the fascist traitors who are devoted to all sorts of treason under the aggressors' protection.

Looking squarely at the reality in South Korea, where the anti-U.S. struggle for independence is advancing, the U.S. imperialists should stop inciting the Chon Tu-hwan ring to fascism, treason and division and leave South Korea, taking along all the weapons of mass destruction without delay.

The Chon Tu-hwan ring should release all the political prisoners including Kim Tae-chung without delay and step down from power as is unanimously demanded by the South Korean people.

VRPR NOTES U.S.-JAPAN NAVAL EXERCISE TO BEGIN

SK061339 (Clandestine) Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in Korean to South Korea 1000 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Text] The United States and Japan are scheming to wage a large-scale joint drill between the U.S. 7th Fleet and Japanese Maritime Self-Defense Force on the high seas, beginning 11 August.

A total of 34 naval vessels will participate in the upcoming drill, waging anti-submarine search and attack exercises. It is a criminal war game to be waged on the assumption of an assault on the Korean Peninsula in case of an emergency.

The United States and Japan should stop the criminal war game to be waged on the assumption of an assault on the Korean Peninsula.

U.S. DENOUNCED FOR OBJECTING TO NEW LOS TREATY

SK090433 Pyongyang KCNA in English 0344 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 9 (KCNA) -- NODONG SINMUN August 8 carried a signed article headlined "U.S. Imperialists' Scheme To Bar Establishment of New Sea Order."

Noting that the U.S. imperialists are openly refusing to sign the Treaty of the Law of Sea which was adopted in conformity with the will and desire of the world people of broad sections, the article says: This reveals their aim to monopolize and plunder international sea-bed resources. It goes on:

The time has gone never to return when the U.S. imperialists, acting the "monarch" of imperialism, could flout the destiny of the world and freely decide on international problems.

Even capitalist countries and satellite countries, to say nothing of the non-aligned and developing countries, are strongly protesting and denouncing the high-handed act of the U.S. imperialists in refusing to sign the new treaty of the law of sea.

If the U.S. imperialists continue to persist in the old unequal international sea order, ignoring the present reality, they will meet stronger condemnation and rejection from the world people.

FIRE AT U.S. BANK SEOUL BRANCH REPORTED

[Text] Pyongyang, August 9 (KCNA) -- The Seoul branch of the U.S. Trust Bank burned down on the night of August 7, according to a report.

The fire broke out in an office room of it standing opposite to the puppet city hall in central district, Seoul, at around 2320. Though the puppets made a fuss to extinguish the fire, they could hardly approach the building, because "the fire leaping out of the office room was too furious," said the report.

They were thrown into greater uneasiness and fear by this fire which gutted in 90 minutes the Seoul branch of the U.S. Trust Bank, one of the U.S. imperialists' bases of aggression and plunder situated in the heart of Seoul, at a time when the anti-U.S. struggle of the South Korean people was growing fiercer after the arson at the "American Cultural Centre" in Pusan.

The South Korean puppets are raising a hue and cry, saying that it was "a fire of unknown origin."

FEELINGS AGAINST CHON, U.S. IN SOUTH'S ARMY NOTED

[Text] Pyongyang, August 6 (KCNA) -- The Chon Tu-hwan military fascist clique are desperately trying to strengthen "anti-communist education" and "political and security education" and incite hostile feelings against the northern half of the republic in the puppet army. But, according to Radio "Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification" in South Korea, the soldiers and junior officers give vent to their grievances and antipathy against the U.S. imperialists and their stooges when they get together.

At a forward unit of the puppet army, when the "political instructor" of the regiment was getting overheated in "anti-communist education with the aid of an actual object," pointing at a "site of fierce battle" in the last war, a few soldiers hindered it by making a noise. This earned them corporal punishment. There are constantly heard from the puppet army soldiers the voices: "We curse the officers and Chon Tu-hwan who got promotion by murdering people," "We must expel the U.S. troops," "Sorry is the sight of the ROK Army freely manipulated by the U.S. commander" and "Detestable is the ROK Army life."

Expressing indignation at the scandals committed by relatives of traitor Chon Tu-hwan's wife, which have been uncovered one after another of late, puppet army soldiers say that they "will not serve as guards of Chongwadae." Noteworthy is it that the anti-U.S., anti-"government" sentiments ran higher among the soldiers and junior officers of the puppet army with the rumour that "ROK Army" troops would be dispatched to a foreign country, which got afloat after the U.S. defense secretary showed up in South Korea late in March to be closeted with the puppets.

The soldiers denounce the U.S. imperialists and their stooges, saying in unison: "Soldiers are also men. We refuse to be dragged about like dogs by the Yankees."

Some time ago, a sergeant surnamed Kim said indignantly: "I refuse to be sent abroad. The disgrace of dispatch to Vietnam must not be repeated. I will not act a shield for the U.S. troops, selling my conscience for money." Lieutenant Kim, his fellow provincial, expressed sympathy for him.

There are acute antagonism and conflict, mistrust and secret strife between soldiers and officers, between junior and senior officers and between senior officers themselves and, in this gory atmosphere, no one knows what would happen any moment. Traitor Chon Tu-hwan himslef issued a fascist order to "strictly control rumours about the army" and said nervously: "If I be shot, it would be a bullet from one of the army."

FURTHER REACTION TO JAPAN TEXTBOOK REVISION

NODONG SINMUN Commentary

SK070624 Pyongyang Domestic Service in Korean 2300 GMT 6 Aug 82

[NODONG SINMUN 7 August commentary: "Revelation of Reinvasion Design"]

[Text] In response to public opinion at home and abroad that demands the correction of badly revised textbooks, a high-ranking officer of the Japanese Ministry of Education said: We have no intention of rectifying the contents of the textbooks. We will not do that.

The Japanese Ministry of Education is, after all planning to use the textbooks, in which the history of invasion triggered by the Japanese imperialists in the past against Korea and other countries of Asia is completely distorted and forged in primary and high schools.

As has been exposed, the Japanese Ministry of Education embellished and whitewashed the outrageous aggression on, plunder of and the atrocious colonial rule over Korea. It described the robbery of our country's diplomatic right and its right of domestic administration as the transference through the conclusion of the treaty; the plunder of land on a large scale under the name of land survey merely as work for confirming the land ownership; the 1 March movement -- our people's mass uprising -- as a riot; and the forcible draft of our youths and middle-aged for use as cannon-fodder and dirt-cheap labor force as voluntary participation in war. This is an intolerable national insult to our people, a wanton distortion of history and a challenge to sacred education.

The Japanese Ministry of Education also distorted and forged the history of invasion of other countries of Asia. The acts of the Japanese reactionaries are being strongly denounced by the world's peoples as well as our people. Voices demanding the correction of badly revised textbooks are rising in many parts of Asia.

This notwithstanding, the Japanese reactionaries, impudently ignoring public opinion at home and abroad, are justifying their acts of distortion instead of admitting their distortion and forgery. Only those who harbor dark designs can commit such an act. The Japanese reactionaries' invariable wild desires are to militarize Japan, resume the road of overseas aggression, attain their reinvasion of South Korea and realize their old dream of forming the Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere. The revision of textbooks is a part of maneuvers to realize such wild desires.

By lauding the blood-soaked past history of aggression of the Japanese imperialists, the Japanese reactionaries seek to cover up their crimes, justify their reinvasion maneuvers and lay an ideological foothold for realizing their militarist aggressive ambition by inculcating a militarist spirit in the mind of the younger generation. This did not begin yesterday or today.

It is well known that the Japanese reactionaries have had their people sing again war chants that once rang loudly at the places where invasion and slaughter were committed, have had them follow the exploits of those who died during the aggressive war and have had films extolling their aggressive war performed. The play of revising textbooks is nothing but an extension of such maneuvers.

The revision of textbooks is fraught with much greater danger in that it is timed to coincide with the arms buildup and acceleration of open war preparations by the Japanese reactionaries and in that its object is the younger generation. In compliance with the demand of the U.S. imperialists' Asian strategy, the Japanese reactionary ruling circles are beeing up their armed forces. By recently endorsing the 5-year plan for increasing armed forces, the Japanese Government embarked upon the road toward becoming a big military power. It is hushing up legislative measures legalizing the dispatch of its Self-Defense Forces abroad and is preparing to enact law for contingency requisitioning of personnel and materiel for fighting a war. It is not difficult to guess what the consequences would be of a revival of the Samurai spirit of the past days, days when they invaded and plundered Korea and other Asian countries, nor what they would be of a massive buildup of military strength.

The Japanese reactionaries are trying to convert Japan into a militarist aggressive country, running counter to the aspirations of the Japanese people and the world's peace-loving people, and striving to realize their wild desire for expanding abroad. This is one of the reasons why the Japanese reactionaries are attempting to imbue the new generation with the militarist aggressive idea.

The Japanese people are demanding democracy and peace, opposing aggression and war. Many countries in the world are watching Japanese penetration into them and opposing it.

History cannot be changed no matter who may distort and forge it. The Japanese reactionaries should stop the play of revising textbooks, apologize for their aggressive acts in the past and no longer seek the way of militarist expansionism.

MINJU CHOSON Criticism

SK071118 Pyongyang KCNA in English 1039 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 7 (KCNA) -- Commenting on the revision of textbooks by the Japanese Ministry of Education, MINJU CHOSON today says:

In distorting and forging history the Japanese authorities seek to beautify the policy of aggression in the past days and justify their militarization policy and manoeuvres of overseas aggression today. They must correctly record the aggressive crimes perpetrated against Korea, it demands.

A signed commentary of the paper titled "Shameless Distortion of History" reads in part: The distortion and forgery of history by the Japanese authorities is intended to beautify the policy of aggression in the past days and justify their militarization policy and overseas aggression manoeuvres today. By revising textbooks with a distorted history, the Japanese authorities seek to instill the militarist idea of aggression into the younger generation and thus make ideological preparations for carrying into practice their reinvasion scheme in Korea and Asia and, furthermore, realize their old dream of "Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere" at any cost.

The Japanese authorities must promptly discontinue such foolish acts as writing textbooks with forged history and correctly describe their aggressive crimes in Korea.

This time they distorted and forged not only the history of Korea but also the history of the aggression on China and Southeast Asia.

Such act of the Japanese authorities is sharply denounced not only by the Korean people but also by the world progressive public circles and the Japanese people.

If they persist in the forged history, failing to lend an ear to fair opinion of the world, they will be held fully responsible for all consequences arising from this.

PYONGYANG SINMUN Commentary

SK072259 Pyongyang KCNA in English 1528 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 7 (KCNA) — If the Japanese authorities do not want to repeat the aggressive crimes and errors of the past days, they must not distort history, but record the historical facts as they are, so that the people and the younger generations may draw a lesson from them, says PYONGYANG SINMUN today in its commentary captioned "History Can Never Be Forged."

The author of the commentary notes that the revision of textbooks by the Japanese reactionaries in which historical facts are shamelessly distorted has become a target of scathing criticism and denunciation of the Korean people, the progressive public opinion of the world and the Japanese people.

The revision of textbooks by the Japanese authorities, he says, is a shameless distortion of historical facts about the aggression on our country by the Japanese imperialists and the immeasurable misfortunes and sufferings imposed by them upon our people in the past; it is an intolerable insult to our people and a crafty ruse to beautify the Japanese imperialists' aggression and colonial rule over Korea.

The Japanese authorities' attempt to arbitrarily distort stark historical facts recognized by the world can never be tolerated.

Not much penetration is needed to see the aim of the Japanese authorities in distorting and forging hard historical facts in the newly revised history textbooks. By teaching a forged history to the rising generation to which Japanese imperialists' crime-woven history, the history of their aggression, is unknown, they seek to embellish the aggressive policy and criminal acts of the Japanese imperialists in the past period and inculcate the militarist aggressive idea into their minds.

Through this they try to justify their aggressive theory of "common destiny of Japan and South Korea" and make ideological preparations for realising their reinvasion design on South Korea and, furthermore, their old dream of the "Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere". This is eloquently proved by the fact that the Japanese authorities also distort this time the history of the Japanese imperialists' aggression on China and Southeast Asian countries, beside that on our country. The revision of textbooks by the Japanese authorities distorting and revising history once again reveals to the world that their militarist aggressive design has not changed, but is being revived in a new form.

But the forgers of history are seriously mistaken. Historical facts are never erased, even though they are distorted.

However wantonly the forgers of history may distort it, the historical facts will remain as they are to denounce their crimes.

Chongnyon Letter to Minister

SK090430 Pyongyang KCNA in English 0338 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, August 6 (KNS-KCNA) -- Delegates of the General Association of Korean residents in Japan (Chongnyon), including Yi Si-ku, director of the Education Department of the Central Standing Committee of Chongnyon, called at the Japanese Ministry of Education on the morning of August 3 and handed a letter to the minister of education demanding a correct description of the historic facts about the Japanese imperialists' aggression and colonial rule over Korea in textbooks of Japan.

Noting that the sanction of the textbooks by the Japanese Ministry of Education did not merely involve a modification of phrases or a change of expression, but involved grave problems trampling underfoot the dignity of the Korean nation and impairing mutual understanding and friendship between the Korean and Japanese peoples, the letter said: Such forgery of history can never be tolerated by the Koreans in Japan, the immediate sufferers from the barbaric colonial rule of Japanese imperialism.

The attempt of the Japanese Ministry of Education to distort and conceal stark historic facts is an intolerable insult to the Korean people.

We cannot construe such sanction of textbooks by the Japanese Ministry of Education otherwise but an act motivated by the intention to justify the Japanese imperialists' aggression and colonial rule over Korea and incite the militarist idea among the youth and children for an ideological preparation to stage a comeback to Korea.

We sternly protest against such act of the Japanese Ministry of Education, regarding it as an expression of the unfriendly policy toward the Korean people and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

The letter demanded that the record about Korea in overall textbooks of Japan including the description about the Japanese imperialists' aggression and colonial rule over Korea be correctly written on the basis of historic facts.

FURTHER DEVELOPMENTS IN JAPANESE TEXTBOOK ISSUE

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 9 (YONHAP) -- South Korea would consider granting the entry of an official Japanese delegation to clarify the distortion of Korea-related facts in Japanese high school textbooks only after Japan decides to correct the distortion, a senior government official said Monday. The official, however, denied Japanese press reports that Japan has again proposed to send its officials to explain the controversial rewriting of the history textbooks.

On Friday, Seoul turned down a request by the Japanese Government for admission of an official Japanese delegation to explain the case, saying that Japan has made no commitment to redress the errors in question.

Meanwhile, the government has instructed the Korean Embassy in Tokyo to protest the statement reportedly made by Yukiyasu Matsuno, Japan's state minister in charge of the National Land Agency, in which Matsuno referred to An Chung-kin, a Korean independence fighter who assassinated Hirobumi Ito, Japan's prime mover of Korea's annexation to Japan in 1910, out of patriotic motivation, as an "assassin."

Japanese Rightists Viewed

[Excerpts] Cars running in downtown Tokyo loudly broadcasting military songs of the Japanese imperialist era through loudspeakers installed on every corner of their roofs are often seen. These propaganda cars often appear at buildings of leftist parties and groups including the Japanese Communist Party, the Japanese Socialist Party and Japanese Teachers Union, and diplomatic missions of communist states, including the Soviet Embassy. The cars are in the van of rightist propaganda by broadcasting anticommunist speeches. Strangely, such a car appeared in front of our embassy on the afternoon of 4 August. The aim was to denounce our country for demanding rectification of the distortion of facts on Korea in the Japanese textbooks.

The appearance of this car in front of our embassy could mean something more than a simple denunciation of Korea by a rightist group; this could mean the collapse of the former scheme in which a faction of Japanese "hawks" was none other than the "pro-Korea" faction or the faction "well-versed" in the Korean situation.

The Japanese rightist groups which give priority to an anticommunist line strongly supported Korea. Everyone considered this as very natural. They have envied Korea for the fullness of its anticommunist consciousness, while they were displeased with and furious at socialist forces within Japan. Their displeasure, above all, over the Japanese textbooks was great. They unhesitatingly called the textbooks the "Marxist-Leninist" textbooks.

With such a background, the Japanese textbooks began changing this year. However, they not only excluded Marxism-Leninism from the textbooks, but also attempted to include the idea of Japanese national supremacy. This showed that Japan's anticommunism has not remained anticommunism per se but has taken on the nature of ultranationalism.

A pro-Korea Japanese dietman said that he understands the significance of Korea's complaint and protest against Japanese textbooks.

He stressed, however, that if Korea gets excited over the issue of Japanese textbooks, as is the case today, those rejoicing over this will be none other than North Korea, Chongnyon -- North Korea's righhand group -- the Japanese Communist Party, the Japanese Socialist Party and the Japanese Teachers Union, which have connections with North Korea. In other words, Korea's protest against Japanese textbooks is not desirable for those jointly pursuing anticommunism. Other personages of the pro-Korea faction and the faction well-versed in the Korean situation have a similar idea. They seemed to ignore the fact that our national dignity and truth of history are as important as anticommunism, just as the idea of Japanese national supremacy is more important than anticommunism in Japan.

We may have to face the bitter experience of betrayal in that the "comrades" whom we regarded as the most reliable friends among many other Japanese friends are the back-stage manipulators of the textbook distortion.

KYONGHYANG SINMUN Urges Unity

SK071002 Seoul KYONGHYANG SINMUN in Korean 5 Aug 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Let Us Face It With National Unity and Force of Independence -- The Way to Rectify Japan's Prejudice and Distortions"]

[Excerpts] We consider it a timely and appropriate step that the government -- while maintaining a firm position on Japan's distortions about Korea in its history textbooks -- has conveyed to the Japanese Government a memorandum calling for "quick and concrete steps for the correction of the distortions."

The Japanese Government, even though it has been fully aware of the Korean's rage, has considered the distortions in the textbooks an internal affair. Such an insulting attitude toward us by the Japanese Government stems, we think, from the Japanese people's deep-rooted contempt of Korea. And furthermore, Japanese scorn toward Korea has now turned to a kind of arrogance, making the Japanese think they do not have to show repentance for the horrible crimes committed against the Korean people. Such an unremorseful attitude was the cause of the distortions about Korea in the history textbooks and made the Japanese Government arrogantly and insincerely reject our call for correction of the distortions.

We can say that Japan's arrogant attitude toward Korea implies a likelihood of Japan's repetition of the crimes against Korea. If this is the case, the frequent remarks about neighborly and friendly good-will relations and so forth which the Japanese Government authorities make these days are nothing but empty words. In actuality, the past history between Korea and Japan and the hard feelings which the peoples of the two countries have for each other make friendly good-will relations between the two countries difficult.

If Japan has no desire for true friendly relations with Korea, we have nothing to say. But, in any case, if Japan, due to reality, attaches even a little importance to friendly relations with Korea, Japan's efforts for friendship are necessary and, in this regard, the sentiment of scorn of Korea should be eliminated, starting with the government. Today's Korea is not that of the past. Japan must realize that Korea will not sacrifice national honor for such things as economic cooperation.

What is most important is that, should the Japanese Government continue to be insincere on the issue, the Korean Government must not hesitate to seek firm followup measures, including reevaluation of ROK-Japan relations. At the same time, it must not be over-sensitive about the impact which the textbook issue will have on economic negotiations between the countries.

If worst comes to worst, we may say that our nation has survived for the past 5,000 years without economic cooperation with Japan. Furthermore, when the prevailing national sentiment against Japan is fully concentrated, we will be able to cope with the present economic difficulties without a $4-billion loan from Japan.

As for what the citizens should do, the people must unite on this issue involving a foreign nation. Pushing the government with extreme slogans is not enough. The people must keep step with the government, which is adopting a firm position on the issue. They must render full support to the government. They must prepare spiritually and materially for the deterioration of ROK-Japan relations.

At the same time, we must clearly realize that our weakness is the basic cause of Japan's insult to us and, thus, we must exert utmost pan-national efforts for independent nourishment of national strength.

REPORTAGE ON VISIT BY FRENCH MINISTER CHEYSSON

Arrival, Dinner Remarks

SK080004 Seoul TONG-A ILBO in Korean 6 Aug 82 p 2

[Text] Surrounded by the reporters at the airport VIP room, Claude Cheysson, French foreign minister, who had flown into Korea at 1840 on the afternoon of 5 August on Korea Air Lines, answered reporters' questions for about 15 minutes on the alleged French move toward recognizing North Korea.

As soon as he had taken a seat in the airport's VIP room, reporters asked him to comment on foreign news reports that claim Minister Cheysson's visit is to notify Korea of the French decision to recognize North Korea. He said: "The French Government has made no such decision. Even if it has made a decision, would I inform you reporters about it before I notified the Korean Government?" He thus avoided answering clearly.

When repeatedly asked if "he would discuss with the Korean Government the issue of recognizing North Korea during his stay in Korea," Minister Cheysson replied that he "would discuss any issues the Korean Government wants to discuss." He said: Part of my purpose in visiting Korea is to pave the ground between the two countries for Jobert, minister of state for foreign trade, who is scheduled to visit Korea in September. As expected, Minister Cheysson showed interest in economic problems.

The welcome dinner for the French foreign minister arranged by Foreign Minister Yi Pom-sok on the evening of 5 August at the foreign minister's official residence lasted longer than usual, until 2300. According to one dinner guest, Cheysson said: I have come to Korea to listen to more Koreans and learn from them. This guest said he found that Minister Cheysson knew surprisingly little about the North-South issue, so he explained to Cheysson the reality of the North-South situation. After the explanation, Cheysson revised his speech, saying: It is my belief that the question of the division of Korea will be settled only by the Korean people themselves through dialogue and France will make every effort possible to this end.

Introducing (Nouaville), chief of Asian Affairs at the French Foreign Ministry who had accompanied Cheysson, as pro-ROK, Minister Cheysson reportedly said: This opportunity will serve as a good chance for us to understand Korea.

6 Aug Press Conference

[Text] Seoul, Aug, 6 (YONHAP) -- French President Francois Mitterand will visit South Korea next year, the date of the visit to be decided later through diplomatic channels, French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson announced here Friday.

Speaking at a news conference on the eve of his departure following a two-day official visit, Cheysson said he did not raise the issue of France's possible recognition of North Korea with Korean officials, although they discussed the Korean question in general. He called the division of the Korean Peninsula "abnormal and dangerous", and said: "Reunification of the Korean Peninsula is a question Koreans themselves should decide." But he said: "If we can help and if we are requested to do so, we will certainly be pleased to lend our assistance."

He voiced a hope for increased economic cooperation between France and South Korea, citing a host of areas in which French industry is interested, including transportation equipment such as the fast-speed train (TGV), a communications satellite for the 1988 Seoul Olympics, and a liquified natural gas terminal. Cheysson, a former commissioner of the European Economic Community (EEC), noted that Korean-French economic cooperation should be viewed from the angle of Korean-EEC cooperation, and said he would arrange a meeting between the South Korean foreign minister and EEC member nations.

In response to persistent queries by reporters about whether he specifically raised the issue of possible French recognition of Pyongyang, he said: "It is out of the question that we would make a decision which would risk an upset in the balance of power and affect the security situation on the Korean Peninsula." Diplomatic observers interpreted his statement as a strong indication that France would review its announced position to someday recognize North Korea, in an effort not to damage its growing cooperative ties with South Korea.

'N. Korea Card' Threat Viewed

["Reporter's View" column: "North Korea Card"]

[Excerpts] The atmosphere at Kimpo International Airport when French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson arrived on 5 July was strange. At the airport, it is cumstomary that visitors, with spontaneous smiles, exchange greetings with the South Korean foreign minister who has invited them, and reporters put forth pro forma questions about the purpose of the visit and so forth. However, on the day of Cheysson's arrival, there was no such protocol. As soon as he was seated, the reporters hurriedly carried out an assault of questions on him about French recognition of North Korea, and all present were keenly interested in every word of his answers. It was such a tense and grave atmosphere that even the veteran 30-year diplomat looked perplexed for a while.

Needless to say, it was the so-called "North Korea card" that created such an awkward atmosphere in which to meet the foreign minister of a traditional ally. Among the diplomatic difficulties which South Korea suffers because of the nation's division, what bothers it most is the North Korea card which the so-called friendly nations threaten to use.

It is well known that Japan has continued to diplomatically threaten South Korea by showing the card whenever the need arises on its part.

It is the Japanese who, on the one hand, continue the friendly rhetoric about neighborly relations and so forth and, on the other, always seek maneuvers to put their Korean counterpart in negotiations in a predicament, with the North Korea card hidden under the negotiating table.

The case of France, of course, is different because the recognition of North Korea was the pledge of the Socialist Party's election campaign and the present French system is one seeking socialist ideology. However, playing with the question of North Korea, no matter whether by France or Japan, upsets the balance among the diplomatic supporters surrounding the Korean Peninsula and eventually jeopardizes South Korea's security. In this regard, the French and Japanese dealings with the question of North Korea together constitute an element of common menace to South Korea.

Depending on the situation, different things are sought by showing the card. However, it is commonplace that economic issues are normally involved when playing of the card is threatened. The word "economic cooperation", which is very frequently mentioned during French Foreign Minister Cheysson's visit, can be interpreted in this context. All in all, we can say that the time has come for us to review our difficult diplomatic circumstances, in which we have to deal with the question of economic cooperation and the North Korea card.

CHEA SIM BATTAMBANG SPEECH ON SUCCESSES ACHIEVED

[Speech by Chea Sim, member of the KPRP Central Committee Political Bureau and chairman of the National Assembly, made at 4 August meeting in Sangke District, Battambang Province -- recorded]

[Text] Battambang, one of our provinces located near the Thai border, is rich in natural resources. In the agricultural field, Battambang Province is the biggest producer of all the provinces in the country. Geographically, Battambang has plenty of natural resources, forests and mountains. It is located near the Tonle Sap Lake and a river running into the lake. It even has valuable minerals, particularly precious stones and diamonds. Its soil is fertile and suitable for growing rice and other crops. Our people in Battambang engage in agriculture, orcharding and fishing. Generations of our people in this province have a tradition of valiant struggle. They took part in the struggles against the French and U.S. imperialists and in the uprising against the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan regime. Particularly, generations of our people in Sangke District have a tradition of valiant struggle since time immemorial. This clearly reflects the genuine spirit of patriotism of our people who have actively engaged in the revolutionary movement under the leadership of our party and state.

In the past more than 3 years of our Kampuchean revolution, our Kampuchean people throughout the country, including those liberated from the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan regime, have revived and are enjoying a new life under the new regime.

In the past more than 3 years, our party and state has set forth the tasks of national defense and construction as the two main tasks and duties of the Kampuchean revolution and the most important and necessary tasks for our Kampuchean people. After liberation from the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan regime -- subordinates of the Chinese expansionists -- our Kampuchean state power has returned to the hands of our people. Thus, this state power belongs to the people and must serve the genuine interests of the people. This is why we must defend and maintain this state power and our revolutionary gains forever. Initially, the most important thing we could do was to rehabilitate every aspect of work for national construction. Especially after 7 January 1979 when our people had just been liberated, we faced many large obstacles, especially the problem of food, that we had to solve for our people.

This was the most important problem. Right after liberation, our economy was weak and the amount of food in the hands of our people was very small, while the demand for food among our people throughout the country, including those in Battambang Province, was extremely high. Since we had only a small economy, we faced large obstacles. As food is vital for the people to live on, our party and state had to set up guidelines for rehabilitating the economy, especially in agriculture. The production of rice and other secondary food crops was the most important thing to do to enable our people to have sufficient food to eat.

Therefore, our party and state actively stimulated this movement. Our people and cadres at all levels agreed with this guideline of the party. They then organized production solidarity groups to enable our people to assist each other actively because immediately after the liberation we faced many difficulties left behind by the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan regime. Our party and state had to set up guidelines to rebuild our country from zero. Our people had faced all kinds of difficulties, and aside from food, they were in need of shelter, household items and agricultural tools.

Moreover, it was necessary to provide health care for our people throughout the country, including those in Battambang Province. As you all know well, our people suffered untold miseries under the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan regime. Our people were in bad health. Our people in the areas ranging from the western region to Battambang Province were evacuated and forced to live in the mountainous and border areas adjacent to Thailand. They had no food and medicine and were very thin. We could hardly recognize the people who were liberated and sent back to their villages. They were thin and wore only rags. They had no food to eat.

This is to emphasize that in 1979 and in subsequent years, our party, state and cadres at all levels regarded the livelihood of our people as the most important factor. In order to allow our people to enjoy a better life, we must stimulate our people to launch production in accordance with their strengths and to use their labor force actively and promptly to meet the needs of our Kampuchean people throughout the country, including those in Battambang Province. This is the most important thing. Thus, our party, state and cadres at all levels in Battambang Province have made every effort in guiding and stimulating production in all fields, particularly in agriculture and industry, which we must quickly rehabilitate.

We reviewed and summed up the achievements we scored throughout the country as well as in Battambang Province, and found out that every aspect is progressing step by step in accordance with the direction of the rules and regulations of our Kampuchean revolution as well as that of the world revolution. This is because the national construction and defense task cannot be carried out within a day or two, or within a year or two. We must carry out this work in accordance with the rules and regulations of gradual advance. By so saying, we mean to stress that both national construction and defense must depend on the strength of our people who should display their labor force actively and vigorously. By so doing, we will be able to defend and make our country develop rapidly and our Kampuchean revolution will be able to advance through a transitional period toward genuine and authentic socialism.

I would like to inform all you comrades that to build and develop socialism, we need the socialist consciousness of men and of our Kampuchean people throughout the country. This is because national construction and defense must depend on the people's forces. The people are the initiators and builders of revolutionary annals. From its outset, the national liberation struggle has relied on the people. After liberation, the tasks of national defense and construction must also rely on the people's forces.

Realizing this significant and decisive factor, we must stimulate the movement to educate and make the people understand these two important tasks which are the duties of our Kampuchean people throughout the country and all the minority nationals in the northeastern region and elsewhere in the country. Thus, the lines and policies of our party, state and front are to stimulate the masses to have a spirit of patriotism and a sense of love for the people and their class. When our people have a firm spirit of patriotism and consciousness, we will certainly be able to build and defend our country rapidly and firmly. All of this is made possible through the strength of the people.

All the achievements we have recorded in all fields in the past more than 3 years are the outcome of the first stage of our Kampuchean revolution. We are advancing constantly, and our revolution is making even greater achievements in all fields. As a result, the people are enjoying even better living conditions. In the economic and agricultural fields, through the movement to stimulate our people throughout the country to increase production by forming themselves into production solidarity groups to serve as the collective forces, we have gradually improved and stabilized the people's living conditions. This is a success in the economic field over the past more than 3 years. In the field of national defense, we have succeeded in building and strengthening the three categories of our armed forces as well as the police force. They are now growing stronger and are capable of ensuring the defense of the country, the state power and the revolutionary achievements at the forefront. In public health, we have set up hospitals in the central and local areas and health networks from the top to lower levels have become systemized. We have trained public health cadres -- both political and specialized cadres. In the past more than 3 years, our public health cadres have increased both in terms of quantity and quality. We have improved health service for the people.

In education, all the children of our Kampuchean people throughout the country are attending school. We have built the ranks of educational cadres, teaching personnel and teachers. Buddhist monks are also teaching our pupils and students. Up to now, millions of our children are attending school from the first level upward. This is a great success. Similarly, we have achieved success in all other fields.

These achievements in all fields satisfy us and are appropriate to the period of more than 3 years of our revolution. These achievements have been made possible due to the efforts of our party, state and people throughout the country as well as our cadres at all levels. We must also realize that the victories we have scored in the national liberation struggle and the achievements we have made in national defense and construction are also attributable to the support and assistance given us by the fraternal socialist countries, especially the socialist countries in Indochina -- Vietnam and Laos. We have also received active and wholehearted support and assistance from the Soviet Union and other socialist countries. We have received the support and assistance from various international organizations for the urgent relief of our people and improving their living conditions since 1979. The fraternal socialist countries have continued to support and assist the Kampuchean revolution and our Kampuchean people.

Especially, we must be aware of the support and assistance given us by our neighbors and closest friends, that is, the Vietnamese comrades. The Vietnamese comrades have given us material, moral and physical support and assistance. They have helped us not only in our struggle to liberate ourselves from the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan regime, but have helped us over many generations. The Vietnamese armed forces, the Vietnamese volunteers, have helped our Kampuchean revolution morally and physically.

The Vietnamese people have sacrificed their blood and lives and the Vietnamese wives have allowed their husbands to help us in our Kampuchean revolution. This assistance is given according to the sacred request of our Kampuchean people and the treaty of cooperation signed between Kampuchea and Vietnam in 1979.

SPK REFUTES BBC REPORT ON KPRAF KILLING SRV TROOPS

[Text] Phnom Penh, 7 Aug (SPK) -- The BBC on 6 August brodcast a report according to which eight Vietnamese combatants were killed by KPRAF combatants who afterwards fled into the forest.

SPK is authorized to make a statement completely rejecting this mendacious report. By broadcasting these lies, our enemies try to break the Kampuchea-Vietnam solidarity which constitutes a factor determining the successes won for the past more than 3 years by the Kampuchean people in toppling the genocidal Pol Pot regime and in rebuilding the country.

The Kampuchean people and army are always imbued with the spirit of proletarian internationalist solidarity, particularly with the Vietnamese people and army and these close bonds of solidarity continue to further strengthen in the struggle against the common enemy -- Chinese expansionism in collusion with the U.S. imperialists and other forces of reaction.

TEAM DISCOVERS NINE MASS GRAVES IN SVAY RIENG

[Text] With the cooperation of the Svay Rieng Province's Information and Cultural Service and the Kompong Ro District People's Revolutionary Committee, from 23 to 30 July the criminal center's investigation team of the Ministry of Information and Culture discovered nine mass graves -- criminal centers of the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan clique -- at the former Russei Sanh monastery in Phum Ta Koeng, Prey Thom commune, Kompong Ro District, Svay Rieng Province. So far, the team has found more than 300 skeletons.

According to the local people, under the rule of the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan clique, this village and monastery were used as the biggest detention center and human slaughterhouse in Kompong Ro District. The traitorous clique mustered and barbarously massacred students, professors, intellectuals and innocent people in these areas.

After bringing the skeletons out of the graves, the people and the women's association in Prey Thom commune put them on display in the new Russei Sanh monastery so that national and international public opinion can see this new proof of the evil faces of the Chinese expansionists and their lackeys.

The investigation team is continuing to look for other graves.

VODK SCORES SRV DESTRUCTION OF ANGKOR, URGES PULLOUT

BK080706 (Clandestine) Voice of Democratic Kampuchea in Cambodian to Kampuchea 2330 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Summary] The Vietnamese aggressors recently ordered their lackeys in Phnom Penh to make slanderous accusations against Democratic Kampuchea, blaming it for the destruction of the Angkor temples. This is typical of the Vietnamese, who cowardly put the blame on other people while they -- the real culprits -- come out blameless.

In pursuit of their policy to exterminate the Kampuchean people and annex the Kampuchean territory — as they had done in the past -- do the Vietnamese aggressors really care if the Angkor temples have disappeared? No. The Kampuchean people and the entire world have witnessed the Vietnamese destruction of Kampuchea, its people, its culture, traditions and customs.

At Angkor, the Vietnamese have tried every means to destroy the temples — symbol of the glorious Kampuchean civilization and the property of all mankind. These temples were plundered by Vietnamese soldiers who were posted in the area.

Many foreign papers have published reports testifying to the destruction of those temples by the Vietnamese. Acccrding to refugees and Khmer local officials at Angkor, "the Vietnamese destroyed many Buddha images at Angkor Vat and damaged other sculptures at Angkor Thom. The most serious criminal activities of the Vietnamese were the cutting down of trees around the temples. Many big trees which help to protect the temples were felled and timber was transported to Vietnam."

From 1976 to 1978, Democratic Kampuchea invited many foreign guests tp visit the Angkor temples. "Among those were the heads of state of Burma, Romania and Laos; leaders and ministers of China, Yugoslavia, Thailand and Malaysia; diplomats accredited to Democratic Kampuchea from Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Norway, Switzerland, Cuba, Yugoslvia, Romania, Egypt, Iraq, Pakistan, Malaysia, Burma, Japan, China, Korea, Albania, Tanzania, Laos, Mali, Senegal, Vietnam, Guinea and Tunisia; government trade and cultural delegations from Singapore, Yugoslavia, Romania, Algeria, China, Korea and Thailand; and representatives of political parties and mass organizations from Austria, Germany, Belgium, Denmark, France, Italy, Norway, Sweden, the United States and Japan." And in December 1978, four planeloads of tourists from Bangkok also visited the temples.

The world could see then that the Angkor temples were in good shape but they suffered under the Vietnamese who, through plunder and neglect, have been destroying these temples.

"This is why, in order to carry out the restoration of Angkor and thus save it, the Vietnamese must withdraw all their aggressor troops from Kampuchea, restore peace there and let the Kampuchean people decide their own destiny without any outside interference. We appeal to all peace and justice-loving countries, the United Nations and UNESCO to press the Vietnamese to withdraw immediately all their aggressor troops from Kampuchea, according to the UN General Assemblies' resolutions, in order to quickly save Angkor -- a cultural and artistic property representing the glorious civilization of the Kampuchean nation and people and a precious property of all mankind.

RADIO ON HAIG RESIGNATION, SHULTZ APPOINTMENT

[Feature article: "Alexander Haig's Resignation"]

[Text] Dear listeners, there is no doubt that the resignation of U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig will lead to a more aggressive foreign policy which may even disregard the interests of some of the foremost allies of the United States. Haig's abrupt resignation came 18 months after a major struggle between Haig and other White House advisers took place over control of U.S. foreign policy. Even though the reason behind Haig's resignation is not clear, the promotion of William Clark, national security adviser and a close aide of Reagan, to be the administration's spokesman on foreign policy convinced Haig that his position was hopeless.

Clark had only joined the Reagan administration early this year as Haig's assistant when Richard Allen, himself an archrival of Haig, resigned. As a close friend of Reagan when he was governor of California, Clark became one of the president's influential advisers in addition to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, Michael Deaver, Edwin Meese and James Baker. It is widely known that Clark, Weinberger and other advisers encouraged Reagan to increase economic sanctions against the Soviet Union in order to disrupt the construction of a gas pipeline from the Soviet Union to Europe.

Even though Haig did not approve of the gas pipeline construction project, he realized that the European countries had already made up their minds to proceed with the construction schedule. He knew that any economic sanctions which would disrupt the project could only lead to unnecessary conflict with close U.S. allies in Europe. Apparently Haig's decisions about the gas piepline construction project in Europe and his unconditional support for Israel in the Lebanese crisis prompted him to resign. His resignation was accepted by Reagan.

However, for us, there is no difference between Haig and the White House with regard to U.S. policy. If there is any difference between Haig and the California clique at all, it is only about how much consideration they should give to the opinions of their European allies when they draft U.S. foreign policy. When George Shultz becomes U.S. secretary of state, the influence of the California clique will be boosted. Shultz said that the United States should pay more attention to proposals made by several Arab countries, such as Saudi Arabia which has close ties with the Bechtel Company with which Shultz himself was closely associated. The appointment of Shultz as secretary of state indicated that the warmongering foreign policy of the White House will become even more aggressive in the coming months, thus aggravating conflicts between the United States and its close allies.

RADIO HAILS SOVIET MATERIAL, SPIRITUAL ASSISTANCE

[Feature article: "Soviet Assistance Constitutes an Encouragement for the LPDR People"]

[Text] In compliance with the treaty of all-round and permanent cooperation between the party, government and people of the LPDR and those of the Soviet Union, loyal to Marxism-Leninism and the spirit of proletarian internationalism, the peoples of Laos and the Soviet Union have always strengthened their profound friendship and solidarity.

While the Lao people were facing the war unleashed by the U.S. imperialists during the past 20 years, the fraternal Soviet people stood side by side with the Lao people and assisted the latter's national salvation struggle until it was victorious.

In addition to giving material and spiritual encouragement, the Soviet people themselves shared weal and woe with the Lao people during their national-democratic revolution. Soviet aviation experts and members of the Soviet mass media also took part in activities in the Lao liberated zone. During the liberation of Phathi, Sam Neua and the Plain of Jars in Xieng Khouang Province, some Soviet comrades, dressed in the LPLA uniform, stayed close to the battlefronts to collect news of victories won by the Lao army and people for dissemination to the world's people. While the U.S. Air Force was escalating its bombing and strafing of the Lao liberated zone, some Soviet correspondents, such as (Ivan Shedov), (Dobokhai), and (Mikhail Ilivskiy) shared their daily living with their Lao comrades-in-arms.

After the war ended, the LPDR emerged. Laos has been given the honor of joining the socialist community. Under the leadership of the LPRP Central Committee -- a Marxist-Leninist party headed by Comrade General Secretary Kaysone Phomvihan, the Lao people throughout the country have been guided to take the path of socialism and to implement the immediate and long-term political strategy contained in a resolution adopted by the LPRP Central Committee Political Bureau -- that is, to defend the country and fulfill socialist transformation and socialist construction in Laos.

However, the new and old enemies of Laos have become more arrogant and cruel. They are the U.S. imperialists and the Beijing expansionists and hegemonists who are colluding with other reactionary forces to sabotage and destroy Laos' cause of socialist construction and transformation, sabotage the special solidarity among the three Indochinese nations and spoil the all-round and permanent cooperation between Laos and the Soviet Union and between Laos and other fraternal socialist countries.

In the implementation of the treaty signed early in 1976 between Laos and the Soviet Union on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and the spirit of proletarian internationalism, the Soviet party, government and people have given unconditional material and spiritual assistance to the Lao people, government and people. Many Soviet experts and communists have volunteered to work in the LPDR in accordance with the Lao people's aspirations for the cause of socialist construction and transformation in Laos. Today, such aspirations have become greater in width and depth, because the Lao revolution is a scientific socialist revolution.

The Soviet Union has assisted in completing the construction of many projects in Laos, such as the construction of the Nam Neun bridge, Hospital No. 1, an oil depot, a Sputnik ground satellite station, a huge auto repair shop, the Tha Ngon agricultural machinery repair shop, the Pak Ngeum dam, a vocational school, Route No. 9 and other projects.

In implementing the resolutions of the Third LPRP Congress, the Lao communists and people throughout the country will do everything to strengthen their all-round and permanent cooperation and solidarity with the Soviet people, other fraternal socialist countries and the peace-loving people throughout the world in order to prevent and check a nuclear war, conventional wars or psychological wars unleashed by the imperialists and the international reactionaries.

The Soviet Union deserves to be called a reliable friend of the Lao people, the iron-like fortress of the socialist camp and the birthplace of the world revolution.

The Lao people are overwhelmingly greteful for this tremendous assistance. The Lao and Soviet peoples will continue their all-round and permanent cooperation forever and ensure that friendly relations blossom continuously.

OFFICIAL DENIES THAI ROLE IN FORMATION OF CGDK

BK061323 Bangkok Voice of Free Asia in Thai 1000 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Begin recording] I am not here to give an interview. I merely want to talk frankly with you newsmen. The first issue deals with criticism by some newspapers and some people on the formation of the CGDK, saying that we or the Foreign Ministry have allowed the three Khmer factions to form their coalition government in Thailand. The Foreign Ministry denies this accusation. We have never allowed leaders of the three Khmer factions to use Thai territory as the place to declare the formation of their government. You mass media representatives must have known that Prince Sihanouk and the leaders of the other two Kampuchean factions traveled to Kampuchea on three occasions. A Japanese television correspondent and other journalists witnessed their journey. They even filmed and took photos of the Kampuchean leaders' activities inside Kampuchea. They have also witnessed how the Kampuchean people welcomed Prince Sihanouk. Leaders of the three factions held a series of meetings inside Kampuchea prior to the formation of the coalition government. The Democratic Kampuchean radio also announced the formation of the coalition government on Sunday. I cannot remember the exact date. Therefore, the Foreign Ministry wishes to deny once again the accusation that it had masterminded the formation of the CGDK in Thailand.

Another issue is the accusation by foreign mass media that Democratic Kampuchean troops are on Thai soil or use Thai soil. We wish to deny that there are Democratic Kampuchean troops using Thai soil to fight the foreign occupying forces in Kampuchea. There is nothing secret along the Thai border with Kampuchea. Foreign mass media personnel and officials of international organizations often visit the border areas. A large number of officials of international organizations are stationed there. The chairman of the UN Ad Hoc Committee on Kampuchea, Ambassador Sarre of Senegal, and his party recently inspected the situation along the border. If Thailand allows Democratic Kampuchean soldiers to use Thai soil, these people would have seen them. The Foreign Ministry wishes to deny this accusation too.

Regarding criticism on the formation of the CGDK and Thailand's policy, I would like to tell you that the implementation of foreign policy is a complicated matter. Every country keeps how it implements its foreign policy on certain issues secret for national security reasons. No country can make public how it will implement its foreign policy in all aspects. I beg your sympathy. Sometimes, we are unable to inform you in advance on what the Foreign Ministry will do. However, the Foreign Ministry reaffirms that it has not forbidden any person to criticize or express his opinion on the implementation of its foreign policy. We have never prevented anyone from expressing his view if he is sincere. I would like to reiterate here that the Foreign Ministry has never thought of preventing anyone from expressing his view or criticizing its foreign policy. The Foreign Ministry, however, detests criticism that is aimed at personal affairs because each individual has his own pride. The foreign minister once said in the Parliament that if he made a mistake in implementing foreign policy, he would have to consider resignation. He made it clear on several occasions that if he caused damage to the country, he would consider resignation. Therefore, those who complained that the Foreign Ministry has gagged them or sent Special Branch police officers to prevent them from talking must have misunderstood something. The Foreign Ministry never did that.

I wish to stress here that the implementation of foreign policy is to secure Thailand's stability and lies within the framework of the government's policy statement presented earlier to the Parliament.

Touching on the formation of the CGDK, no country has so far opposed this matter. Nearly all of the foreign leaders who came to Thailand have agreed with the decision made by the patriotic leaders of the Kampuchean people in their joint struggle against the foreign aggression and occupation of Kampuchea. [end recording]

AUSTRALIA'S SINCLAIR SUPPORTS ASEAN ON KAMPUCHEA

He said he supports ASEAN's efforts on the coalition of the three Kampuchean factions. He was against Vietnam's interference in Kampuchea and Vietnam's opposition to UN resolutions. He noted that although the Australian Government does not recognize Democratic Kampuchea, neither does it support the Heng Samrin regime. He said the government, the opposition and the people of Australia very much dislike the Pol Pot government for its genocidal crimes against the Kampuchean people.

Commenting on the role of China and the USSR in this region, Sinclair said China showed a positive attitude toward the building of stability in the region. On the contrary, the Soviet Union is trying to expand its influence and interference in the region. He disapproved of the Soviet moves. Sinclair said there is an indication that the Soviet Union is establishing a permanent military foothold in the region. He cited the Soviet use of Danang base in Vietnam as an example.

The Australian defense minister stated during the press conference that his current tour is to show Australia's support for ASEAN's foreign policy and self-defense. The Australian Government, he said, has adopted military cooperation programs with the countries in Southeast Asia and the Pacific in the form of bilateral cooperation based on the priority needs of those countries, on the transfer of technology and technical know-how, as well as spare parts. There are several activities under the Thai-Australian project, including the training and exchange of officials. Australia has also provided Thailand with 28.25 million baht for the purchase of 20 Nomad aircraft from Australia by the Thai Air Force.

NATION REVIEW REPORTS ON CPT CONGRESS, DISUNITY

[Text] Provincial leaders in Udon Thani, led by provincial Secretary General "Comrade Thung" and provincial committee member Comrade Yut, alias Suwit Niamsa, of the Communist Party of Thailand (CPT) have defected enmasse with their followers after the completion of the CPT's "Fourth Congress" which elected pro-Chinese leader Prasit Taphianthong as the new secretary general, according to government intelligence sources. The outcome of the "fourth party congress" recently served to irk major CPT groups in the northeast and south, the sources said.

The completion of the party caucus, which took place in three separate meetings in three regions and ended up with the newly-elected 25-member Central Committee electing the new party secretary general and the Politburo in north of Nan Province, was announced on Monday by a CPT spokesman through the CPT-run "VOICE OF THE PEOPLE OF THAILAND" news agency.

The party spokesman's statement provided few specific details about the controversial line of analysing the Thai society, but obviously stood firm with the Maoist strategy of using the armed struggle in the rural areas to "strangle" the "urban areas".

"The fourth congress agreed that the party must persevere in strengthening the jungle-based armed struggle and coordinate it with other forms of struggle, including political and economic campaigns....," the spokesman, whose identity is still not known, said in the "first statement about the fourth congress."

The party spokesman also described the atmosphere of the party congress as "being conducted in a united, enthusiastic and serious mood" and said details of the results of the caucus will be made public in later statements. However, an authoritative source who has been closely monitoring CPT development said the results are still fundamentally unchanged on the three major problems of the nature of the Thai society, the party strategy, and the party heavy's dependence on China. The usually reliable source also quoted intelligence reports as saying that the final results of the party Central Committee meeting were contrary to those of the meetings in the northeast and the south.

About 55 representatives of party branches nationwide met separately in the north, the northeast and the south as the first phase of the party congress in March and April this year. The meetings in the northeast and the south resolved that the "correct nature" of the Thai society was "capitalistic" and the economy is still dependent on "imperialism" with "negligible feudal influence" instead of a "semi-colonial, semifeudalism" as formerly held, according to informed sources.

The two regional meetings also passed a set of resolutions on its relations with other communist movements. They are:

1. The party will diversify its sources of assistance from foreign communist movements.

2. The party will reestablish its relations with the communist movements in the Indochinese countries.

3. The party will refrain from attacking the Soviet Union which has been the arch enemy of Peijing, according reliable sources.

The three separate meetings concluded their sessions by nominating the new party Central Committee in three separate lists which was later decided by the former CPT leadership. The newly-elected party Central Committee then convened the final stage of the party congress in northern Nana, where the CPT headquarters is believed to remain, to pick the new party secretary general and the Politburo. Authoritative sources said that, by logical extention, the former pro-Chinese leadership core of the outlawed party had managed to influence the composition of the newly-elected committee to their desire. Nearly 10 former members of the party's Central Committee had died and were replaced while most other former members retained their footholds in the supreme organ of the party, according to another source. However, the lists of the new party Central Committee and the new Politburo are still not known.

The authoritative sources said the majority of representatives from the upper northeastern, lower northeastern, and southern operational zones to the fourth congress were upset and angered by the outcome of the first session of the party Central Committee meeting in Nana, but reactions were still divergent and mixed. The source quoted intelligence reports as saying that the CPT provincial leaders in Udon Thani, led by provincial Secretary General Comrade Thung and provincial committee member Comrade Yut, alias Suwit Nitamsa, defected en masse to seek assistance from Laos and Vietnam following the party congress.

About 20 of the estimated 40 provincial committee members of the upper northeastern operational zone were also dissatisfied with the results of the party caucus and were toying with an idea of defecting from the party to form another "neutral party," according to the sources. "As far as we could determine, the dissident leaders do not want to receive aid from Vietnam and Laos lest its image would be tarnished. They will continue to stress self-reliance in its operations," he said.

The other estimated 20 provincial committee members, including regional party Secretary General "Uncle Siam," consists of "neutral elements" and pro-Chinese "diehards," according to the source.

He also quoted another intelligence report as saying that at least three out of the five delegates to the party congress from the lower northeastern operational zone were "extremely disappointed" by the outcome of the crucial party caucus.

Another delegate, secretary general of the operational zone Comrade Chit, who is an "intellectual," was also upset with the fourth congress results, according to the source. He added that the so-called "progressive elements" in the southern operational zone, who were supposedly disillusioned with the caucus, had not taken any action as the military is putting pressure on communist guerrillas in the south. The degree of cracks in the rank and file of the party could still be measured partly from an intelligence report that some pro-Chinese elements harshly criticized the dissident operational zones for "narrow localism."

'FIERCE FIGHTING' ERUPTS BETWEEN CPT, RANGERS

[Text] Nakhon Ratchasima -- Seven Rangers were killed and four others seriously wounded in a fierce fighting between about 65 Rangers and 200 communist insurgents in a deep jungle here Thursday, the army reported yesterday. The army believed that about 20 communist guerrillas were killed and 30 others injured in the clash which took place on a mountain in Khon Buri District here.

The fighting, which lasted about 30 minutes, erupted when the communist guerrilas assaulted the Rangers who were patrolling the communist-infested area. The Rangers, based in Map Kap village in Khon Buri, were ordered to launch a search-and-destroy operation as part of a large-scale military offensive, codenamed "Ari Phai Operation," which was mounted jointly by the First and Second Army Regions on August 1.

Director of the military hospital at Suranari Garrison here, Col Suphot Samphattawanit, said that six Rangers were killed on the spot by boobytraps and fire from communist insurgents. Another died upon his arrival at the hospital. The injured Rangers were receiving treatment at the hospital, according to the hospital director.

First Army Region Commander Gen Athit Kamlang-ek said the ongoing military suppression was aimed at liquidating communist strongholds straddling this northeastern province and neighbouring Prachin Buri. The casualties on the government side have been the heaviest in this province in recent months.

THACH INTERVIEWED ON SOUTHEAST ASIA TOUR

BK061114 Hanoi Domestic Service in Vietnamese 1430 GMT 5 Aug 82

[Interview by Vietnamese radio and television correspondent with SRV Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach on his recent tour of Southeast Asia -- recorded, date and place not given]

[Text] [Question] Dear comrade, you recently toured some countries. Our cadres and people would like to ask you about the results of this tour. First of all, would you please let them know how have you assessed the results?

[Answer] I recently visited Burma and three of the ASEAN countries. My visit to Burma -- as we had expected -- was very successful since our relations with Burma are very good. I already talked about this visit in an interview with VNA and I don't want to repeat it here. Now I would like to talk about my visits to three ASEAN countries generally. I can say that these visits were a success beyond our own expectations. We had planned to explain the proposals of the three Indochinese foreign ministers' conference in Ho Chi Minh City held in early July 1982 to the leaders of the ASEAN countries and we had expected to persuade them to discontinue their policy of opposing the three Indochinese countries and to start a dialogue. For the past 3 years, we had strived to reach a dialogue without any success and they still opposed us most of the time. The results of my visits were that we have agreed with them on opening and continuing a dialogue between the three Indochinese countries and the ASEAN countries. Our dialogue with them had been held for the first few months of 1980 but were sabotaged later by the forces which usually oppose the three Indochinese countries and the ASEAN countries. At that time, there was a dialogue only between Vietnam and Laos on the one side and Malaysia and Indonesia on the other. Now, the countries which used to pursue a policy of strong opposition, such as Singapore and Thailand, have also engaged in a dialogue with us. We think that this is a great success. The second success is that, previously, they wanted to impose their will on the Indochinese countries, demanding that Indochina meet their interests regardless of Indochina's own interests. Now we all agree that, in resolving the problems arising in the relations between the Indochinese and ASEAN countries, the principle of respecting both sides' legitimate interests must be observed with a bilateral agreement. We therefore think that both sides should agree on an international conference on Southeast Asia.

I discussed four problems with them. First, they are concerned about the withdrawal of the Vietnamese Army from Kampuchea. I told them that our concern is the Chinese threat, but that we are ready to meet their interests -- that is, the withdrawal of our troops from Kampuchea. In return, they must think of our interests -- that is, the cessation of threats from China.

The second problem is their concern over the neutralization of Kampuchea, while we stand for the neutralization of Southeast Asia. So these two requests must be met at the same time.

Third, they are concerned about Thailand's security, while we are concerned about the security of Kampuchea, Vietnam and Laos. So both these sides must meet each other's interests.

The fourth problem regards an international conference. The questions of participants, the agenda and the seat and date of the conference must be discussed and agreed upon by both sides. Only thus can an international conference be convened. This means that we can clap with both hands, and not just with one hand as in the case of the UN-sponsored conference. This principle has been agreed upon by the two sides but we have not yet discussed how each specific problem is to be solved.

The third result is that we have approved their request for talks with us on the question of trade relations on a private basis.

All these results, which would lead to the path of dialogue and approval of principles to solve problems, do not mean that all the problems that need to be solved by both sides have been settled. Thus, the results we have obtained in this tour are still limited. Yet to us they are great. Over the past 3 years we have been struggling for a dialogue in spite of the other side's policy of opposing it. Now at least it has agreed upon the path of dialogue. We consider it a success, a very great success, but we think it is necessary to consolidate it because the forces opposing the path of dialogue are still operating to undermine it. Such forces, for instance, include China and some press and ruling circles in Thailand and Singapore.

[Question] The Singapore press recently made much of the so-called Vietnamese threat. What are your views on this matter?

[Answer] I already presented my views on this matter in my interview with VNA. It is obvious that the Singapore press has distorted my statements, showing that it does not have a sense of responsibility on the question of peace and security in Southeast Asia. The press in Malaysia, Indonesia, the Philippines and many other countries is more responsible in this matter. Naturally, the Chinese propaganda appratus is notorious for its grudging and slanderous attitude.

[Question] We are among those at home who have viewed the results of your Comrade Minister's recent visit to Thailand and found that they were very good and beyond expectations. Could you, Comrade, tell us how you managed to obtain such good results?

[Answer] Before I arrived in Thailand and even on the very morning I met the Thai foreign minister, the Thai press had been feeding back the distorted reports of the Singapore press. Thai political circles had also been pouring out many irresponsible statements. I arrived there with a good-will attitude and clearly explained to them our stand so that they could understand it more correctly. They also expressed a desire to have a dialogue. This shows that what the Thai press had said before did not suit the atmosphere of dialogue and friendship between the peoples of the two countries. The results of my visit were beyond expectation because the truth was quite different from what they had anticipated. We should admit that there has been no dialogue between us and Thailand so far. Now that they have realized the failure of their policy of confrontation, they, as far as I think, will adopt a more pragmatic attitude in seeking a dialogue. That is why the unexpected results were obtained.

[Question] As your Comrade Minister's recent visits drew great attention from international public opinion, could you, Comrade, give us your general assessment of public opinion on your recent visits?

[Answer] We all know that there is a struggle in the world today for detente and dialogue and against cold war and confrontation. That is why my recent visits to the various Southeast Asian countries to press for dialogue and to promote peace and stability were widely welcomed by international public opinion -- including the Western press, especially the press in the United States and Southeast Asia -- but not by China, which felt very begrudging.

Everyone knows that China now poses a threat to and is creating trouble for Southeast Asia. It is trying to aggravate the confrontation between the ASEAN bloc and Indochina during my visits -- the visits which were not welcomed by China and a number of newspapers in Singapore and Thailand. Those who did not welcome my visits are small in number. In general, my visits were highly welcomed by public opinion.

[Question] Thank you, Comrade Minister.

RADIO ON ASEAN REJECTION OF SRV DIPLOMATIC OFFENSIVE

[Text] A 1-day meeting of the foreign ministers of Malaysia, Thailand and Singapore [as heard] was held in the Thai capital of Bangkok over the weekend. It was held primarily to discuss the proposal made by the Vietnamese Foreign Minister, Mr Nguyen Co Thach, in his visit to the three ASEAN capitals last month in what political observers had described as a diplomatic offensive in the wake of the newly formed Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

But all that the visits have achieved is to show that Vietnam is as unwilling as ever to find a solution to the Kampuchean problem. All proposals Mr Thach made have conditions attached to them -- conditions that Vietnam fully knows will not be acceptable to the ASEAN states. It has proposed an international conference of Southeast Asian countries to replace the International Conference on Kampuchea under the auspices of the United Nations. To accept this proposal would mean going back to square one where the International Conference on Kampuchea already provides the framework for working out a solution to the Kampuchean issue. Then there is a proposal that Vietnam would withdraw all its troops only when the Chinese threat is out of the way.

In his talks with his counterparts in the three ASEAN capitals, Mr Thach has also described as an illusion ASEAN's assurance that a new Kampuchea without the Vietnamese presence would be nonaligned. So what all these proposals amount to is that Vietnam, in its diplomatic offensive, has shifted its posture but not the substance of its policies.

ASEAN, however, is still prepared to keep a channel of dialogue open although it has rejected all the proposals made by Mr Thach in his recent visit to Singapore, Malaysia, Thailand. At the same time, the foreign ministers of the three ASEAN states agreed in the Bangkok meeting that ASEAN would initiate support for the newly formed Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea at the forthcoming UN General Assembly next month. Prince Sihanouk, president of the coalition government, will be attending it.

It is expected that with the presence of Prince Sihanouk, there will be even more international support for the coalition government, ending any Vietnamese aspiration that the international body would give its puppet Heng Samrin regime the seat now occupied by the former Khmer Rouge government of Pol Pot. Only the Soviet Union and its satellite governments would countervote against giving the seat to the coalition government. And any reservation that few remaining countries may have would now be dispelled by the more representative coalition government of which the Khmer Rouge is just a component.

Another damaging consequence for Vietnam will be further isolation from the world democracies which could help it in its ecnomic recovery. The ASEAN states have already pledged that they would do all they can in this direction once the Kampuchean issue is resolved. It is now up to Vietnam to make the first constructive move that will lead to a solution of the Kampuchean problem.

LEE KUAN YEW PREDICTS DIFFICULT ECONOMIC TIMES AHEAD

BK081533 Singapore Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 8 Aug 82

[Text] In his National Day message, Mr Lee Kuan Yew warns of troubled times ahead for all countries, including Singapore. The prime minister points out that, of all ASEAN economies, Singapore's is the most exposed. He said in spite of the considerable momentum in growth in our economy, we shall find this year a difficult one.

A cautious assessment by the Ministry of Trade and Industry of 8 percent to 10 percent growth for 1982 made at the time of his New Year message has now been revised to 5 to 7 percent. If the economy in America is very weak, we may end up with less than 5 percent growth this year.

But, Mr Lee says, however difficult things may be, unless a reckless government mismanages our economy, we should never go back to poverty of the 1950's and 1960's. The answer to setbacks is not to wring our hands at our bad luck but to work harder, to improve our work attitude and to increase productivity. We should diversify our economy, upgrade technology in factories and in offices and increase knowledge and skill.

The prime minister says if we are prudent, we can manage our economy and preserve our savings to overcome a prolonged recession and avoid a catastrophe. If we trust to luck and take high risks, we shall be ruined. Singapore can offer a decent life for its 2.4 million people only if its society is well organized, its workers well trained and productive, its government honest, efficient and imaginative.

His deepest concern is how to make the young more conscious of security which is defense against threats to our survival, whether they are external or internal. Our young, from students in schools to full-time national service and those in the reserve must be fit. They must practice their military skills without (?battle) maneuvers and must be prepared to meet any emergency.

In defending how vital the security and stability of our ASEAN neighbors is to us, Mr Lee says: Today it is Thailand which is threatened. Tomorrow, it can be any one of us. Without ASEAN cooperation and solidarity, one by one we can be subverted and manipulated. He says: Once revolution and strife upsets stability, investment, development and prosperity will vanish. We shall all be refugees.

Mr Lee goes onto say that the younger generation of Singaporeans will inherit a much more complex and a much more developed economy which provides 2.4 million people with a standard of living and a quality of life better than most countries in Asia, outside Japan. They will have to defend it. They must be vigorous and bold in taking Singapore up the technological ladder. He reminds Singaporeans that they will grow and prosper only if both the young and old do not ever forget that their destiny depends upon a secure, disciplined, well-governed and a hardworking Singapore.

Further Report

[Excerpts] Singapore, Aug. 8 (AFP) -- Report by K.S.C. Pillai -- Mr Lee said high interest rates in America threatened to choke off an economic recovery, Europe was openly threatening trade wars and protectionism and Japan had scaled down its growth prospects for this year.

According to a note accompanying the prime minister's speech, Singapore's economy grew by 6.8 percent in the first half of this year, the lowest growth rate since 1976. The major growth areas were transport and communications, financial and business services and construction and trade. Manufacturing was adversely affected by the world recession and declined by 1.2 percent, the first negative growth in seven years. The prime minister noted that Singapore could withstand recession in the United States and Europe for one or two years, but not longer.

The note on economic conditions said that investment commitments for the first half of the year totalled 1,110 million dollars (500 million U.S.), which was about the same as last year. Some 70 percent of this was from foreign investors, mainly for the electrical/ electronics, machinery and patroleum refining sectors. Total investment commitments for the year was expected to reach the targeted 1,500 million dollars (700 million U.S.), but tourism slowed down and grew by only 4.5 percent, which was under the targets. External trade was also badly hit, and grew by only 4.6 percent for the first half of this year compared with 12.9 percent for the same period last year.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE'S ROLE IN SUCCESSION NOTED

Imelda Appointed to Committee

HK080048 Manila Domestic Service in English 2300 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] President Marcos has appointed the First Lady and Human Settlements Minister Mrs Imelda Romualdez Marcos and three others to the Executive Committee. The appointments brought to 11 the number of members of the committee. The committee is a constitutional body created in 1981 to assist the president in administering day-to-day government affairs. Also appointed to the committee were Governor Ali Diamporo, representing the Muslim regions; Ambassador Roberto Benedicto, representing the Visayas; and Assemblyman Ronaldo Zamora, representing the youth sector, The appointment of the first lady to the committee was unanimously endorsed last July 25 by the ruling KBL Party during its caucus at Malacanang. Four more members are yet to be appointed to the committee to fill up the prescribed 15 seats.

In a memorandum to Prime Minister Cesar Virata, who is chairman of the Executive Committee, the president said the appointments were made in view of the decision of the ruling party to broaden representation in the policymaking process. In announcing the new appointments, the president emphasized that membership in the committee was not permanent. The understanding regarding this decision, he said, is that this will serve the end of training qualified individuals for national leadership, specially representatives of the younger generation and the women, whose representation in decision and policymaking has so far been underemphasized.

In a talk with newsmen, he said he will ask the members of the Executive Committee to allow the training of young leaders, so that we will have a pool of leaders ready to take over the reins of government at any given time. This training covers the various echelons of leadership and different ranges of age and capabilities in different areas such as foreign affairs, security, economics, political and educational policies.

Committee's Role Explained

[Text] If the president of the country dies, the Executive Committee, headed by the prime minister, will take over as head of state until a new president is chosen, Adrian Cristobal, presidential spokesman, told yesterday's meeting of the Rotary Club of Manila.

Describing as "unfounded" any apprehension about the issue of presidential succession, Cristobal said the question of who will succeed the president is a "constitutional matter." To prove his point, he quoted Sections 4 and 7 of Article 7 of the Constitution.

Section 4 states that if the president-elect dies or fails to qualify, or if the president has not been chosen, the Executive Committee will take over the powers and duties of the president until a new president is elected. However, if the Batasang Pambansa withdraws its confidence in the prime minister, who heads the Executive Committee, the speaker would act as president until a new president is elected.

Cristobal said that what was contained in the "secret memorandum" the president left with Armed Forces Chief of Staff Fabian Ver, when Mr. Marcos went to Saudi Arabia, was an instruction to the latter to see to it that the provision on succession, namely, Article 7 Sections 4 and 7 of the Constitution, are complied with.

Then, the president cited the armed forces' enviable tradition of complete subordination to civilian authority and the Constitution, Cristobal said.

Succession Issue 'Premature'

[Text] The rule of succession to the presidency was assured yesterday to allay fears of a "constitutional crisis" in the event something untoward happens to the president.

Speaking before the Rotary Club in Manila, presidential spokesman Adrian Cristobal said the Constitution, as amended, is the bedrock of the government's stability. "A constitutional crisis might have arisen out of the present constitutional if its validity had not been upheld by the Supreme Court," he said. For this reason, Cristobal added, any apprehension about presidential succession is unfounded.

He said the question of who will succeed President Marcos is important but premature. "There is every indication that the ruling party will nominate President Marcos again in 1987." He said it is apparent that anxiety over succession stems from varying considerations about the identity of the probable successor.

He said: "It is not the process or the how, but the who which is the nagging question in some people's minds." "When elections are called, the parties will put up their candidates and very likely, the next president will come from the Kilusang Bagaong Lipunan," Cristobal said.

"As for any unforeseen eventuality, there is the Executive Committee," he said.

DEMONSTRATORS PROTEST U.S. BASES, NUCLEAR PLANT

HK090205 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 7 Aug 82 pp 1, 9

[Text] More than 300 antinuclear demonstrators demanded yesterday the scrapping of U.S. military bases in the country and a halt to the construction of the Bataan nuclear plant in Morong. They also called for a stop to the race for nuclear weapons and conventional arms in a two-hour rally in front of the U.S. Embassy in Manila yesterday afternoon. The rally, organized by the Nuclear Free Philippines Coalition (NFPC), marked the anniversary of the dropping of a hydrogen bomb by U.S. planes in Hiroshima, Japan.

Former Sen. Lorenzo Tanada, 82, NFPC head, said the U.S. bases in the Philippines "constitute a real danger to our national existence." He said that the bases would invite a nuclear attack from America's enemies. The U.S. maintains the Subic naval base, a 7th Fleet repair and logistics center, and Clark air base, home of the 13th U.S. Air Force.

The NFPC, an alliance of 70 groups throughout the country, said in leaflets distributed during the protest action that uranium-fired nuclear plants produce plutonium, a basic ingredient in the making of hydrogen bombs. It said the Morong plant is near Subic and Clark bases where, it claimed, nuclear warheads are stored.

Because of the country's strategic location, the NFPC said, the Reagan administration plans to use it as a base for war maneuvers and logistics in the event of a nuclear war in the Middle East and Northeast Asia. This could happen since the United States wants to protect its political and economic interests in the country, the region, and the world.

A former Univeristy of the Philippines professor, Mariflor Parfan, said that the payment for the $1.9-billion Bataan plant should have gone to the wages of Filipino workers and could have bought homes for the many squatters in the country. Among the other speakers was Endo Yoichi, 34, president of the Tokyo-based Fus-sa Citizens' League for Citizens of Anti-U.S. Imperialism.

SAKURAUCHI, DIET GROUP DISCUSS TEXTBOOK REVISION

[Excerpts] Tokyo, Aug 9, KYODO -- Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi indicated his hope Monday that the Education Ministry will take steps leading to correction of its rephrasing of Japanese high school history textbooks which have angered neighboring nations.

Sakurauchi told a Lower House Foreign Policy Committee meeting that some kind of steps are needed in view of sharp international criticism of revised accounts of Japanese history before and during the last war. He said that he is asking fellow Cabinet ministers to deal with the problem properly considering the furor in China and South Korea. The Foreign Policy Committee met for three-and-half hours Monday to discuss the problem.

Sakurauchi said he was very concerned about escalating criticism in China and South Korea. The foreign minister said that Japan's position of repenting past faults was made clear when it established formal relations with South Korea in 1964 and China in 1972. He stressed that the matter be handled calmly.

When an opposition dietman asked whether the foreign minister would describe the war with China as an invasion, Sakurauchi replied that Japan should admit that it was sharply criticized as an invasion in international opinion. Referring to the Korean independence movement, Sakurauchi said that it was a national movement for independence against Japan's rule in the Korean Peninsula.

He said the current situation should not be allowed to continue and the problem should be settled "absolutely before Prime Minister Suzuki's visit to China scheduled for late September."

In the meantime, a ranking official of the Education Ministry repeated its rigid stand of not accepting corrections in the textbook wording. Isao Suzuki, director general of the ministry's Elementary and Secondary Education Bureau, said that the proposed way out of attaching errata to the textbooks was not suitable as such was normally made for technical mistakes. Suzuki also said the ministry would not entertain requests by textbook publishers and authors to correct the wording.

Hiroshi Hashimoto, chief of the ministry's Information and Cultural Affairs Bureau, met unofficially with Xiao Xiangqian, director of the Asian Affairs Department of the Chinese Foreign Ministry, in Beijing Monday.

Ministry Explains Revisions

OW100429 Tokyo KYODO in English 0309 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 10, KYODO -- The Education Ministry is circulating an internal classified document outlining the background and procedures leading to the controversial revisions of Japanese history textbooks, it was learned Tuesday.

The document, prepared by the Ministry and marked for internal use only, argues that the series of revisions regarding Japan's military exploits in China and Japanese colonial rule in Korea were aimed at conforming with objective historical accounts.

The revisions have triggered complaints from China, North and South Korea and other Asian countries that Japan is trying to whitewash war-time atrocities committed in China and suppressive measures against Korea.

In taking up the 1937-45 Sino-Japanese War, the ministry document argues that invasion or advance, rather than aggression, is more historically objective in describing the events leading to the seven-year war. The document also said the term "advance" conforms with historical descriptions of the China invasion by European powers as found in European textbooks.

On the "Nanjing Incident," (the rape of Nanking, as the 1937 massacre is known among some Western scholars) the Education Ministry said it had decided to delete the number of people killed because there is no way to establish the exact number of casualties. "The reported casualties ranged from as few as between 10,000 and 20,000 people to more than several hundreds of thousands killed. There is a huge discrepancy according to different historical data," the document said.

On "forcible" transfer of Korean labor to Japan to engage in wartime industries, the Education Ministry argued that it is legally correct to describe the event as "mobilization" since Korea was then under Japanese rule and Koreans had Japanese nationality. Moreover, the ministry pointed out, it is inappropriate to label the entire use of Korean labor as "enforced" because, apart from "mobilization," some Koreans moved to Japan of their own free will.

The Education Ministry also suggested that the term "rioting" used in describing the 1919 Korean independence movement does not necessarily have negative connotations. The term "rioting" was merely used to denote a course of action, and anyway most Japanese history textbooks still described the March 1, 1919 uprising as part of the Korean independence movement, the ministry said.

GOVERNMENT PLEDGES ADMINISTRATIVE REFORM ACTION

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 10, KYODO -- The government pledged Tuesday to carry out "earnestly and faithfully" wide-ranging recommendations submitted by the Ad Hoc Administration Reform Council earlier this month.

The Cabinet of Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki adopted the council's report at a regular session Tuesday morning and formally committed the government to implementing its recommendations. "It is the government policy to accept the report with the greatest respect and the government intends to carry out the recommendations earnestly and faithfully," a statement released after the Cabinet session said.

The statement also appealed for the nation's support of administration reform proposals but stayed short of spelling out a government commitment against raising taxes, the guiding spirit behind the Ad Hoc Reform Council headed by Toshiwo Doko, former president of Keidanren (Federaion of Economic Organizations). Suzuki has repeatedly said the government would cut down government deficits without seeking tax increases but the commitment was dropped in the statement, pointing to possibilities of tax hikes to make up the treasury shortfalls.

The statement said the government would seek immediate legislation to tackle urgent issues, such as the reform of the deficit-ridden Japan National Railways.

A timetable outlined in a strategy session of the ruling Liberal-Democratic Party preceding the Cabinet meeting showed the government plans to work out a legislative bill on JNR reform later this month and submit it for Diet deliberation during the autumn extraordinary session.

Suzuki is also expected to appoint a state minister in September to take charge of the reform of the annuity system as proposed by the Ad Hoc Reform Council.

FINANCE MINISTER ON CURRENT ECONOMIC ISSUES

Yen Fall 'Temporary'

OW100245 Tokyo KYODO in English 0238 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 10, KYODO -- Finance Minister Michio Watanabe said Tuesday he does not believe the yen's value will keep falling for a long time.

Watanabe said at a press conference that, in his view, the recent sharp drop in the yen's value against the U.S. dollar is just a "temporary" phenomenon caused by speculative trading. He says he does not believe the yen's depreciation was caused by factors such as a massive capital outflow from Japan.

Watanabe said monetary authorities will continue to conduct market intervention activity in an appropriate manner to stop the yen's precarious fall. He added he is not considering taking special action, such as emergency foreign exchange controls, at the moment.

The Japanese currency plummeted to a 28-month low of yen 263.00 against the dollar on the Tokyo foreign exchange market Monday, although it recovered slightly Tuesday.

Revenue Estimate Revision

OW100443 Tokyo KYODO in English 0256 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 10, KYODO -- In a move bringing fiscal policy more in line with realities, Finance Minister Michio Watanabe indicated Tuesday the government will revise its revenue estimate downward in preparing a supplementary budget for fiscal 1982 later this year.

Watanabe told reporters the several trillion yen revenue shortage expected in the current fiscal year, ending March 31, will become clear in September. An unofficial estimate put it at yen 4.5 trillion (dollar 17 billion) compared with yen 2.9 trillion (dollar 11 billion) in fiscal 1981.

"We will come up with a realistic revenue estimate when an extraordinary Diet session is convened" later this year to act on the supplementary budget, Watanabe said.

The government has been criticized for making too optimistic revenue estimates despite the protracted economic slump that is cutting deep into tax revenue.

MITI'S ABE URGES MEASURES TO BOLSTER ECONOMY

OW071335 Tokyo KYODO in English 1143 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] Sapporo, Aug 7, KYODO -- International Trade and Industry Minister Shintaro Abe said here Saturday that the government will have to take measures in September to prevent the further deterioration of Japan's economy.

The economy is now in a "dangerous state," with the growth rate for the current fiscal year 1982 threatening to drop below the 2 percent level against government forecasts of 5.2 percent, Abe said.

Speaking at a lecture meeting sponsored by the HOKKAIDO SHIMBUN (newspaper), the trade minister said the government should bolster the economy by stimulating public works projects during the second half of the year.

As other key measures which should be taken in September, Abe called for:

-- More housing construction, as there is demand for at least 1.3 million new houses.

-- Help for the aluminum, pulp and other industries stricken by slumping business.

-- Supports for medium and smaller businesses.

Abe added that the government should implement these measures "even at some financial burden."

DFRF ISSUES STATEMENT ON KIM TAE-CHUNG CASE

SK091028 Pyongyang KCNA in English 1015 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, Aug 9 (KCNA) -- Yo Yon-ku, director of the Secretariat of the Central Committee of the Democratic Front for the Reunification of the Fatherland, in a talk upon the lapse of 9 years since the Kim Tae-chung kidnap case occurred, expressed the hope that all the honest-minded people of the world would wage the movement for rescuing Kim Tae-chung on a broader scale.

In her talk on August 8, she said that though 9 years have passed since Kim Tae-chung, a South Korean democratic figure, was kidnapped in Tokyo by the former South Korean traitor under the backstage manipulation of the U.S. imperialists, he is still suffering in a solitary cell where he is kept by the Chon Tu-hwan military fascist clique.

Recalling that Kim Tae-chung conducted brisk activities at home and abroad for the democratization of South Korean society and the peaceful reunification of the country, she said: Feeling uneasy about this, the U.S. imperialists set in motion the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency and the South Korean puppet Central Intelligence Agency which was active as its tool and framed a plot to murder Kim Tae-chung, unnoticed.

This was the case of the abduction of Kim Tae-chung which was perpetrated in broad daylight in the heart of Tokyo on August 8, 1973. The Kim Tae-chung kidnap case, which caused quite a stir in the world, vividly showed what a crafty and vicious violator of human rights and chieftain of international gangsterism the U.S. imperialists were.

The U.S. imperialists made the puppets let loose more than 20 "martial law troops" at dawn on May 18, 1980, to surprise the house of Kim Tae-chung and took him to prison without warrant. I consider this to be an act motivated by the judgement that his existence as a reputed "presidential" candidate in South Korea would rapidly rouse the sentiments for democracy among the people of all walks of life and eventually create a danger to the colonial rule.

The Kim Tae-chung case indicates that, as long as there are the U.S. imperialists in South Korea and they pursue the colonial policy, the democratization of society or the peaceful reunification of the country can hardly be realized.

The political parties, groupings, personages and fellow countrymen in South Korea and abroad, I think, should lift higher the banner of anti-U.S. struggle for independence which they have already held high and wage a more active struggle to drive out the U.S. troops and put an end to their colonial rule.

At the same time, they should continue to wage a relentless struggle to overthrow the Chon Tu-hwan group bent on fascism and war, treachery and division as a tool of the U.S. imperialists.

The U.S. imperialists should look straight at the reality of South Korea where the sentiments of anti-U.S. struggle for independence are growing with each passing day and withdraw from South Korea without delay, taking along all their aggression forces.

Lastly, I express the hope that all the honest-minded people of the world will lift up louder voices condemning the U.S. imperialists and the fascist clique of Chon Tu-hwan, their stooge, for persecuting Kim Tae-chung and conduct all forms of movement of broader scale for rescuing Kim Tae-chung.

EX-SOUTH KOREAN POLITICIANS CONDEMN PUSAN TRIAL

[Text] Pyongyang, Aug 7 (KCNA) -- The Consultative Council of Former South Korean Politicians in the North for the Promotion of Peaceful Reunification issued a statement on August 6 denouncing the anti-national crime of the Chon Tu-hwan military fascist clique, the dirty lackey of the U.S. imperialists, in inflicting capital punishment and heavy penalties upon persons involved in the fire at the "American Cultural Centre" in Pusan.

The statement says: In March last hot-blooded youth and students embraced in the "Saebyokbyolhoe" (Morning Star Society) of South Korea scattered leaflets reading "Let us hold the torch of anti-U.S. struggle!" and "U.S., go home!" and, at the same time, set fire at the accursed "American Cultural Centre" in Pusan. This was an eruption of rancor and resentment pent up in the hearts of the South Korean people for 37 years of the U.S. imperialists' occupation of South Korea and a declaration of the patriotic will to drive out the U.S. imperialist aggressors, the sworn enemy, and restore the sovereignty of the nation.

It is clear to everyone that this righteous action cannot be a crime nor can be a pretext of penalization and conscientious religionists who protected them cannot be a target of any interrogation.

This notwithstanding, the Chon Tu-hwan group launched a search operation throughout South Korea with the general mobilization of the army and police and finally imprisoned guiltless people and is trying to penalize them. This is a big fascist rampage to put down the daily mounting anti-U.S. independence movement in South Korea and a dirty butchery of fellow countrymen to prolong its remaining days by sacrificing them for the sake of its master.

The consultative council of former South Korean politicians in the north for the promotion of peaceful reunification pungently denounces with surging indignation the entirely unjust fascist outrage of the U.S. imperialists and the Chon Tu-hwan traitors against persons involved in the fire at the "American Cultural Centre" in Pusan.

As long as the U.S. colonial rule is maintained in South Korea and the U.S. imperialist aggression forces remain there as ever, one cannot hope for national sovereignty, democracy, the solution of the question of people's living or the peaceful reunification of the country, the statement notes, and stresses: The Chon Tu-hwan group must look straight at the powerful tide of anti-U.S. imperialism and independence rising in South Korea, immediately stop the murderous trial of persons involved in the fire at the "American Cultural Centre" in Pusan and promptly acquit all of them.

The U.S. imperialists must discontinue encouraging the group of Chon Tu-hwan, the arch-traitor, to suppress the patriotic and independent forces of South Korea and give up their aggressive and interventionist manoeuvres against South Korea and withdraw all their aggression forces at an early date.

We former South Korean politicians in the North ardently call upon personages of political parties, groupings and various circles of South Korea, overseas Korean personages and old friends, acquaintances and colleagues to rise up as one in the sacred cause of clearing South Korea of the U.S. imperialist aggression forces, putting an end to their colonial fascist rule and achieving the independent and peaceful reunification of the country, firmly uniting under the banner of anti-U.S. imperialism and independence regardless of differences in ideology and idea, party affiliation and religious belief.

VRPR URGES PROTECTION OF UNDERGROUND GROUPS

SK100536 (Clandestine) Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in Korean to South Korea 1000 GMT 29 Jul 82

[Dialogue on protecting underground organizations from regular feature program "Hour for Youths and Students"]

[Text] [First speaker] These days, the fascist hangmen are running amok to ferret out and obliterate the underground organizations of the youths and students carrying out the just patriotic activities under the banner of anti-U.S. and independence.

[Second speaker] True. Protecting underground organizations from the claws of the frantic suppression of the enemy is important for protecting the main force of the struggle and for saving the live embers of the vigorous future resistance for national salvation.

[First speaker] In protecting underground organizations, I think it important to keep their secrets.

[Second speaker] You are right.

[First speaker] Now we will discuss how to keep the secrets of these organizations. We know that it is important to protect the underground struggle organizations -- which are playing a leading role in the movement of youths and students -- from the claws of the enemy suppression and to keep the secrets of these organizations. Please, explain why it is so important to keep the secrets of the underground organizations.

[Third speaker] Yes. It can be said that keeping the secrets of the underground organizations is an essential demand of the underground struggle itself. Only when the secrets of the organizations are kept can the underground organizations and their members be protected from the fascist suppression and can the ongoing anti-U.S. and anti-Chon Tu-hwan struggle be successfully continued.

[Second speaker] Then, what should be done to keep the secrets of these organizations?

[Third speaker] In organizing and maintaining the underground organizations, I think that the principle of secrecy must be observed. We can say that secrecy is the life of underground organizations. Therefore, above all, in organizing organizations and rallying members, those who have had difficulties and been tested in the life and struggle must be selected in a strict manner and, in the same manner, the organizations must be expanded. At same time, it is also important to continue the indoctrination of the members so that they may consider the secrets of their organizations as their lives.

[First speaker] In addition, to keep the secrets of the underground organizations and to protect these organizations, I think the camouflage of the organizations is very important.

[Third speaker] You are right. There are many ways to camouflage underground organizations. Among other things, what is most important is, I think, to use legal organizational names and to use methods with which free activities are possible. Only by doing so can the security of the underground organizations be guaranteed and the full-scale activities of the organizations be carried out. At the same time, I think that one of the important matters is to exercise keen prudence so that the members of the underground organizations do not get involved in careless struggle and expose their identity.

[Second speaker] And, as was the case with the Purim and Haknim incidents, in case the members of the organizations are arrested and detained and [words indistinct], what should be done?

[Third speaker] Yes, this is one of the principles of keeping secrets for the protection of underground organizations. In case members of the organizations are unjustly arrested, they must maintain their revolutionary faith and (?obligations to comrades) and not succumb to any torture in order to keep the secret of the organizations. At the same time, for the security of the organizations, the base of the organizations must be moved and shelters must be provided for the remaining members of the organizations.

[First speaker] I think there should be move things to do for keeping the secrets of the organizations. However, since we have limited time, we end our discussion here. Thank you.

VRPR ON MAJOR POWERS' ROLE IN REUNIFICATION CAUSE

SK100735 (Clandestine) Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in Korean to South Korea 1000 GMT 9 Aug 82

[From "Today's Feature" program: "The Reunification of the Fatherland Is an Urgent Task Which Cannot Be Delayed"]

[Text] Ending the nation's division, which has imposed indescribable misfortune and agony on our masses, and achieving the reunification of the fatherland at an early date are the unanimous desire of the nation and a supreme national task whose accomplishment cannot be delayed.

The agony of national division which our masses have suffered for 37 years -- a longer period than that of the dark Japanese imperialist rule -- must not continue. If the reunification of the fatherland is not achieved at an early date and the division of the nation persists, our nation will remain split and our masses will suffer from colonial slavery.

As is known, throughout our long history our nation has remained homogeneous, living a happy life on the same land with the same bloodline inherited from the same ancestors and with the same language and culture. We can never allow the permanent division of our nation, which has survived as a single state safeguarding the security of the country and the dignity of the nation from countless aggressions by foreign enemies.

Our people, who lived together throughout a long history, freely travelling from south to north and north to south, have been separated because of the U.S. imperialist aggressors and have no way of knowing the whereabouts of their relatives. They are suffering the agony caused by the declining homogeneity of our national language and living styles and customs which have been formed and nourished through a long history. Under these circumstances, if national division continues, our nation will remain divided forever and our masses will not be relieved from colonial slavery.

At the same time, if the reunification of the fatherland is not achieved at an early date, our nation will be unable to escape a destiny as victim of foreign forces.

History shows that the interests of small countries were infringed upon and small countries fell victim whenever major powers fought against one another to expand their sphere of influence. At the end of the Yi Dynasty, our country suffered great damages when Japan and Russia and China of the Ching Dynasty fought against one another to establish spheres of influence. In particular, it can be said that the fall of our country at the hands of the Japanese imperialists in 1910 was the result of the incompetence of the feudal rulers and the major powers' fighting aimed at establishing spheres of influence.

At that time, in return for Japan's noninterference in their occupation of the Philippines in the Pacific, the U.S. aggressors allowed the Japanese imperialists to occupy the Korean Peninsula. Because of the imperialists' scramble for spheres of influence, the fates of small nations are still endangered. When the interests of countries conflict and military confrontation among the major powers [yolgangdul] worsen, if the reunification of our country is not achieved and the division between North and South continues, the reunification and independence of our country and the sovereignty of the nation will not be achieved. Our masses will become permanent victims of foreign forces.

To prevent infringment upon national sovereignty by the major powers and their trifling with the destiny of the nation, to prevent the imposition of slavery on those who have lost the country, and to have relief from misfortunes and agony, our masses must bring the division of the nation to an end and achieve the fatherland's reunification at an early date. Our masses have no more important a task than the reunification of the fatherland.

11TH ANNIVERSARY OF KIM'S STRUGGLE SPEECH NOTED

[NODONG SINMUN 6 August special article: "Let Us Reject Foreign Forces and the Treacherous Clique and Restore the Sovereignty of the People" -- KCNA identifies this as an "article"]

[Text] We greet the 11th anniversary of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song's publication of his historic work "The Joint Struggle of the Asian Revolutionary People Against the U.S. Imperialists Will Surely Be Victorious." Under circumstances in which a struggle to create the speed of the 1980's is being vigorously waged in the northern half, in which the anti-U.S. struggle for independence has been stepped up in South Korea and in which the solidarity movement of the world's people for our cause for the fatherland's reunification has been strengthened, our people greet this significant day.

Greeting this day, we recall with excitement the immortal achievements of the great leader, who, by publishing the famous 6 August work, has provided an opportunity of bringing about an epochal change in achieving the cause of the fatherland's reunification. When the work was published, the situation on the Korean Peninsula was very complicated. Isolated, rejected and driven into a defensive, passive position because of the anti-U.S. struggle of the Asian people for independence -- a struggle which was stepped up reflecting the demand of the era of independence -- the U.S. imperialists, while strengthening maneuvers for aggression and war in an attempt to continuously hold on the South Korea, obstinately sought the perpetual division of Korea. Because of this, a new obstacle was laid on the road of reunification, the danger of fixing division increased with each passing day and peace in Korea and Asia was greatly threatened.

The situation thus developed urgently demanded that nation-saving measures be taken to thwart the maneuvers by the U.S. imperialists and their stooges for aggression and division and to open new prospects for the fatherland's reunification. Such being the case, the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song scientifically analyzed the situation by publishing his historic work and set forth a policy for extensive North-South negotiations as a nation-saving measure for expediting the fatherland's independent and peaceful reunification.

The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song taught: We are ready to have contact at any time with all political parties, including the Democratic Republican Party, social organizations and individual figures in South Korea.

The consistent stand our party and the government of the republic have assumed in solving the question of the country's reunification is to achieve the fatherland's independent and peaceful reunification by our people themselves through the united efforts of the North and South without any foreign interference. The fatherland's reunification is a pan-national task. This task can only be achieved successfully through the united efforts of all the Korean people.

The policy for extensive negotiations set forth by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song is a patriotic reunification policy which makes it possible to achieve the country's reunification, using the independent national forces, and is a practical one which suits the desire of our people and the pan-national nature of the fatherland's reunification. This policy is also a positive one ending the protracted rupture of the North and South and expediting the cause for the fatherland's reunification.

Thanks to its justness, the policy for extensive negotiations won great sympathy and support from the world's progressive peoples as well as from our people and forced the South Korean authorities to go to the site of negotiations with us. Thus, a breakthrough was made in the barrier of division, which had long been tightly closed, political talks were held between the North and South and the North-South joint statement was issued with the three principles -- independence, grand national unity and peaceful reunification -- as a cornerstone. This demonstrated the great vitality of the policy for North-South negotiations set forth by the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song. This was the brilliant fruition of the policy for independent and peaceful reunification, which our party had consistently pursued.

Following the contact between both sides, we made every possible sincere effort to open the future path of reunification through negotiations between the North and South. Even after the South Korean rulers came up with a policy for fabricating two Koreas, violating agreed provisions in the joint statement, we did not stop our efforts for reunification. When the previous dictator was eliminated in South Korea and when political disturbances continued there, we proposed to achieve collaboration and unity and make a breakthrough for the people. Despite our efforts, no improvement was made in relations between the North and South, and a grimmer obstacle was laid on the future path of reunification. This was totally because of the vicious maneuvers for division by the U.S. imperialists who did not want Korea's reunification.

To squash people's aspirations for the fatherland's reunification, the U.S. imperialists had the puppets clamor that the joint statement was nothing but a piece of paper and the U.S. forces were not outside forces. They have reinforced the U.S. forces in South Korea and the puppet armed forces. Through the repeated rackets of war games and military provocations, they have aggravated the situation and have instigated the South Korean puppets to national antagonism and confrontation.

They have incited the puppets to desperately oppose all our patriotic proposals for reunification. In an attempt to internationally justify our country's division, they have even set forth proposals for the simultaneous entry of North and South Korea into the United Nations and for a cross-recognition of North and South Korea. The U.S. imperialists' splittist schemes are fruition of their aggressive ambition to hold on to South Korea as colony and military base forever.

In carrying out their world strategy by force, the U.S. imperialists have attached a greater importance to South Korea. They, who have maneuvered openly and covertly to maintain their colonial rule, which has been fundamentally shaken in South Korea, are exercising an unprecedentedly brutal rule by putting up such truculent military fascist elements as the Chon Tu-hwan ring and imposing military oppression on South Korea.

Although they are trying to make South Korea appear as an independent country so as to cover up and justify their colonial rule in South Korea, the U.S. imperialists are the real rulers who control the internal and external policies, exert influence upon economic affairs and exercise the prerogative of supreme command of the military sector in South Korea. South Korea is completely a U.S. colony that has no sovereignty in any field, including politics, economy, culture and military. The South Korean regime is nothing but a tool made by the U.S. imperialists to carry out their colonial and splittist policy.

If we can say that the Syngman Rhee regime -- the product of the 10 May separate, anti-patriotic election -- was designed to perpetuate national divisions, we can also say that the Pak Chong-hui regime -- the product of the 16 May military coup d'etat -- was aimed at squashing the aspirations for the fatherland's reunification that were spreading like wildfire in South Korea after the 19 April people's uprising.

The Chon Tu-hwan regime -- the product of the 12 December military coup to purge military leaders -- was also produced by the U.S. imperialists to maintain colonial rule in South Korea by blocking the rough waves of democracy and reunification since the October incident of 1979 and by fixing division.

Traitor Chon Tu-hwan emerged as the chieftain of fascism by thoroughly getting rid of political opponents. He barbarously suppressed the Kwangju people's uprising by mobilizing the puppet army. By placing the whole of South Korea under atrocious military fascism and relentlessly suppressing the democratic figures and patriots including Kim Tae-chung, he is making a habit of all kinds of autocracy. The U.S. imperialists have instigated and pulled the strings behind the scenes in all these stories.

The ambition of the U.S. imperialists, who have divided our nation and are trying to continuously sit astride South Korea as a colony and a military base, is outrageous and vicious.

The U.S. imperialists, who have turned South Korea into a colony and a dark land in which sovereignty and human rights are totally violated and eradicated, have changed South Korea into a dangerous hotbed of war and are accelerating the preparations for a war against us by even introducing nuclear arms. Because of their reckless schemes, the situation in the Korean Peninsula is extremely tense.

The U.S. imperialists are the ringleaders who are strangling democracy and civil rights in South Korea, the wirepullers of the Kwangju massacre and the masterminds who are scheming to disturb the peace in Korea and to seek eternal division. As long as dangerous aggressors like the U.S. imperialists are left intact in half of the country's territory, we cannot achieve democratization of the South Korean society nor the country's reunification. This is the serious lesson which the history of division is teaching.

The reunification of the fatherland is a unanimous national desire of the Korean people. There is no change at all in our stand that the question of national reunification should be resolved by the efforts of the Korean nation itself without foreign interference.

We will, as in the past, exert in the future all efforts to accomplish the cause of national reunification according to the three principles: independence, great national unity and peaceful reunification.

The most reasonable and realistic way for achieving the reunification of the country in accordance with the three principles of national reunification is to found one confederal state, the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo [DCRK], by bringing together the North and South, leaving the two existing ideologies and systems as they are.

The proposal for founding the confederal state is a great program for reunification that illuminates the shortest way to the realization of the country's reunification on the basis of the three principles of national reunification and in compliance with the tangible realities of our country. The proposal for founding the confederal state embodies the aspirations of the nation of national reunification and the demand of the times for the independent and peaceful settlement of Korean affairs.

The world's people as well as our people have supported the proposal for founding the confederal state and demanded its earliest realization. This clearly evinces the justness of the proposal.

To achieve the founding of the DCRK, the two-Koreas plot of the United States must be thwarted and the U.S. imperialists' aggression on and interference in Korea be stopped. The U.S. imperialists must not seek the splittist two-Koreas policy but withdraw from South Korea without delay, taking along their aggressive troops and destructive weapons. The United States must stop its indiscreet act of egging the South Korean military fascists on to fascism, war and division and withdraw its hand of interference from Korea.

To end the aggression and interference of the U.S. imperialists, the pro-U.S. flunkeyist traitor Chon Tu-hwan clique, their stooges, must be swept away. The Chon Tu-hwan clique is a sordid flunkeyist, treacherous group leaving South Korea to the U.S. imperialists as their colonial, military base and selling the country and the nation to foreign forces. Removing the flunkeyist traitors is a part of the anti-U.S., national salvation struggle to restore the national sovereignty and reunify the country. It is a most urgent task to force the U.S. imperialists aggressors to withdraw from South Korea and restore the lost sovereignty of the nation. The anti-U.S. struggle for independence is the only way of realizing the democratization of the South Korean society, achieving the reunification of the country and guaranteeing the prosperity of the nation.

This is the era of independence, in which currents of independence are sweeping over the whole world. Our people's aspirations for building an independent, new society -- a reunified and independent Korea -- without foreign forces and traitors are firm. Today the people's struggle to oppose the colonial, terrorist rule and to realize national sovereignty is strengthening in South Korea with each passing day. Setting fire to the U.S. cultural center and burning the U.S. flag even under harsh tyranny and suppression, the South Korean people have courageously waged the anti-U.S. struggle for independence, demanding the withdrawal of the U.S. imperialists from South Korea, and have courageously waged the antidictatorial struggle for democracy, demanding the resignation of the Chon Tu-hwan ring from power. Nothing can block our people's aspirations for smashing the U.S. imperialists' maneuvers of aggression and division and achieving the independent and peaceful reunification of the fatherland.

Following the wise leadership of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and the guidance of the glorious party center, our people will realize the historic cause of national reunification without fail by forcing the U.S. imperialists to withdraw from South Korea and, with the unified strength of the nation by founding the DCRK.

APPEAL ADOPTED ON SPEED OF 1980'S IN AGRICULTURE

[Letter of appeal adopted at 1 August rally of members of Chongsan cooperative farm]

[Text] We, the members of the Chongsan cooperative farm, send this letter of appeal to all agricultural workers across the country. We are burning with a firm resolve to lead the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's.

When we effect great new revolutionary upsurges, upholding the wise leadership of the party and the leader, our fatherland will be converted into a more wealthy and powerful people's paradise. The socialist system of our country will display its infinite might and superiority. All of us should rise in the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's.

The letter of appeal continues: The struggle to create the speed of the 1980's is a loyal battle to reenact a great upsurge in socialist construction under the leadership of the great leader and the glorious party center. With the spirit of absoluteness and unconditionality toward the great leader's teachings and the party's policies to implement them, all of us should do farmwork in a scientific and technological way by completely enacting the chuche farming method, thus creating a great upswing in agricultural production. We should again display the might of the great chuche farming method to the world.

The letter of appeal points out: By thoroughly implementing the demand of the chuche farming method created by the great leader, the members of the Chongsan cooperative farm will contribute to the conquest of the heights of 15-million-ton grain production ahead of schedule by increasing the production of wet-field rice per chongbo by 123.8 percent and the production of corn per chongbo by 135.2 percent in the 1980's over this year's estimated yield.

The letter of appeal notes: By upholding the teachings the great leader has given to Chongsan-ri and militant tasks the party has assigned to it, the members of the Chongsan cooperative farm will reduce the labor force needed to take care of 1 chongbo of rice. By developing stock breeding, they will produce 150 kg of pork per household and 2 tons and 500 kg per work team each year. They will raise 10 chickens per household and 150 chickens per work team and more than 250 chickens per rice mill. Moreover, they will make every household plant more than 10 fruit trees.

The letter of appeal stressed: The grand tasks assigned us demand that we greatly display the invincible revolutionary spirit and the revolutionary spirit of self-reliance and fortitude.

The letter of appeal continues: We should create the speed of the 1980's with the Paektu revolutionary spirit in which we smashed the enemy by manufacturing Yongil bombs during the days of the anti-Japanese bloody struggle, with the Chollima revolutionary spirit in which we created new norms and records by making what we did not have and finding what we lacked and with speed battle revolutionary spirit in which we stacked up grain stalks, beating the drum of the revolution in the great socialist construction of the 1970's.

The letter of appeal urges all the agricultural workers to intensify the agricultural production on a high level and elevate it on a higher scientific and technological foundation.

The letter of appeal adds: Firmly adhering to the party's chuche revolutionary lines and thoroughly implementing them are an important guarantee to win victory in the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's. To realize the mechanization and scientification of the entire rural economy, we will vigorously wage a mass technological renovation movement and do farmwork efficiently by devising various farming machines, including a modern cold-nursery rice seedling machine, a rice transplanting machine and a machine for application of agricultural chemicals and fertilizers; and remodel them in compliance with the realities of a cooperative farm.

To this end, we will increase the role and responsibility of technicians and strengthen creative cooperation between technicians and farm members.

The letter of appeal adds: Finding new arable land is an important way to increase grain production. We should continuously increase the area of arable land.

The letter of appeal notes: Increasing soil fertility is our party's consistent line. By increasing the production of compost by waging a battle to cut grass in a mass movement, all agricultural workers should spread more than 30 tons of fertile compost per chongbo on every paddy and dry field.

The letter of appeal urges all agricultural workers to devise measures to prevent in advance damage from blight and insects and rain and wind and to overcome the influence of the cold front.

The letter of appeal points out: All the agricultural workers will stretch the life of all farming tools and machines -- the precious assets of a farm -- and carefully manage them. By introducing new devices of tractors, they will save fuel.

The letter of appeal emphasizes: All the functionaries should improve farm management work, give priority to political work in accord with the demand of the Chongsan-ri spirit and the Chongsan-ri method, mobilize the wisdom and ability of the masses by working with them, meticulously plan organizational work and do all work in an assiduous and substantive manner.

The letter of appeal stresses: The key to victory in the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's is to vigorously wage the movement for winning the red banner of the three revolutions and the movement for following the examples of the unheralded heroes.

The letter of appeal notes: The Chongsan cooperative farm will win the double red banner of the three revolutions by April of next year by including the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's in the goal adopted through discussions to win the double red banner of the three revolutions and by making every work team, subwork team and individual produce more than their own plan to attain the goal.

The letter of appeal urges all the agricultural workers to continuously increase the ranks of unheralded heroes working for the party, the leader, the fatherland and the people by further developing and deepening the movement to follow the example of the unheralded heroes.

The letter of appeal concludes: By creating the speed of the 1980's and enacting new upsurges in agricultural production by becoming a sanctuary, honor guard unit and do-or-die unit defending the great sun and the great lodestar, lifting up the revolutionary banner of chuche, let all of us illumine the 1980's as a proud and glorious decade in the history of our fatherland and expedite the consummation of the chuche cause.

MINISTER SAYS TEXTBOOK REVISION 'ANACHRONISTIC'

[Excerpt] Minister of Education Yi Kyu-ho yesterday said that "if a nation tries to justify its previous invasion of other countries, this not only amounts to an anachronistic act but is by no means acceptable by the conscience of educators."

Giving a congratulatory speech in a ceremony to open the 31st International Conference of the World Education Fellowship at the Koreana Hotel in Seoul, the minister continued that "it must be brought home that educators regard it as one of their supreme duties to raise high the torch of peace through mutual understanding and cooperation." The minister said the world we live in today has become a neighborhood, and the whole globe has become a single sphere of life that bind peoples from different countries in one way or another. "What is more, problems spawned in the dust of daily life are no longer of parochial character confined to particular countries but of universal nature, whose complexity defies the effort of any single nation. This fact brings with it a clear mandate that each country base its effort for the solution of problems on mutual understanding and cooperation. In reality, there are numerous instances where the goals serving the common interests of countries are forsworn in the primary concern with national interests than run counter to the former," he continued.

Minister Yi added that in seeking the realization of common goals, mutual understanding and establishing a tie based on this concept must be the first consideration. Subsequently, efforts must be made to strengthen the tie and this may well be achieved by having due respect and love for the people who live in different cultural backgrounds.

DKP Urges Action

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 10 (YONHAP) -- South Korea's major opposition Democratic Korea Party (DKP) has decided to urge the government to take the initiative to rectify erroneous accounts of past Korea-Japan relations in Japanese high school textbooks. In a Tuesday meeting, key DKP officeholders contended that the textbook distortions are the result of the "militaristic fantasy" of some "irresponsible" officials, and agreed to recommend that the government make every effort to correct the books. The DKP officials also said that repeated comments defending the textbooks by Japanese politicians are "intolerable," adding that if their remarks are true, Seoul must seek an official apology from the Japanese Government.

After the meeting, party spokesman Kim Chin-pae said the national indignation currently spreading across Korea is "entirely justifiable," and warned that the indignation will grow until Japan changes the textbook errors. Some DKP members, including Rep. Ko Chae-chong, insisted that Korean lawmakers boycott joint meetings of the Korea-Japan Parliamentarians' Union as long as the textbook issue is unresolved, saying that negotiations in other areas will be meaningless until the textbooks are corrected.

KOREA HERALD PRAISES 'FAIRNESS' OF CURB LOAN TRIAL

[Editorial: "Fair Trial of Loan Scandal"]

[Text] The sentences passed upon the defendants in the cause celebre of Yi-Chang couple's financial scandal could hardly seem harsh enough in view of the magnitude of the panic it had produced. However, the due process of law that was followed and the unwarped justice that was brought to the case leave little room for doubt or discontent.

No amount of penalties would suffice to make amends for the tremendous loss the two curb money market manipulators caused to myriad innocent investors and borrowers and to the integrity of the nation's banks and the financial world at large. The government also suffered a political blow from the rampant grapevine which, without warrant, suspected it of having a hand in the affair.

We are in no position to weigh the propriety of the specific prison terms meted out against the notorious Yi Chol-hui, his wife and a number of their cohorts with reference to the legal technicalities involved. This does not keep us from endorsing the rectitude of the decisions taken by the Seoul District Criminal Court yesterday.

Throughout the court proceedings the accused parties have received speedy, open and just trial by an impartial tribunal to which they are constitutionally entitled. There was no evidence suggesting that anything but legal justice was at work. The sum total of criminal inquiry by the prosecution authorities and judicial hearings made it clear that the money market scandal involved no influence-peddling or venality on the part of government officials and that it had no connection whatsoever with political fund-raising. To the relief of all, the present government and the ruling party are cleared of reproach and incrimination for corruption.

The fact alone that a relation of the first family was arrested and given a four-year term for accepting money for expected good offices speaks for itself. His conviction on a charge less than flagrant comes as irrefutable proof of the uprightness and fairness of the law-enforcement and judiciary branches.

It is important that the government and its men on the bench should act with justice, equity and fairness without prejudice to all. They lived up to public expectations by dealing with the violators of law with no distinction as to their social standing, political ties or any other irrelevant considerations.

Although the case of the bank and curb market swindling is closed in the first instance, the price paid was exorbitant and devastating. Mere administration of justice can do little to make up for the economic and moral dislocations the nation suffered. In all aspects of our social milieu as well as in monetary and commercial activity, greater discipline and morality should be established to insure that no loan sharks, fixers and foolhardy hustlers are allowed to operate. This is a collective responsibility of our community.

UNEN SCORES PRC LEADERSHIP'S 'TREACHERY'

OW071820 Ulaanbaatar MONTSAME in English 1708 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] Ulaanbaatar, August 7 (MONTSAME) -- The present Chinese leadership is still going on along the road of treachery of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, the newspaper UNEN writes, analyzing the home and foreign policy line of Peking.

The Chinese leaders, the organ of the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party Central Committee notes, are seeking to preserve Maoism as a theoretical basis of the Communist Party of China (C.P.C.) activity and as an ideological and political basis of the Cinese society. This testifies to the fact that they are still on the positions of treaty [as received] from the class and internationalist line. Moreover, having proclaimed anti-Sovietism as a guiding line of its foreign policy, Peking openly colluded with the most reactionary forces of imperialism.

Calling for the creation of the "united front" spearheaded against the U.S.S.R. and other socialist countries, the ruling circles of China are trying to involve in it various opportunist and nationalist elements. At the same time they pursue a policy of the so-called "differentiated" approach to socialist countries and communist parties. The paper stresses that the hidden intention to split the socialist community and the international communist movement lays behind this policy.

As to the home policy, the Peking leadership, reviving the multistructural economy, encouraging the activity of the national bourgeoisie and attracting foreign capital, is seeking to raise its military and economic potential with the assistance of the U.S.A. and other capitalist states and to set up the material basis for implementing its great-power and hegemonistic plans.

In order to justify its collusion with imperialists, opportunists of different kinds and chauvinists, those in Peking started "modernizing" the reactionary Moaism leaving its basis -- hegemonism and anti-Sovietism -- untouched.

The paper exposes the attempts made at the 6th plenum of the C.P.C. Central Committee to counterpose this "Sinified Marxism" to the internationalist teaching of Marxism-Leninism, and to present the crimes conducted by Mao Zedong and his accomplices as "faults." The facts evidence that namely Mao and his accomplices are the main culprits of the severe ordeals which the Chinese people underwent.

The political course of the Chinese leadership is not only in line with Marxism-Leninism, [as received] but it is directly hostile to this teaching and to the principles of internationalism, the national daily UNEN points out.

In it Yu. Tsedenbal expressed on behalf of the M.P.R.P. C.C., Mongolian Government and in his own name warm gratitude to Leonid Brezhnev for his sincere feelings of sympathy with the natural disaster -- the flood in some parts of Ulaanbaatar. "The families of dead and injured are deeply moved by your attention," it reads.

With the feeling of heartfelt gratitude I would like to note that the effective help of the Soviet organizations in Mongolia considerably facilitates the work on the rapid liquidation of the consequences of the natural calamity, the message says.

RADIO URGES NUCLEAR WEAPONS BAN, HAILS USSR STANCE

OW071823 Ulaanbaatar MONTSAME in English 1716 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] Ulaanbaatar, August 7 (MONTSAME) -- The international week of actions for banning nuclear weapons which is going on now promotes the concentration of efforts of progressive forces of the world in the struggle for attaining this goal, against the arms race, a commentary of the Mongolian radio says.

The prohibition of nuclear weapons is one of the most important and most acute problems of the present. From the very first days of the appearance of this lethal weapon, the Soviet Union has been consistently coming out for its full elimination, and advanced a number of specific proposals in this direction, a commentator stresses. The commitment of the Soviet Union not to be the first to use nuclear weapons is the most vivid demonstration of good will. The Communist Party of the Soviet Union and the Soviet state are doing and have always done everything in their power to ward off the danger hanging over the world.

However, the U.S.A. and other nuclear powers do not follow the noble example of the Soviet Union. They strive to the build-up of their nuclear arsenals. The decision of the Reagan administration to reject negotiations on the full and universal prohibition of nuclear tests testifies to this end.

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC FRONT HOLDS JUNGLE MEETING

[Text] At a secret jungle camp in the rugged, eastern hills of Burma, the insurgent National Democratic Front (NDF) has recently concluded an important meeting which was hailed by one representative as "an important step towards unity in the struggle for democracy in Burma." It was the first time since the NDF was founded in 1975 that the different anti-government resistance forces in Burma had come together to discuss common issues and the political situation in their country, where an almost unknown civil war has been raging ever since the Union of Burma achieved independence from Britain in 1948.

Among the top level participants in this first NDF congress were Maj-Gen Bo Mya, president of the Karen National Union (KNU), Lt-Col Hseng Harn of the Shan State Progress Party (SSPP), President Aung Kham Ti of the Pa-O National Organisation (PNO) and President Nai Nol Lar of the New Mon State Party (NMSP) which at this meeting was admitted as the eighth member of the (NDF). Also present were delegates from the Karenni National Progressive Party (KNPP), the Lahu National United Party (LNUP) and the Arakan Liberation Party (ALP).

Only the Palaung State Liberation Organisation (PSLO) was unable to send down a representative, due to the long and far from secure journey from its stronghold in Northern Shan State to the site in the south, where the meeting was held. Several rebel leaders when they arrived at the camp -- escorted by their personal security guards -- were suffering from malaria and dengue fever, common diseases among those guerrillas, who have been fighting in the jungles of Burma for several decades.

The most important outcome of the meeting was the decision to coordinate military operations against the Burmese Government's troops and also to try to set up a common NDF force. As a first step, token contingents, of about section or company strength, will be dispatched to the KNU headquarters from the different armies, which together make up the NDF.

"Separately, we cannot hope for victory," said a member of the Pa-O delegation. "But if we were united, our combined forces would outnumber the Burmese Communist troops and we could form a viable, third alternative to the communists and the Rangoon government." The same view was emphasised by KNU leader Bo Mya, who explained in an interview:

"Our main aims are to strengthen the NDF and to coordinate our movements. Because our ethnic minorities are oppressed by the present regime, we share a common platform to work from -- similar goals and a common enemy. We should unite and fight together."

The long-term objective of the NDF, as stated by rebel leaders, is to overthrow Ne Win's and San Yu's military government in Rangoon and to replace the current unitary state with a federal union, which would guarantee equal status for the various ethnic groups in Burma.

"We will lay down our arms only when there is a true Union of Burma with autonomy for all the different nationalities of our country," said one participant at the NDF congress. "This federation could include a Burmese state as well, but the Burmese could in no way be permitted to enforce their language and their culture upon the other peoples of the union."

However, the numerous ethnic insurgent groups in Burma have been accused by their critics of spending more time on talking and squabbling among themselves than on fighting.

The recent NDF congress expressed the intention of putting an end to this: To unite the forces and to launch centrally-directed military operations as part of a policy of action and close cooperation between the different resistance armies in place of the present stalemate.

The Burma Communist Party (BCP), which boasts an army of 10-15,000 Chinese-backed insurgents, now poses the main threat to the Burmese Government and most current battles in Burma are being fought between the BCP's and Rangoon's troops. The leaders of the ethnic insurgents claim that these two contending parties are just as bad as each other. They accuse the government of being "chauvinistic" in its approach to the ethnic minorities and they say that the BCP is a tool of foreign interests, that its officers are ruthless oppressors of the people in the areas under communist control.

"Only the NDF represents the people," claimed on NDF spokesman. "We compose the third, democratic force in Burma. Getting soldiers who are willing to fight for us is not difficult. But often we are forced to send the volunteers back to their villages again after training, because we are short of arms and ammunition."

So far, no outside force has been willing to support the NDF and this is -- according to spokesmen of the front -- the main reason why little progress has been made in their struggle for democracy in Burma.

Most ethnic insurgent groups in Burma have to survive on taxes levied on contraband from neighbouring countries destined for Burma's ubiquitous black-market, which is said to supply the country with 80 percent of its consumer goods. But taxes alone are not enough," noted one local observer living near the border. "And what's more, the rebels are running out of time now. The Burmese Government, once isolated on the international field, is slowly being accepted by more and more governments in the world, partly because it claims to be fighting the communists and suppressing narcotics trafficking in the Golden Triangle.

"But these is now more opium being grown in the Burmese sector of the Golden Triangle than ever before and the Burmese drive against the communists has show such little success that Rangoon seems to be losing rather than gaining ground."

Above the meeting hall at the rebel camp hung the NDF flag, red in colour and with three white stars, which stand for liberty, equality and social progress. Despite the urge for unity at the NDF congress, neutral observers doubt whether the front is any nearer these three goals now than it was when the NDF was set up in 1975 -- unless foreign governments drastically change their attitude to these forgotten insurgents, who have been fighting since the 40's and the 50's, without outside aid and with the world largely unaware even of their cause.

KPRAF ACTIVITIES FOR 30 JULY-5 AUGUST REPORTED

[Weekly roundup of KPRAF activities]

[Excerpts] During the past week, all reactionary Khmers -- lackeys of the imperialists and Beijing Chinese expansionists with the backing of the Thais, who allow them to use Thai territory as their refuge -- intruded into our territory to carry out their provocative and stealing activities almost 100 times with the support of Thai authorities who fired 105-mm and 120-mm cannons and H-12 rockets at a number of our villages along the border, almost 10 km inside our territory, in the sectors of Preah Vihear, Smat Deng, Pailin and hills 343, 199, 127 in Koh Kong Province.

On 24 July the area around Smat Deng in Pursat Province was hit five times; at times 100 rounds landed in the area. More than 100 rounds landed around the Preah Vihear temples on 27 July. At the same time, Thai L-19's and helicopters violated our airspace over Trapeang Kol in Preah Vihear and over Poipet, Yeang Dangkum and Koh Kong town. At sea, armed Thai vessels intruded 93 times in the vicinity of Kaoh Tang and Kaoh Kong islands. Despite the backing of Thai artillery fire, aircraft and armed vessels, all these activities in violation of our territory were soundly beaten by our army and people.

In Preah Vinhear Province, at a point 10 km north of Trapeang Kol, an enemy commando group intruding into the area was spotted by our highly vigilant revolutionary combatants who killed six of the enemy and seized five AK's and a radio set. On the same day, 24 July, a group of 17 bandits sneaked into the Yeang Dangkum sector in Battambang Province to steal the people's foodstuffs but were beaten by our regular forces in cooperation with the regional and militia forces who killed 13 of the bandits and seized 5 weapons.

On 23 July, two Pol Pot soldiers were killed on the spot by our forces who also seized two weapons and a map when they came to spy in Kantuot, Samraong District, Siem Reap-Oddar Meanchey Province. On 27 July, a group of about 20 enemy elements crossed the border from Thailand into the area west of Ta Sanh, and were intercepted by our border defense forces who killed 19 of them and seized 10 weapons including an 82-mm and a 60-mm mortar, and 8 AK's. A day later, on 28 July, three remnants of the Pol Pot forces snuck into Svay Chek commune in Battambang Province and were killed by our people and militia force even before they had time to carry out their robbery. We also seized three weapons including a B-40 rocket.

In Srei Snam commune, Srei Snam District, Siem Reap-Oddar Meanchey Province, 33 enemy elements who had mingled among our people surrendered to the authorities. In Preah Net Preah District, Battambang Province, 138 people who fled to join the enemy also surrendered. In Soeng commune, two awakened Pol Pot soldiers surrendered to our revolutionary authorities bringing two weapons with them. In (Rumani) commune, Rovieng District, Preah Vihear, the people led our army to recover 17 hidden enemy weapons.

PRASONG COMMENTS ON FOURTH CPT CONGRESS

BK091146 Bangkok MATICHON in Thai 9 Aug 82 pp 1, 12

[Excerpt] Commenting on a report that the Communist Party of Thailand [CPT] held the fourth party congress during March-April and appointed Prasit Taphianthong -- Comrade Pracha Thanyaphaibun -- the party general secretary to replace the deceased Comrade Mit Samanan, National Security Council Secretary General Squadron Leader Prason Sunsiri told MATICHON on 8 August that he had learned the same information from the news agency of the Voice of the People of Thailand.

Prasong said: "My understanding of the Fourth CPT Congress is that the CPT held regional meetings and each region conveyed its resolutions to a joint command of the CPT. The Fourth CPT Congress was not held in the manner of the third congress, which was attended by members of the regional committees and party members together in one place." According to Prasong, the way the CPT held separate regional meetings shows that it was unsuccessful in its attempt to convene the fourth congress, which had to be delayed for quite a long time because of acute internal disputes which led to divisions. Prasong said the divisions resulted from the government's conducting a correct policy against the CPT. The policy includes promotion of democracy and orders of the prime minister's office Nos 66/1980 and 65/1982.

AUSTRALIAN DEFENSE MINISTER CONCLUDES VISIT

[Excerpts] The defense minister, Mr Sinclair, has ended a visit to Thailand with a pledge to examine ways of increasing Australia's military aid with that country. Mr Sinclair said one of the proposals to be examined would be joint exercises with all three branches of Thailand's defense forces both in the Southeast Asian region and in Australia. To date, Australia's military aid to Thailand has been largely based on training programs for Thai servicemen in Australia.

Mr Sinclair also said Australia shared Thailand's concern about the presence of Vietnamese troops in neighboring Kampuchea and the spread of the Soviet Union's influence in the region. Radio Australia's Bangkok correspondent, Paul Lockyer, says Southeast Asian leaders have put pressure on Mr Sinclair to get the Australian Government to recognize the newly-formed Kampuchean resistance coalition. Mr Sinclair said he would relay these views to his government. At the same time, he stressed no decision had yet been made by the Australian Government concerning the issue.

Mr Sinclair, who has been accompanied by senior Australian defense officials, will visit Malaysia on the next leg of his tour. He has already visited Singapore and the Philippines.

BANGKOK POST INTERVIEWS GENERAL ATHIT

[Text] General Athit Kamlang-ek, almost certain to be made army commander-in-chief from October 1, has no political ambitions and will support Gen Prem Tinsulanon's continuation in office as prime minister, Gen Athit told the BANGKOK POST in an exclusive interview.

"Why should I try to be prime minister?" asked the assistant army commander-in-chief and commanding general of the First Army Region due to hold the most powerful military position. He said he supports General Prem continuing as premier after the present term under the Constitution ends with general elections next April 22. "There's no one better," he said.

Dismissing speculation that General Prem is "indecisive," General Athit said: "Look at the case of the 4,000 or so M-16's shipped to Singapore. He asked me to deal with the matter without any consideration about anyone close to him who could be involved." General Athit said he also respects Gen Saiyut Koetphon, supreme commander of the armed forces, and denied rumours of a struggle for power between them.

The above revelations of the thinking of Thailand's fastest rising military officer came amid the circulation of anonymous leaflets issued to discredit him. General Athit said there was no truth whatsoever to the allegation in the leaflets that he was building a political base for himself. He said he kept a copy in his pocket, had read it and was not concerned about it. "Nobody with intelligence is fooled. Anyone could write such things. I don't care for the cowards who dare not come out openly," he said.

Answering charges that he had been trying to get close to their majesties the king and queen, General Athit said: "It's my duty to be absolutely loyal to them. It is the duty of all Thais. I go to an audience when I am summoned." Concerning his visits to military units in various parts of the country, he said he followed the orders of the army commander-in-chief or of the defence minister. "It's part of my job," he said.

Asked about reports that he had been seeking favour among labour unions for political purposes, General Athit said: "I have never gone out to them. They have come to see me, to ask for my advice and my help. What I do mainly is to pacify them, to urge them to keep the peace. I usually tell them to go through the stages provided by law before going on strike. Besides, I don't do this alone. I invite representatives of the Labour Department and the police in to hear the discussion. After hearing all sides, I give a summation. I'm a coordinator."

Asked how the military regarded the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea [CGDK], General Athit said that the coalition was set up by the Khmer Leaders themselves. Thailand extended a welcome to Prince Norodom Sihanouk as president of a friendly neighbouring country as he passed through on his way to visit the Khmer people. "This does not mean that we are giving them arms to fight. We maintain our neutrality," Athit said. "Our duty is to watch over our national security and defend our territorial integrity at the border without any intervention. Our soldiers have been ordered to be careful, not to take sides, but if there should be an incursion they are to drive out the intruders, no matter which side they are on. Troops of any side violating the border will have to be pushed out."

General Athit said that Thailand "is a peaceloving country friendly to all, and we receive those who wish to come here with hospitality, like Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach." As for Prince Sihanouk, who is not exactly popular among certain sections of the Thai people, General Athit said: "Let's not consider personal feelings. We should regard him as the head of state of a Southeast Asian country."

As for military preparedness along the Thai-Khmer border, he said: "We have always maintained preparations for any eventuality, not just after the formation of the CGDK." He said the setting up of the coalition has not in any way altered the situation at the frontier. He said the strategic canal that has been dug "is not a boundary line. We dug it within our own territory. The defense forces are not stationed along the canal but along the frontier.

"Let's make this clear: The strategic canal does not mean a new boundary. Wherever there is no natural barrier like a watershed or Klong Luek, demarcation posts are set up to delineate the borderline. We have dug the strategic canal four to five kilometres within the border for various reasons. Most important, it provides water for agriculture on farms in the border area. Land on our side of the border is high while it is low on the Kampuchean side. As a result, when rain falls, the water runs down into Kampuchea. The canal provides a catchment area to hold enough water for farming.

"At the same time, being over 100 kilometres long both Prachin Buri and Chanthaburi, it serves as an obstacle to tanks and armoured vehicles of an invading force. It has been built by army engineers."

General Athit said that the forces at the border had been equipped with weapons and equipment, including those provided by the United States under the foreign military sales programme, with the capability to counter the Soviet armaments possessed by the Vietnamese forces in Kampuchea. "Besides, we have organised and trained villagers in self-defense units and for special operations which will act as auxiliaries for the military and perform such duties as harassment. We have had combined exercises involving civil servants, the police, the military and civilian volunteers in what to do in case of an attack. Cooperation in border defence is excellent. Pistols have been entrusted to some people but war weapons are stored in a manner which will enable immediate distribution in an emergency."

The black market at the border, reported Gen Athit, "is very much on the decline. This has made important areas of the border vacant, facilitating military movements and operations." The suppression of the black market "has also cut off supplies of food and other essential materials which would reach forces of the opposite side."

Asked about the so-called "Rangers," General Athit, who is in charge of them, explained: "Sua Pran (tiger-hunters) are volunteer troops engaged on a daily wage for regular service by the army. We us them for suppression operations against insurgents and terrorists. The most important characteristic of the Sua Pran is that they are people of the locality with knowledge of the terrain. This experience makes them pran who are supposed to be fully acquainted with the terrain. So we call them Taharn Pran (hunter-soldiers). We call them volunteers because they have not been conscripted.

"These Rangers are trained in military tactics which, combined with their expertise in terrain, make them effective in combatting communist guerrillas. We are using guerrillas to fight guerrillas. When we smash their strongholds and bases, the insurgents move around the jungles and towns as guerrillas. And we have to use guerrillas to defeat them."

There are Ranger units in all army regions and when General Athit visits them he wears a Ranger uniform without any rank (since the Rangers have no rank). He does so as assistant army commander-in-chief in charge of the Rangers "in the name of the army commander-in-chief."

Asked which part of Thailand's border is the most sensitive, General Athit said: "I don't like to classify any part of the border as most sensitive. But the area we are most concerned about is the eastern border. There are no natural barriers there. Actually, the situation has improved everywhere, including the south."

Asked about opinions expressed in certain quarters that the operations against the drug kingpin Khun Sa, or Chang Si Fu, created security problems along the northern border, General Athit said:

"Khun Sa deals in narcotics, has much wealth, has a large army and plenty of weapons. We had to use a big force to drive him and his army out of Thailand. This has resulted in a great reduction in the heroin trade which is beneficial not only to Thailand but to the rest of the world. It has not caused security problems along the northern border."

OFFICIALS DISCUSS KHUN SA FORCES' ACTIVITIES

[Text] Chiang Mai -- About 3,000 Shan rebels of drug kingpin Khun Sa, who took over the stronghold of another Burmese minority group on Doi Lang mountain range, about 3-5 kms from the Thai border, are building a new base there to replace Ban Hin Taek in a bid to resume heroin refining, Governor Chaiya Phunsiriwong confirmed yesterday.

In an interview with the NATION, the governor said leftist Muser hilltribesmen, led by Ei Bi were driven out of their stronghold on the mountain range late last month and are now wandering aimlessly, southwards along the Thai-Burmese border. Khun Sa's force, cooperating with another group of Muser hilltribesmen of Phya Ja-Er and a breakaway Kuomintang force led by Yang Wei Kang, also reduced to ashes about five Muser villages, including Ban Mai and Mok Cham, on Thai soil on grounds that the hilltribesmen were supporters of Ei Bi's force which is an ally of the Burmese Communist Party (BCP), according to the governor. He added that the raid of the Khun Sa's Shan United Army (SUA) on Muser villages had rendered about 100 families homeless.

The governor said that the attack by SUA on Muser villages had prompted Thai villagers along the Thai-Burmese border to feel insecure, although nobody was wounded or injured in the spate of fightings between the Burmese minority groups. Three platoons of Border Patrol Police troopers have been stationed at Ban Huai Sala to serve as the forward force to prevent the fighting of the Burmese minority groups from spilling over to the Thai side, said Chaiya who added that reinforcements would be rushed to assist the government forces if necessary.

Meanwhile in Bangkok, a senior anti-narcotics official told the NATION that Khun Sa had to launch the onslaught against Ei Bi group on Doi Lang mountain range as a result of the government's military offensives against his former stronghold at Ban Hin Taek in Chiang Rai in January. He said that the prime purpose of Khun Sa's assault on Doi Lang mountain range was to re-open his heroin processing plants as he had realized that the government would not let his forces to produce the narcotic on Thai soil.

Khun Sa's fighters initially joined hands with the breakaway Chinese Haw force led by Yang Wei Kang and later cooperated with Phya Ja-er who is at odds with Ei Bi in chasing the so-called "Red Musers" from their stronghold. He said that Yang Wei Kang broke away with the Kuomintang's 93rd Division of Gen Lieu at Ban Mae Sa-Long in Fang District here as Yang wanted to produce heroin for sales.

The three-party alliance also attacked a Wa minority group of Pong Kang Sua and seized a heroin processing plant on the mountain from the hilltribesmen, the sources said.

Khun Sa's force seized five heroin plants from Ei Bi's force which was assisted by another narcotics kingpin Lao Su and his followers during their fighting late last month. The battles between the two groups took place after the Burmese troops had attacked the Red Musers on Doi Lang early last month, according to Secretary General of the Office of Narcotics Control Board Pol Maj Gen Phao Sarasin.

Pol Maj Gen Phao said Khun Sa might plan to build his heroin processing plant at his new base as the old ones run by Ei Bi and Lao Su had been destroyed during the attacks by the Burmese forces. He said that there are now about 9-10 heroin processing plants on the Thai-Burmese border. Five of them are on Doi Lang, two in Mae Hong Son Province and the others at Piang Luang, south of Doi Lang.

PRC-JAPAN 'COLLUSION' CONTINUES DESPITE TEXTBOOKS

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, August 9 -- The Japanese Education Ministry cannot obliterate a lesson of history, says NHAN DAN in a commentary today.

The public in many countries is rightly angered by the Japanese Education Ministry's rewriting the history of Japanese militarism's war of aggression, the paper notes. It recalls that on the night of July 7, 1937, Japanese troops attacked Lu Gou Qiao, opening its large-scale invasion of China. However, in a recent history Japan claimed that Japanese troops had only entered China.

The paper notes that the Chinese people have not forgotten this blood debt which is intolerable in the eyes of all men and women of conscience in Japan. It adds that the Communist Party of Japan has condemned the Tokyo authorities' attempt to distort history. The paper goes on: Ironically enough, the reactionary forces in the Beijing leadership, while verbally protesting against the revival of Japanese (?militarism), are actually accelerating this revival by their deeds. However loudly they may protest, the Beijing authorities can deceive nobody, NHAN DAN points out.

The question is to prevent and defeat the collusion between Chinese expansionism and Japanese militarism. In their struggle against the common enemies, the Chinese and Japanese peoples are enjoying sympathy and support from the other Asian countries and from the whole progressive mankind, NHAN DAN concludes.

Following the opening speech of Nguyen Khanh Toan, representatives of the five delegations took the floor exchanging views on the present situation in Asia and in the world as a whole. They particularly underlined the expansionist and hegemonist policy of the reactionary circles in the Beijing leadership in collusion with U.S. imperialism and other international reactions as the cause of constant, serious threat to peace and security in Indochina and in Southeast Asia. They informed one another of their efforts in the struggle for peace and disarmament, against the arms race, and of the peace proposals concerning different regions, particularly Southeast Asia and other areas in Asia.

The participants warmly welcomed and fully supported the initiatives put forth in the communique of the sixth foreign ministerial conference of the three Indochinese countries aimed at making Southeast Asia a region of peace and stability. They expressed their desire to continue convening similar meetings, either bilateral or multi-lateral, of friendship associations to coordinate their efforts in the struggle against imperialism and Beijing expansionism, and for peace, friendship and cooperation among nations.

Communique Issued

["Communique on Meeting of Representatives of Friendship Associations of Laos, Kampuchea, Vietnam, Mongolia and Soviet Union" -- VNA headline]

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, August 9 -- The meeting of the representatives of friendship associations of Laos, Kampuchea, Vietnam, Mongolia and the Soviet Union was held in Hanoi on August 9, 1982 on the initiative of the Vietnam Committee for Solidarity and Friendship With Other Peoples and the Vietnam-U.S.S.R. Friendship Association.

The participants exchanged views on the present situation in Asia and in the world as a whole, and more particularly, analyzed the cause of the serious threat to peace and security in Indochina and the whole of Southeast Asia. They informed one another of their own countries' efforts in the struggle for peace and disarmament, against the arms race, and of their peace proposals concerning different regions, particularly Asia and Southeast Asia.

1. The participants note with joy that the loyal friendship, militant solidarity and cooperation among the fraternal socialist countries, as well as the special Vietnamese-Lao-Kampuchean relationship have seen new steps of development manifest in every aspect of life and further pervading the sentiments of the people in each country. The strength of justice and this friendship, solidarity and cooperation is an important factor contributing to peace in Southeast Asia and other parts of the world.

2. The participants unanimously note that the origin of the present tension in the world lies in the bellicose policy of U.S.-led imperialist forces in collusion with the reactionary forces in the Beijing leadership who are intensifying the arms race, threatening to provoke a nuclear war and inciting local reactionary forces to undermine the movement for national liberation and national independence, cause regional conflicts and splits between one nation and another.

The meeting highly values the contributions made by the socialist states and the peace forces in other countries to the cause of peace and disarmament in the world. On behalf of hundreds of millions of people in their own countries, the participants reaffirm their full support for the important initiatives on disarmament put forth by the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries. They welcome and support the peace programme for the 80's put forth at the 26th Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, particularly the recent statement of President L. Brezhnev on the Soviet Union's unilateral commitment not be the first to use nuclear weapons. They welcome and support the proposal of the Mongolian People's Republic for the signing of a convention on non-aggression and non-use of violence in the relations among countries in Asia and the Pacific, support the goodwill proposal of the Afghan Government for normalizing relations with its neighbours, and welcome the constructive foreign policy of India aimed at preserving peace in Asia and elsewhere in the world.

They support the struggles for national liberation and the development of the relations of friendship and cooperation with the socialist community, support the initiatives and efforts of the three Indochinese countries aimed at building Southeast Asia into a region of peace, stability and cooperation, and welcome and support all the peace initiatives of other countries with a view to ensuring common and regional peace.

The meeting resolutely demands that the imperialist forces and international reaction stop the arms race and their acts of aggression and sabotage against the movement of national liberation and national independence in Asia, Africa and Latin America. It vehemently condemns Israel and the United States and demands that they put an immediate end to their genocidal aggression against Palestine, Lebanon and other Arab nations, and withdraw their troops from Lebanon.

The participants unanimously hold that to mobilize large numbers of the population of all strata in each country to push up the struggle for peace, against the arms race, in support for the national liberation and independence movement, and against the counter-attacks by imperialism and international reaction is an important task at present of the friendship associations aimed at strengthening peace and friendship among nations.

3. The representatives of friendship associations are of the view that the collusion of U.S. imperialism and Chinese expansionism and hegemonism is an outstanding feature of the present world situation, and constitutes a permanent threat to world peace, especially a serious threat to peace and stability in Asia.

Today, people of all walks of life in Southeast Asia, including a number of persons in the ruling circles of the ASEAN countries, are aware that the expansionist and hegemonistic policy of Beijing authorities in collaboration with U.S. imperialism is the basic cause of tension and instability in the situation of Southeast Asia. Reality of past decades shows that the reactionary elements in the Beijing ruling circles have long nurtured their annexationist design on Vietnam and the whole Indochinese Peninsula aimed at paving the way for their expansion to the whole of Southeast Asia.

Though having sustained heavy defeats in their attempt to subjugate Laos, to use the genocidal regime of Pol Pot to turn Kampuchea into a springboard for expansion, and to invade Vietnam by a two-prong attack, one from the south and the other from the north, the reactionaries in the Beijing leadership, however, have not yet renounced their expansionist and hegemonist design. They continue to make provocations, thus straining the situation along the borders between Vietnam and China, between Laos and China, and between Kampuchea and Thailand, carry on a type of sabotage war in many fields against Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea while making active preparations for another war of aggression aimed at annexing the three Indochinese countries. They continue to undermine the trend toward dialogue, incite the ASEAN countries to oppose the Indochinese countries, encircle in an attempt to isolate Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea from the rest of the world. They continue to rally the reactionary forces, stooges of both China and the United STates in order to oppose the Indochinese revolution, nurture pro-Chinese reactionary forces in Southeast Asian countries as an instrument for pressure and subversion, thus causing permanent instability in this region. In Indochina, though they have caused a number of additional difficulties to the three peoples, they have failed to reverse the situation. The situation in Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea continues to develop favourably and more and more steadily. Though remaining complex, the Southeast Asian situation is evolving in favour of peace and national independence.

4. The representatives of friendship associations warmly welcome and fully support the measures put forth in the communique of the sixth conference of the foreign ministers of Laos, Kampuchea and Vietnam aimed at promoting peace and stability in Southeast Asia, considering them to be very important, fair and reasonable proposals dealing with many practical relationships and demonstrating the consistent policy of peace, friendship and cooperation and the sincerity and good will of the three Indochinese countries.

The meeting acclaims the three Indochinese peoples' attitude of constantly treasuring their time-honoured friendship and cooperation with the Chinese people and their stand for settling problems among these countries through peaceful negotiations. It welcomes the proposal of the three Indochinese countries for signing bilateral or multilateral treaties of peaceful co-existence with China as well as Vietnam's proposal for a resumption of the Sino-Vietnam talks.

The meeting warmly welcomes and regards as a positive step aimed at improving the situation along the border between Kampuchea and Thailand the decision of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam to withdraw part of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea and the implementation of this decision in last July and the proposal of the People's Republic of Kampuchea to establish a security zone along the Kampuchean-Thai border. It warmly welcomes the well-meaning initiative of the three Indochinese countries to convene an international conference on Southeast Asia with the participation of the Indochinese and ASEAN countries, Burma, the Soviet Union, China, the United States, Britain, France, India and the U.N. secretary general in his personal capacity.

The meeting firmly demands that the United Nations abide by the charter of this largest international organization by expelling the genocidal Pol Pot clique or any disguised Pol Pot junta from the United Nations and hand over Kampuchea's seat at this organization to the People's Republic of Kampuchea, the only genuine and legal representative of the Kampuchean people.

The representatives of friendship associations sternly denounce the farce of forming the so-called Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea under the pressure and direction of Beijing in connivance with U.S. imperialism and the reactionary forces in the ASEAN ruling circles, as a move to hide the ugly face of Pol Pot with a view to interfering in the internal affairs of Kampuchea, preventing the process of revival of the Kampuchean people, and continuing to strain the Southeast Asian situation.

The meeting highly appreciates the recent visit to ASEAN countries and Burma by Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam. The visit once again demonstrated the good will of the Vietnamese people as well as the other Indochinese peoples to promote the trend toward dialogue and enhance cooperation among nations in the interests of peace and stability in this region.

5. The representatives of friendship associations express their full support for the proposals of the Soviet Union, Mongolia, Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea aimed at turning Asia into a region of peace, security and cooperation. They express their solidarity with the Vietnamese, Lao and Kampuchean peoples now struggling against the aggressive and interventionist plots and manoeuvres of Beijing expansionism and hegemonism.

The meeting deems it necessary to further step up the mass movement in each country to expose the wicked plots and acts of the Chinese expansionists and hegemonists in collusion with U.S. imperialism and other reactionary forces against the Indochinese countries and other countries in Southeast Asia. It supports the cause of national construction and defence of each Indochinese country, and backs the growing trend toward dialogue which actively contributes to peace, security and cooperation in Southeast Asia and elsewhere in the world.

The representatives of friendship associations are very pleased with the results of this meeting and express their desire to hold similar meetings of friendship associations, bilaterally or multilaterally, aimed at coordinating their actions in the struggle against imperialism and Chinese expansionism and hegemonism, for peace, friendship and cooperation among nations.

MOKHTAR DELIVERS SPEECH ON ASEAN ANNIVERSARY

BK081331 Jakarta Domestic Service in Indonesian 1200 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Summary] Respectful Radio Republic Indonesia listeners, brothers and sisters:

On 8 August 1982, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, better known as ASEAN, will be exactly 15 years old. Despite its young age, ASEAN has made dynamic progress in all fields, especially in the economic field with the national growth of each ASEAN member country averaging between 6 and 8 percent per year -- one of the highest rates considering the current world situation which is plagued by recession and other problems that hinder growth.

"The rapid progress in all these fields was made possible because of political stability in the ASEAN region, a factor for further growth and development in each ASEAN member country.

"ASEAN, which was founded on the Bangkok Declaration, has been able to preserve its survival up to now and I am also confident it will be able to preserve it in the future because this association was established by its member countries on their own initiative without encouragement or interference by other countries." Based on past experience, intervention by big powers in this region results in confrontation and instability so that the countries in this region cannot concentrate on the national development so urgently needed by the people of each country.

"ASEAN countries have succeeded in establishing regional cooperation under a concept and system based on consultation and consensus, entirely different from existing regional organizations. With this system of consultation and consensus, ASEAN member countries have succeeded in establishing cooperation and consult each other in facing common problems."

Respectful brothers and sisters:

The commitments of the ASEAN countries to further the welfare of the people and stability in this region have strengthened ASEAN solidarity and promoted this association's position in international forums as a strong, dynamic and trusted regional organization, with its views on regional and international problems recognized or listened to by the international community.

"ASEAN consistently upholds its concept of a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality, or ZOPFAN, which is inspired by UN principles and the 10 Bandung principles, aimed at unifying a peaceful, free and neutral Southeast Asia which can ensure the independence and sovereignty of all countries in this region free from interference by foreign powers.

"This ASEAN position is reflected in its efforts toward a political solution of the Kampuchean problem as voiced by ASEAN in international forums, especially in the United Nations, nonaligned meetings and other forums which resolutely demand the withdrawal of foreign troops from Kampuchean territory to enable the Kampuchean people to determine their own government in a free and private way without pressure or force."

ASEAN cooperation in the field of economy, especially after the first ASEAN summit meeting in Bali in 1976 which adopted an ASEAN agreement on friendship and cooperation, has been making encouraging achievements, especially after ASEAN economic ministers approved a new system of economic cooperation.

"Intra-ASEAN trade has further developed, especially in the last few years. In the context of trade expansion and liberalization under the preferential trade arrangement, some 8,563 kinds of goods have been included in the preferential arrangement with a tariff cut of between 20 and 25 percent.

"In the field of industry, preparations have been made, especially in Indonesia, which has completed 46.4 percent of the construction of the urea fertilizer plant in Acem which is expected to be fully completed by the end of 1983 or early 1984. Malaysia, which also gets a urea fertilizer plant project, plans to complete the construction of the project by 1985. The Philippines is to construct a copper plant and Thailand a soda ash plant."

In the private sector, an agreement has been reached to develop complementary industry among ASEAN countries, including the motor vehicle industry which is in the process of being developed. Complementary industry constitutes one example of the important progress in ASEAN economic and industrial cooperation, which could speed up the pace of industrial development in the ASEAN region, allowing the private sector to play a major role. Agreements have also been reached in other areas, such as in the financial and banking sector, energy, food, agriculture, forestry and so forth.

Culture and information constitute an aspect of cooperation which is no less important in strengthening ASEAN solidarity and mutual understanding between its peoples. ASEAN countries have different backgrounds in their culture, language and history and this requires efforts encouraging common views. "Various projects and activities in the field of culture and information have been promoted, especially in the last few years, during which 21 projects have been completed with 45 kinds of activities."

Progress by ASEAN in various fields has led ASEAN to be considered as one of fastest growing regions among developing countries. "In order to stimulate this growth, ASEAN needs to maintain cooperation with industrialized countries and it is in this context that talks have been held with friendly countries. ASEAN hopes to expand the marketing of its products, capital investment, development aid and the transfer of capital and technology with these countries."

Although ASEAN countries have achieved relatively encouraging economic growth, ASEAN continues to be concerned about the worsening international situation, especially the continuing recession in industrialized countries with no prospect for speedy recovery. "ASEAN also considers serious the continuing trend toward protectionism and continues to strive through existing international forums to ensure free trade in world markets.

"The outbreak of conflicts in various parts of the world, growing protectionism, inflation, high interest rates and high unemployment indicate the emergency of a critical situation in the international political and economic fields. This trend, if allowed to continue, will hinder ASEAN's economic growth and the prospect for improvement of the global economy. More than that, it will weaken the resilience of the system adopted by the Free World countries in general."

Respectful brothers and sisters: That briefly summarizes the progress made by ASEAN during the past 15 years, which has brought ASEAN to its present position in the international community and which reflects the aspirations of ASEAN governments and peoples to improve their material and spiritual life in this region.

Our region in Southeast Asia no longer constitutes an arena for exploitation or competition between superpowers. "The development that has taken place inside and outside the Southeast Asian region and the crises that have broken out in nearly all parts of the world have strengthened ASEAN's determination to promote ASEAN regional cooperation further in a more successful and useful way."

In economic cooperation, we can say with pride that we have achieved progress in fostering stronger ties among ASEAN member countries. Likewise, in the field of social cooperation, the main aim is to create a more advanced, prosperous and peaceful ASEAN. Social cooperation will involve social development with emphasis on the welfare of villagers and low-income groups.

Cooperation in the field of culture and information, now being developed, involves various fields such as linguistics, literature, astrology, cinema, people's arts, youth and women's affairs and so forth. Cooperation in these two fields is especially expected to be further expanded by encouraging public involvement in ASEAN activities which could become an important factor toward a common orientation to realize ASEAN's aspirations and objectives.

In confronting political challenges in this region, ASEAN is fostering its cooperation to adopt a single stand in order to: 1) Prevent conflict from spreading into the ASEAN region; 2) Prevent the superpowers from involving themselves in the conflict which could undermine the stability in the region; 3) Prevent the Sino-Soviet conflict from spilling over into the ASEAN region; 4) Defend the basic principles of respecting the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of Southeast Asian countries and transform them into a region based on the ZOPFAN concept.

"In facing the coming years, especially the possibility of threats to stability and peace in the Southeast Asian region and the world economic recession, ASEAN member countries need to strengthen their solidarity to remain united and their conviction that cohesion with ASEAN is absolutely necessary for its survival."

In conclusion, I wish to reiterate that ASEAN will continue expanding its activities within and outside the organization for the attainment of the objectives we have decided together.

"I am very happy that, through its 15 years of existence, ASEAN has become increasingly familiar to the public, especially the Indonesian public, through activities popularizing ASEAN. What we have desired is that ASEAN would not be a means of cooperation between governments alone, but would grow into a wealthy instrument of cooperation between peoples of ASEAN member countries to achieve a common success. Thank you."

DOCUMENTS SIGNED WITH PNG ON BORDER ISSUES

[Text] Jakarta, Aug. 7 (ANTARA) -- Indonesia and Papua New Guinea [PNG] signed four important documents at the PNG Foreign Office in Port Moresby on Aug 4.

The documents were three memoranda of understanding, respectively on the formation of a common border commission, the installation and operation of a high frequency radio network between Daru and Merauke for border communication between the two countries, and research and demarcation of the border area between the two nations; and special arrangements for traditional border crossing.

Signing for Indonesia was Foreign Office Secretary General Sudharmono and his PNG counterpart P. Matane acted on behalf of his government.

The signing of the documents constituted the result of a meeting in Malang (PNG) 18-21 November 1981 between delegations of the two countries for the setting up of a common border commission and for the discussion of other subjects connected with the border of the two nations.

Other matters discussed covered preparations for the holding of a common border commission meeting in Bali 24-27 August. They hoped the meeting would contribute to the completion of new phases in the arrangement of total development of the border area.

MALAYSIA

NEED FOR INTERNAL SECURITY ACT JUSTIFIED

[Text] Seven lawyers from the International Federation of Civil Rights in Paris, the Civil Liberties Union of Japan and the Legal Action Group of the United States, who are here to study and make representations on the Internal Security Act [ISA] and other such legislations, yesterday met the Malaysian prime minister, the deputy prime minister and the attorney general. They also visited the detention center, talked to several detainees and were also shown the guns, grenades, terrorist literature and press clippings on the works of the communist terrorists in the last 30 years.

The point has been clearly made. As far as the country's security laws are concerned, Malaysia has nothing to hide and neither is it prepared to be apologetic to foreigners who have no right to criticize it in the first place. The seven lawyers were told that in the last 30 years, 2,045 policemen and soldiers and 2,543 civilians were killed. Since 1975, 365 Malaysians have lost their arms, legs and eyes because of the activities of the terrorists. It is only quite natural for the Malaysian prime minister, Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir Mohamed, to remark that it was indeed strange for the civil rights lawyers to criticize the laws that were clearly designed to prevent such death and suffering but at the same time they have not expressed their sympathy to the wives, children and parents who were the real victims of such terrorist actions.

The United States and Britain have long abolished the death penalty, but nations in this region have not done so. Malaysia has very valid reasons for maintaining this principle and the background of this can be found in its cultural history and the death penalty's deterrent value. But the Malaysian judicial system treats offenses carrying the death penalty very seriously with various levels of judicial appeals for those tried under these laws. There is a pardons board which reviews compulsorily all cases where the death sentence has been passed. And the final arbiter is his majesty the king. It is thus perfectly understandable that the Malaysian attorney general, Tan Sri Abu Thalib Othman, should express his irritation at lawyers from other nations who passed moral judgment on our judicial system -- a system that has been repeatedly endorsed by the Malaysian electorates in all the nation's previous general elections.

The fact that these seven lawyers have learnt that even under the Internal Security Act accused is innocent until the prosecution is able to convince the judge that he is guilty, showed the ignorance and naivete under which such civil rights organizations operate.

The Malaysian Government's stand on the Internal Security Act and the essential security cases regulations is that it is aware that it is harsh and that it is deliberately intended that it be so. It is intended to ensure that those who are indeed guilty and those who have a background of terroristic actions should be made to pay for their actions. As Dr Mahathir had stated, the Malaysian Government does not enjoy taking the life of a person, but if it has to be done to protect society and as a punishment for certain specified offenses, then it has to be done. Such laws are not just necessary but they have been in fact proven vital in the past in defeating the communist insurrection of 1948-60, the threat from Sukarno's confrontation policy and the urban guerrilla phenomenon of the mid 1970's. The end result has been that today there is a very little violent crime in Malaysia because of the ISA. The layman's or the ordinary Malaysian's view has been that in a peaceful society no one has any reason to carry an illegal firearm and that in case in possession of one, then he should face the consequences.

Finally, it must be remembered that we do have civil rights laws written in our constitution and these laws are respected and honored by the government and the police. Malaysians do not need foreigners to tell them how to protect and secure the freedom that they enjoy.

MARCOS, FRASER TALK ON TRADE, SECURITY 6 AUG

HK070041 Manila Domestic Service in English 2300 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Text] President Marcos and Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser held hour-long talks last night on trade, security and the international economy. The talks took place immediately after Mr Fraser planed in from China. The meeting was described as fruitful.

The two leaders, assisted by their top advisers, expressed their hope for an early recovery from the recession which has affected international trade and the world economy. They reaffirmed their desire for a relaxation of protectionist policies and the lifting of trade barriers and agreed to study measures to ease the imbalance in bilateral trade, which in the past few years has resulted in an average deficit to the Philippines of about $100 million.

Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile, who has just returned from Samar, briefed the visitors on the situation in the area, where an Australian integrated rural development project is underway, and where fears have been expressed over the safety of Australian workers due to reports of communist dissident activities. Minister Enrile said the project site was safe and not within the area of conflict. He also said on-site investigation has clearly disproved reports of an alleged massacre in one of the Samar towns, which was played up in the foreign press, including a newspaper in Australia, and which may have prompted some alarm.

Australian Ambassador Richard Woolcott said the project has not been suspended, contrary to reports, and that it was merely undergoing the normal mid-year term review. He added that there was no prospect that it would not continue.

President Marcos and Prime Minister Fraser also discussed overall developments in the Asian region, including those in Kampuchea as well as in China, where Mr Fraser had paid a visit before coming to Manila.

Prime Minister Fraser and his party will leave for New Zealand early Sunday morning before returning to Canberra. He was originally scheduled to stay here only for a 2-hour stopover, but he decided to extend his visit to tomorrow morning.

MARCOS BLASTS TERRORIST PLOT, STRIKE PLAN

[Excerpts] President Marcos has disclosed a rebel oppositionist plot to stage a nationwide strike accompanied by terrorist bombings and killings. The president said the plot, codenamed "Operation Skylark," will be held some time next month to coincide with his birthday on September 11 or with his visit to the United States. The president made the disclosure during the joint anniversary celebration of the PC [Philippine Constabulary] and the Integrated National Police yesterday. The chief executive immediately ordered the military to confirm the intelligence reports within a few days. And he strongly warned the plotters that if the reports are true, the full force of the law will be taken against them, including preemptive action.

[Begin Marcos recording] We have just received intelligence reports to the effect that there is a plan for a nationwide strike, which shall be accompanied by assassinations and bombings, perhaps on September 1, perhaps on September 11, perhaps it's during my visit to the United States. If subsequent intelligence reports confirm this conspiracy and this plot, and I will ask intelligence to submit the confirmation within the next several days, then we will have to take preemptive action. I merely want all these people who are planning this -- and I understand that some of my friends in the political opposition are part of this conspiracy -- I want them to know the seriousness and the gravity of this plot that they are planning.

I want them to know that some of their names have been included in the listing. I understand that labor leaders are also included. I understand that some of my friends in the MNLF are also included. I understand also that some of the intellectuals or pseudo-intellectuals are included. The lists are being finalized. Whatever happens, rest assured that that list will be kept intact, and we will hold them responsible for whatever happens in this nationwide strike and nationwide bombings, and nationwide assassinations. You cannot kill all of us. There will be some who will be left to finish you. [end recording]

At the same time, President Marcos ordered the immediate formation of a secret group to stop holdups and robberies in jeepneys and buses in Metro Manila.

In the same speech the chief executive also denounced the efforts of certain quarters to downgrade the military. He cited charges of massacres thrown against the military that were later found false and baseless. The chief executive said the elements downgrading the military were tools of foreign powers, in the same way that some oppositionists have allowed themselves to be used to smear the image of the country. The president cited as a case in point former Senator Jose Diokno, who appeared in a British Broadcasting Corporation documentary that gave a distorted picture of the situation in the Philippines. The president said he saw the move as politically motivated.

Opposition, Labor, MNLF Blamed

[Text] President Marcos warned yesterday of a plot by subversives, certain elements in the political opposition, labor leaders, and leaders of the Moro National Liberation Front to hold a nationwide strike sometime next month. The strike plan, code-named "Operation Skylark," also calls for terrorist bombings and assassination attempts against high government officials and prominent personalities in the country, he said.

The president sounded the warning in a speech at the joint celebration of the 81st Philippine Constabulary and 7th Integrated National Police anniversaries at Camp Bagong Diwa, Bicutan, Taguig, Metro Manila, headquarters of the constabularly brigade.

The president said he had received intelligence reports indicating the nationwide strike will be carried out on Sept 1, Sept 11, or during his state visit to the United States.

The intelligence community, he said, has identified some of the leaders of the plot. He said they included some leaders of the political opposition, labor groups, the MNLF, and some intellectuals or pseudo-intellectuals. The president asked these groups to realize the seriousness and gravity of their plot.

The president, sources said, was obviously referring to a plot hatched on April 18 during a meeting in Jampiras, Sabah, which was attended by MNLF leaders headed by Melhan Alam, MNLF chief of staff, and Dr. Tham Manjoorsa, MNLF secretary general, Nhur Khan and Muslimin Sema.

Also in the Jampiras meeting were four leaders of the Communist New People's Army, including a rebel priest. The plotters allegedly started carrying out "Skylark" last May with targets in Zamboanga City, Basilan, Davao, and Metro Manila.

The president said he has asked military intelligence to confirm the report in the next few days. If the report is confirmed, the president said: "We will then have to take preemptive actions."

The president said the government will hold the plotters responsible "for whatever happens in this nationwide strike, nationwide bombings, and assassinations." The president stressed his disclosure of the plan was intended as "fair warning" to the "deluded and innocent."

"I want them to know the seriousness and gravity of this plot they are planning. You cannot kill all of us. There will be some who will be left to finish you," he said.

The chief executive said the plot might be intended to disrupt his coming visit to the U.S. and win the support of the forthcoming Islamic Conference in Nigeria.

The President also believed there is "an orchestrated attempt to downgrade the military" by certain elements who, he said, have allowed themselves to be used as tools by a foreign power. He cited the charges of a massacre in Somoroy, Northern Samar and alleged military abuses in Bicol, Mountain Province, and southern Leyte. "It is very obvious," the president said, "that there is an orchestrated effort to undermine the military, and I can tell you that we are not going to take this lying down and sitting down." "Yes," he added, "we are going to investigate all these things they want us to investigate, but we are not going to stop there." He gave assurances that the government will use "the legitimate weapons of the law."

The president also lashed out at the British Broadcasting Corp. (BBC) television network. He said the BBC came to him asking for assistance, with the assurance that they would broadcast the accomplishments of the new society. "Instead," the president said, "They (BBC) went over to the opposition leader, former Senator Jose W. Diokno, and also to Horacio Morales and Fr. Conrado Balweg, who was pictured in army fatique uniform." "Isn't it a shame to besmear the name and honor of our country and allowing oneself to be utilized as an instrument by an outsider to hurt his fellow countrymen?" the president asked.

DEFENSE MINISTER RULES OUT MILITARY SUCCESSION

OW070811 Hong Kong AFP in English 0628 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] Manila, Aug. 7 (AFP) -- Philippine Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile dismissed the possibility of a military takeover in the country and stated categorically that he was "not interested" in succeeding President Ferdinand Marcos in his post.

Mr Enrile discounted prospects of a military regime "in the near or remote future," the English language DAILY EXPRESS reported today. He added that an attempted military takeover would mean "full-scale civil war." The report said the defense minister favored a collective leadership which, he said, was ideal for the country whose people "will not accept a strongman rule."

Mr Enrile also indicated he was "definitely not interested" in the country's presidency when asked if he was a possible successor. The minister stated his position following widespread speculation that he and First Lady Imelda Marcos were among the possible successors to the presidency, held by Mr Marcos for the past 16 years.

Those entertaining ideas of a military takeover, continued Mr Enrile, "should have their heads examined," since the lives of many people would be involved before they military could succeed. He added that the Filipino political psyche as well as the country's history would not allow such a thing to happen. Mr Enrile said the military should always be subordinated to the civilian government and neither should it be a political organization.

MARCOS STRESSES PARTY, NOT INDIVIDUAL RULE

[Text] President Marcos says party rule, not the rule of one man, applies in the country's government. The president reiterated the government's basic framework of parlimentary rule before a Philippine delegation about to leave for a meeting of the International Law Association in Montreal, Canada. The chief executive said there can be no single authority in our form of government because decisions are made by the party in power. The president explained that the national security code does not give additional powers to the president, since it is merely a compilation of existing decrees. Also, the chief executive spoke of the court actions that are always available to all who feel that their rights are being infringed. Thus, President Marcos said, talk about a one-man rule in the Philippines and violations of human rights cannot be further from the truth. The president declared that the government by its policy and by its democratic framework will always be committed to the cause of human rights, and will even bend backwards to preserve them if the government has to.

The president also warned the public again against the efforts of dissidents to use unsuspecting groups as instruments to gain their political ends. The chief executive said the public should never allow itself to be used as a tool to destroy the country's democratic system.

PRO-NPA GROUPS WARNED ON ANTIMILITARY CAMPAIGN

[Text] President Marcos has warned that the Communist Party of the Philippines is making use of concerned groups as instruments to prevent the execution of justice. Mr Marcos issued his warning as he noted the orchestrated propaganda campaign of the New People's Army against ongoing action by the military.

Talking to newsmen at Malacanang, the president cited the report by a group of concerned citizens in Bicol on the operation of military units against the NPA in the region. The chief executive said the report of the military operation was written and released while the battalions were just about to implement their mission. To underscore the obvious intent, the president said the report was written way before the actual start of the military operation. This was done to protect the NPA from the onslaught of the operational battalions that were assigned to Bicol, Mr Marcos told newsmen. He expressed concern that the ones who signed the report are either deliberately protecting the NPA or are being used as instruments by the Communist Party of the Philippines, and this is very serious, because it shows a national design, President Marcos added.

The president said it is worse that some provincial newspapers are spreading the NPA propaganda campaign, saying that various stories are beginning to sound like the subversive news spread in 1972.

Intelligence Reports on Campaign

HK100137 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 9 Aug 82 pp 1, 9

[Text] Analysts in the intelligence community believe subversive elements are mounting a sustained campaign to discredit the armed forces (AFP), sources said yesterday.

The subversives have been spreading the propaganda line that the military will grab political power in case of a leadership vacuum in the government. The latest intelligence reports indicate that the leftist underground's new propaganda offensive is to sow confusion over the question of presidential succession.

The analysts said the subversives are trying to picture the military as "volatile and power-hungry." The obvious intention, the sources said, is to put to doubt "the AFP's role as guardian of law and order -- and consequently, peaceful political continuity -- and picture the men in uniform in a contrary posture so that the subversives themselves can take over and fill the power vacuum.

This propaganda line, according to intelligence experts, appeared to have been taken up by a number of opposition personalities who, in recent months, have questioned the intentions of the military with regards to presidential succession. Sources recalled that when President Marcos was on a state visit to Saudi Arabia, the opposition in the Batasan raised an uproar over a memorandum left behind by the president.

The memorandum read: "In connection with my coming trip to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, I wish to inform you that I am depositing with Gen. Fabian C. Ver, armed forces chief of staff, certain instructions, appointments and removals from office in the government which will be released if anything untoward happens to our party. I enjoin you to implement the instructions embodied therein which are, I believe, to the best of interest of our country. I hope you will not hesitate to abide by them if the circumstances so warrant. However, I leave the country in good hands and I pray that our trip will attain the peace and progress that we hope for our beloved country."

The opposition claimed the memorandum was paving the way for a military takeover in the event anything happened to the president. What was conveniently ignored, the intelligence analysts said, was that the presidential memorandum was addressed to Prime Minister Cesar E. A. Virata, Batasan Speaker Querube Makalintal, the members of the Executive Committee, members of the cabinet, all members of the Batasan, and members of the Kilusang Bagong Lipunan.

This showed, according to the intelligence men, that the instructions were merely deposited with General Ver, but were intended to be implemented by the civilian authority, including the Batasan. The nature and language of the memorandum asserted in clear unmistakable terms civilian supremacy over the military, they said.

Some opposition personalities, the experts observed, have revived the issue by suggesting certain constitutional amendments demanding certain presidential actions that would, according to them, ensure orderly transition of power and avoid any bloodshed that may be caused by power rivalry, in which the military would supposedly be a key participant. The intelligence experts said this showed a renewed propaganda campaign to malign the armed forces and sow seeds of intrigue to assail the AFP's mandated role as an instrument of civilian authority to ensure the smooth and peaceful transition of power in accordance with the constitution.

In accordance with the constitution, the experts said, the Executive Committee headed by the prime minister will take over in an interim capacity in the event of permanent disability, death, removal from office, or resignation of the president until a new president is elected. If the vacancy in the presidency occurs earlier than 18 months before the expiration of his term, the Batasan shall, within 30 days of the vacancy, call a special election to be held not earlier than 45 days nor later than 60 days.

Army To Investigate

[Text] Gen. Fabian C. Ver, armed forces (AFP) chief of staff, formed a six-man team yesterday to investigate alleged abuses or atrocities committed by military personnel against civilians in the Bicol region.

After President Marcos had cited reports of alleged military abuses, Ver created the team headed by Lt. Col. Cresenciano C. Santiago of the AFP Judge Advocate General's Office and ordered it to leave immediately for Bicol for the inquiry. Last Sunday, Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile also directed Ver to look into reported atrocities.

Former Senator Tecla San Andres-Ziga, chairman of the Bicol Concerned Citizens Alliance (BCCA), had written Enrile urging an investigation of alleged abuses committed by some military personnel in the region.

The BCCA resolution, which Ziga sent to Enrile listed the alleged abuses, including names of victims and military personnel, the dates and places where these happened.

The alleged atrocities ranged from illegal searches of persons and houses to illegal arrest and detention of civilians, salvaging (summary execution), maltreatment and torture, burning of houses, rape, kidnaping massacre in the provinces of Camarines Norte, Camarines Sur, Albay and Sorsogon.

The BCCA resolution demanded "demilitarization" of the Bicol region where it said there are nine battalions of soldiers. The BCCA attributed what it called "escalation of military atrocities" to the presence of too many military troopers.

Ver told Santiago: "It has been my policy not to condone abusive soldiers and there will be no compromise in this." The inquiry will identify the soldiers involved, document every reported incident enumerated by Ziga and determine any criminal or disciplinary action taken or to be taken in each case. Ver also directed the team to list whatever properties were taken, damaged or destroyed by the soldiers, whether for warranted or unwarranted cause.

On the BCCA's demand for the pull-out of the military from the area, Enrile said the troops were needed there to counteract a terrorist campaign by dissidents which has continued to threaten the security and welfare of the populace.

Brig. Gen. Andres Ramos, commander of Region IV (Quezon Bicol zone), said records in his office show there were only two incidents where the military were involved. The first, he said, was the shooting incident at Mabilo I, Labo, Camarines Norte, on July 23 which resulted in the death of five civilians, namely, Barangay Captain Eduardo Bayani, Barangay Councilmen Dionisio Villaluz and Manolo Lausin, Joey Cama and Carlito Manago. Elements of the 45th Infantry Battalion (IB), 5th Infantry Division (Army), were involved in the shooting.

The Camarines Norte Philippines Constabulary (PC) investigated the case and filed multiple murder charges on June 28 against PFC. Edwin Carmen, PFC. Leo Amulong, PFC. Oscar Sibunga, Peter Doe, Richard Doe and John Doe, all members of "B" Company, 45th IB. Three soldiers were discharged from the service and detained at the provincial jail.

The second incident, Ramos said, was the shooting to death of Jaime Magana of Daet, Camarines Norte, by Sgt. Jose Abalos of the 60th PC battalion. Abalos had been charged in court and is now under technical arrest.

[Editorial: "Silence?"]

[Text] The report said the Bicol Concerned Citizens Alliance headed by ex-Sen. Tecla San Andres-Ziga had adopted a resolution seeking assistance in the investigation of cases of atrocities committed by the military in the Bicol region. The resolution, dated May 30, cited numerous abuses -- illegal searches, illegal arrests and detention of civilians, summary executions, torture, kidnaping, and massacre.

These are grievous charges which deserve painstaking investigation by high authorities.

The report did not mention if the local civilian officials in the Bicol region had taken the initiative of appraising Manila of the abuses or what steps they had taken. For all we know the local officials had done something about the charges. Or it is possible that the petition was exaggerated.

Nonetheless, in case an abuse has been committed and no response to the complaint has been elicited from the proper government agency, it is the moral duty, at least, of the mayor or the provincial governor to help facilitate investigation and prosecution. The duty becomes pressing if many abuses are committed. There is a moral and political failure if the duty is left to a civic or opposition group since primary responsibility devolves on the elected officials.

What seems to have happened in Bicol is similar to the report coming from Bontoc, where it was left to barangay officials and village elders to complain to high authorities about the widespread depredations committed by an army group. What happened to higher local civilian authorities? Why did they not complain on behalf of the barangays? Their silence is deafening. In the absence of a good excuse, silence in such cases is definitely a disservice to the constituents.

GENERAL CITED ON IMPROVEMENT IN SAMAR SITUATION

[By Monica Feria]

[Excerpt] Manila, Aug 8 (AFP) -- The Philippine Armed Forces are fighting an intense battle against communist insurgents in the central Philippine island of Samar, one of the most depressed regions of the country. Just a year and a half ago, Samar Island had the worst communist insurgency problem in the country.

The chief of the 10,000-strong Eastern Unified Command, Gen Salvador Mison, said that, at that time, members of the so-called New Peoples Army (NPA) freely roamed the mountainous interior of the 13,578 sq km island. They raided municipalities, disarmed police forces and staged public antigovernment lectures.

Military reports today say they have cut down the NPA's armed strength and mass support by more than half and military attention has more and more shifted to the Quezon-Bicol region at the southern tip of Luzon Island. But Gen Mison, a graduate of the Philippine Military Academy, said the more important socio-economic battle to win the "hearts and minds" of the people continued in the eastern island which bore the deep scars of natural calamities and government neglect over the past decades.

In an official report, Gen Mison said that in barely a year and seven months they had cut the NPA's armed strength from 6,000 to 3,142 and cut down their estimated mass base support from 34,000 to 7,000. Official reports said some 372 NPA guerrillas had been killed at the cost of about 94 soldiers over the same period.

The general said the Communist Party of the Philippines reorganized under Maoist lines in 1968 had in 1972 chosen this backward island as a potential training base. Its rugged terrain, obvious lack of roads and bridges, and thick vegetation has made it ideal for guerrilla activity. The weather also helps them, the general said. "Here we have only two seasons, the wet and the very wet," and Samar, the country's eastern side-door, bears the brunt of some 20 Pacific typhoons a year. The difficult communications and terrain make the army's job more difficult and helicopter patrols are very expensive.

The eastern military command's blitz effort to hold the insurgency movement at bay has attracted increasing criticism from religious and human rights groups who charged that civilians had been increasingly dislocated and in some cases massacred in the crossfire of antidissident offensives.

Increasing lawlessness in the strife-torn island was brought into focus by the massacre last year of some 49 men, women and children in the northern interior village of Sag-od. The perpetrators of this massacre have yet to be identified.

OFFICIAL FLEXIBLE ON RESUMING AID TO VIETNAM

OW101441 Tokyo KYODO in English 1114 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 10, KYODO -- A ranking Foreign Ministry official Tuesday showed a flexible attitude toward resumption of economic aid to Vietnam, suspended after Vietnamese forces stormed into Kampuchea four years ago. Akitane Kiuchi, head of the ministry's Asian Affairs Bureau, told an Upper House committee: "We are not necessarily going to insist on complete withdrawal (of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea)."

The Japanese Government had so far maintained that Hanoi should respond seriously to calls for talks to settle the Kampuchean issue as a condition for resumption of Japanese economic aid.

IRAN REPAYS PART OF PETROCHEMICAL PROJECT DEBT

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 11, KYODO -- Mitsui and Co. said Wednesday Iran has repaid a total of yen 130 million in capital and interests, due on Tuesday, to Japanese financial institutions in relation to a joint petrochemical complex project in southern Iran. The payment with interest added comprised a government yen loan, a direct loan extended by major Japanese city banks and a Mitsui and Co.'s deferred payment credit.

The second repayment for the loans, following the first one of yen 12.5 billion on February 10, has been taken by Japanese concerns as meaning that Iran has shown willingness to complete the stalled Iran-Japan project. The project, calling for construction of a giant petrochemical complex in Bandar Khomeyni, south of Tehran, has been suspended since the outbreak of the Iran-Iraq war. Iran has also raised funds for the project through a loan guaranteed by Iran Chemical Development Co. (ICDC), a five-company consortium led by Mitsui and Co.

Iran, however, rejected repayment in May as a counter-measure against the consortium's suspension of remittance to Iran-Japan Petrochemical Co. (IJPC), a joint company set up for the project by Japan's Mitsui group and Iran's National Petrochemical Co. The Mitsui group made the May repayment to Japanese financial institutions in place of Iran. The Japanese side plans to press Iran to make the next repayment of yen 7,630 million due on August 27 at the fifth round of talks on the plant to be held in Tehran this month, Mitsui said.

JAPANESE, INDIAN INDUSTRIALISTS HOLD MEETING

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 5, KYODO -- Japanese and Indian industrialists Thursday opened two days of discussion here on narrowing the gap in information on their respective fortes and capabilities for winning joint contracts and subcontracts in international projects. More than 220 Japanese and 170 Indian businessmen from 125 firms are taking part in the Indo-Japanese conference on joint-tendering and subcontracting being held at the Imperial Hotel. Shintaro Abe, Japanese minister of international trade and industry, and Shiv Raj V. Patil, Indian minister of commerce, addressed the meeting, the first in Japan, aimed at winning international biddings in which competition has been growing.

So far, Japanese and Indian firms have been competing with each other in bidding for projects in developing nations and there have been many cases where third countries have won the contracts.

The meeting is being held to exchange information on Japan's technology and capital and India's skilled labor for effective use in joint bidding for international contracts.

Patil said in his address: "We should explore all possibilities of combining the best of Japanese technology and the best of Indian capability to provide an attractive package to the prospective customers which can stand keen competition."

The opening ceremony was followed by group discussions on cooperation in civil engineering and construction projects, technical consultancy services, power generation, transmission and distribution, industrial plants and machinery. The meeting is being sponsored by India's semiofficial Engineering Export Promotion Council (EEPC) and supported by the Japan Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the India-Japan Business Cooperation Committee.

G.D. Shah, EEPC chairman, said in an opening speech that Japan topped the list in foreign collaboration agreements between India and foreign firms approved to September last year. Out of 6,500 such agreements, 558 are from Japan, he added. Noting that present Indo-Japanese cooperation "is confined to only a few Indian and Japanese firms in third country projects," he said, "We are keen to have such contracts and cooperation on a more organized and regular basis rather than on sporadic, chance negotiations."

KYODO REVIEWS TEXTBOOK REVISION CONTROVERSY

[By Masaru Imai]

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 10, KYODO -- Though under fire from all sides, a small group in the ruling Liberal-Democratic Party and the Japanese Education Ministry are displaying a desperate, dogged determination to avoid correcting textbook accounts of Japan's actions before and during World War II.

Education Minister Heiji Ogawa Tuesday asserted that the ministry has no intention of reversing the altered textbook description of Japan's history. The minister said in a Lower House committee meeting that textbooks deal only in objective facts.

For the past 30 years, the Education Ministry, with powerful support from within the ruling party, has battled tirelessly for a "correct Japanese view" of the war that the ministry thought was ignored by the U.S. occupation and then the leftwing-dominated Japan Teachers Union (Nikkyoso). Conveying the mood within the ministry, one high ranking official recently said that he recalls the "humiliation inflicted upon Japan."

The Americans banned geography and history, along with the traditional martial arts of kendo and naginata, from the school curriculum and Japanese school children learnt an American-approved version of their nation's actions in the 1930's and 1940's. After the occupation, Nikkyoso succeeded in promoting pacifist education under the slogan: "Don't send these students again to the battlefields." The preamble to the 1947 education law says that education must be conducted so as to bring up children to form a peaceful state and society.

The Education Ministry introduced its present textbook authorization system in 1952. Since then, all textbooks have been subject to screening by the Textbook Authorization Research Council, an advisory body of the ministry. Introduction of the screening system was the first steps in the ministry's efforts for "normalization" of public education. It was followed by the dropping of election in favor of a system of appointment to local boards of education (1956), introduction of an efficiency rating for teachers (1957), initiation of moral education (1958) and so on.

The ministry's efforts were at least partially aimed at destroying the power of the 570,000-member teachers union. Recent revisions in high school textbooks followed a massive campaign by the LDP over the last two years against the "biased" textbooks favored by Nikkyoso.

In the campaign, the Conservative Party has criticized the lack of patriotic ideas and sense of national defense.

Professor Emeritus Shigeru Watanabe of Senshu University, a member of the Textbook Authorization Research Council, claimed in a recent interview with the weekly ASAHI magazine that the Japanese postwar labelling of the war with China as an "invasion" was influenced by the activities of Chief Prosecutor Joseph Keenan of the Tokyo War Criminal Tribunal. "Keenan needed to call it an invasion. Otherwise he would be without grounds for prosecuting war criminals," he was quoted as saying. "A similar perception was created among journalists and public opinion without critical scrutiny," the professor of history added.

Commenting on last year's screening, Chief of the Education Ministry's Textbook Authorization Division, Kazuo Fujimura said that the word "invasion" was not welcome in textbooks. "It suggests an evaluation. School textbooks should provide only the facts," he was quoted as saying last December by the YOMIURI SHIMBUN newspaper. "If you write that the Chinese Government says it was an invasion, we will accept that," Fujimura said.

Some private textbook publishers followed the "advice" of the ministry and replaced the word "invasion" by the more neutral "advance."

With the revisions, a ministry victory seemed in sight. The effect, however, was to create a mounting chorus of protest against alleged "Japanese whitewashing of its wartime wrongdoing" in China, Korea, Taiwan and other parts of Asia that once fell subject to the Japanese imperial army.

In Japan itself, the row pits the Education Ministry -- defending the right to say what it likes in domestic school textbooks without outside interference -- against the Foreign Ministry, which is deeply concerned by possible damage to Japan's delicate relations with its neighbors.

Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi Tuesday said again that Japan's responsibility and recollections of past actions should be expressed in the textbooks as they were in the 1972 Japan-China joint statement and the 1965 Japan-South Korea joint communique. Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki is under increasing pressure to settle the diplomatic controversy so that his scheduled visit to China late next month will progress without friction. According to the Education Ministry official quoted earlier, "the final bout may be drawing closer, but we're not finished yet."

PANMUNJOM 'PROVOCATIONS' PROTESTED AT MAC MEETING

[Text] Kaesong, August 11 (KCNA) -- A meeting of security officers of the two sides to the Military Armistice Commission was held at Panmunjom on August 11 at the proposal of our side.

At the meeting our side sternly protested against continued provocations and violations of the U.S. imperialist aggression army against us in the Joint Security Area of Panmunjom, and called the enemy side to account for these acts.

According to the statement of our security officer at the meeting, on July 28, four soldiers of the U.S. imperialist aggression army at a post of the enemy side near Panmun Bridge threw stones at personnel of our side at a post on the opposite side.

Prior to this reckless provocation, on July 23, three soldiers of the U.S. imperialist aggression army shook truncheons at guard personnel of our side in the southern yard of the restroom of the members of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission.

On July 21 when the 467th meeting of secretaries of the Military Armistice Commission was going on, the enemy brought 34 more armed personnel than the designated number into the Joint Security Area, and illegally introduced almost every day many armed personnel into this area, letting them wear no designated insignia. Such provocations and violations committed by the enemy numbered 36 from July 12 to August 10. The security officer of our side strongly protested to the enemy side against increasing the number of armed personnel in the Joint Security Area to threaten the safety of our personnel and obstruct them in the performance of their duty, thereby creating the tension there, and asked the enemy side what steps it would take to stop provocations against our side.

The enemy side, however, refused to give assurances, on preposterous pretexts, that it would comply with the demand of our side.

The security officer of our side denounced the unjust stand of the enemy and stressed that an end must be put to the provocations of the enemy for security and order in the Joint Security Area.

NODONG SINMUN SCORES SOUTH KOREAN NAVAL EXERCISES

[NODONG SINMUN 11 August commentary: "A Reckless Play With Fire"]

[Text] The South Korean puppets are staging naval firing exercises in the East, West and South Seas.

According to news reports, the puppets staged a naval firing drill in waters around Koje Island on 7 and 8 August and will reportedly stage a naval exercise in the West Sea for 4 days beginning 11 August. They are engaged in naval shooting exercises in all the coastal waters from Mukho harbor in the East Sea to Koje Island in the South Sea, extending the drill through the night. It is reported that such rackets will last until 26 August.

The puppet clique has recently fanned war and confrontation sentiments in Chinhae, prattling about provocations against the South. The current naval military exercise coincides with the puppet clique's repeated war exercises, linking them to us.

The Chon Tu-hwan clique, which has been covering South Korea under a pall of gunpowder by staging a series of exercises such as Team Spirit 1982, has recently made a fuss by mobilizing residents all over the nation for blackout drills on the pretext of preparing against the North's surprise air attacks. The puppet clique has also staged a very provocative military exercise named "Myolgong," linking it to us, in areas around Seoul and Kyonggi Province by mobilizing a vast number of armed forces, including the puppet army, police and irregular forces [chun kunsaryok].

Hardly had the pall of war exercises settled when the puppets staged another military exercise at sea. The current naval exercise is part of war exercises ceaselessly staged against us by the puppets at the order of the U.S. imperialists. They are a premeditated and intentional maneuver to encourage a confrontation with us and to create a war mood. As indicated by a series of military exercises, blackout drills and the current naval exercises, the puppet's war exercises have recently been expanded, lengthened and made more vicious.

These facts show that the puppets' war rackets are becoming more reckless and are expanding.

The Chon Tu-hwan clique's reckless rackets are the product and extension of the U.S. imperialists' policy of aggression against Korea. It is widely known that the U.S. imperialists are encouraging the South Korean puppets to war and confontation by supplying them with weapons and equipment to maintain South Korea as their colony and military base to accelerate preparations for a new war against our republic.

The current naval exercises were staged after the U.S. imperialists had summoned the puppet army chief of staff to the United States to deliver an order to accelerate preparations for a war of northward invasion, saying that the U.S. troops will be directly involved if a war breaks out in Korea. The U.S. imperialists' purpose is to accelerate naval operations for a northward invasion and to use the puppets as cannon fodder.

The Chon Tu-hwan ring is playing the dirty role of pertetrator for the U.S. imperialists' policy of war. At a time when easing tension, maintaining and consolidating peace and achieving independent and peaceful reunification of the nation are emerging as the urgent aspiration of the times and people, the Chon Tu-hwan clique is staging war exercises against fellow countrymen at the orders of the aggressors. This is an intolerable act of treason and nation-selling running counter to peace and peaceful reunification. The Chon Tu-hwan ring, isolated and rejected at home and abroad owing to its flunkeyist policy and tryannical fascist military rule, is trying to find a way out through an adventurous military policy, while fanning war fever by staging firing exercises almost every day, straining the situation.

By so doing, the puppets are threatening the anti-U.S. struggle for independence and the antidictatorial struggle for democracy which are growing among the South Korean people by using military forces to stop their patriotic advance and maintain their colonial terrorist rule in South Korea. This, however, is a foolish daydream. The war exercises will bring nothing but destruction to the puppets. Syngman Rhee and Pak Chong-hui were destroyed while playing the role of perpetrators of the U.S. imperialists' colonial policy and policy of war. The Chon Tu-hwan clique should realize how tragic the colonial puppets' fate is and abstain from running wild by drawing a lesson from history. The same fate awaits those who follow in the footsteps of the destroyed predecessors.

JAPANESE FISHING BOATS, CREWMEN RELEASED

[Text] Pyongyang, August 11 (KCNA) -- As already reported, on July 13 a naval patrol boat of the Korean People's Army on its routine duty captured three Japanese fishing boats which were catching fish after illegally intruding into the East Sea economic waters of our country.

An investigation confirmed that these boats are "Hamayoshi-Maru No. 6" and "Soho-Maru" belonging to the Kasumijo fishery cooperative in Kinosaki County, Hyogo Prefecture, and "Junyoshi-Maru" belonging to the Tamaemura fishery cooperative in Hagi City, Yamaguchi Prefecture, Japan. The crewmen of these fishing boats admitted that they intruded 8-13 miles into the East Sea economic waters of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and illegally caught fish. They admitted that their crime deserved punishment as it gravely infringed upon the sovereignty of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea over the resources in the economic waters.

The Japanese fishing boats and their crewmen should have been severely punished by law for their criminal act. But the organ concerned of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, taking into consideration the fact that all of them are poor fishermen and honestly admitted their crime and promised not to intrude again into the economic waters of our country and illegally catch fish and a request of the Dietman's League for Promotion of Japan-Korea Friendship, the Japan Red Cross Society and the Japan-Korea Fishery Council for lenient pardon, decided to return all of the crewmen along with their boats.

The "Soho-Maru" and "Hamayoshi-Maru No. 6," which have gone through businesslike procedures for their departure, left on August 11; and "Junyoshi-Maru" will leave upon finishing its business-like procedures.

The Japanese side should make sure that there may not be a repetition of such violation as intruding into our economic waters.

REACTION TO JAPANESE TEXTBOOK REVISION CONTINUES

Workers Denounce Revision

SK111033 Pyongyang KCNA in English 1019 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, Aug 11 (KCNA) -- NODONG SINMUN and MINJU CHOSON and all other papers here continue to carry letters from working people of all strata denouncing the revision of textbooks by the Japanese authorities.

Nearly all the addressees of the letters are one-time sufferers from the brutal colonial policy of the Japanese imperialists over Korea and witnesses of history. In these letters they cite concrete facts roundly exposing that the Japanese Ministry of Education, through the recent revision of textbooks for the high school students and primary school children, is beautifying the gangster-like aggression and vicious colonial policy of the Japanese imperialists over Korea and crudely distorting stark historic facts.

Kim Myong-sop, a workteam head of the Hwasong cooperative farm, Yongsong District, Pyongyang, says in his letter: The March First Movement was a concentric explosion of the long pent-up anti-Japanese sentiments and wrath of the Korean people and a sacred patriotic struggle for the restoration of national sovereignty against the harsh colonial rule of Japanese imperialism. But, today the Japanese authorities describe the March first popular uprising as an unjustifiable "riot" in textbooks. This is an outrageous forgery of history for insulting the sacred patriotic struggle of the Korean people and justifying the brutal suppression of the movement. I can hardly repress my indignation at this shameless act of the Japanese militarists. There live in my village, too, participants in the March first popular uprising, and they often talk to us about it.

The Japanese authorities must immediately stop forging history, clearly realizing that with no swindle can they never erase the history of the anti-Japanese patriotic struggle of our people for national sovereignty.

Choe Hyon, who lives in Namsin-dong No. 1, Songyo District, Pyongyang, says in his letter: In June 1940, I was taken to an alien land in "labor drafting" by the Japs, where I underwent all sufferings before returning home. I cannot repress anger at the description of the forcible "labor drafting" as a "voluntary" one by the Japanese reactionaries.

A hired hand at a rich family in Ulsan, South Kyongsang Province, I was taken to a coal mine in Kyushu, Japan, for the son of the master, leaving my solitary father in his sick bed. How can a son, however undutiful he might be, volunteer to go away, not forced by the Japs, leaveing his own father on the deathbed, with no one to support him?

Afraid that we should run away, the Japanese imperialists built tall walls around the "concentration camp" crowned with barbed wire and Japs with bayonets were standing at the single exit. If we went there "voluntarily," why should they keep us under such strict watch? With nothing can the Japanese authorities conceal the historic fact that they took away Korean youth and middle-aged people by force and subjected them to all sorts of hard labour under the shuddering threat of the bayonet.

Dr. Kim Yong-hwang at Kim Il-song University says in his letter: No sooner had the Japanese imperialists occupied Korea than they proclaimed that the Japanese language should be used at all the government and public offices, courts and other places and harshly suppressed the use of the Korean language in education, the press and all other fields.

Under the Japanese imperialist colonial rule our people were fined for speaking Korean and blacklisted as "seditious elements" or even thrown into prison for the mere reason that they carried Korean books. While strictly banning the use of the Korean language, the Japanese imperialists forced the compulsory use of the Japanese language. Moreover, the Japanese imperialists forced the Koreans to change their original name in Japanese style.

Such are historical facts. But, in the recently revised Japanese textbooks, they claim that in those days the Japanese language was the "official language" and even argue that the "change of names" was "voluntarily responded" by the Korean people with their "encouragement." This is an intolerable violation of chajusong (independence) of our nation and a wanton forgery of history.

A direct eye-witness of the Japanese imperialists' aggression and colonial policy and a Korean linguist, I strongly protest against and denounce the distortion and forgery of history by the Japanese authorities.

VRPR Hits Ogawa's Remarks

SK101227 (Clandestine) Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in Korean to South Korea 1000 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Station commentary]

[Text] In a press conference held on 5 August, Japanese Education Minister Ogawa said he did not intend to revise any textbooks. Prattling that the issue of the distortions in the textbooks could be solved if the countries concerned understand the Japanese position, he said he did not intend to revise them, nor should he.

As is known, in the history textbooks for Japanese high school students, the Japanese Education Ministry has completely distorted and fabricated the history of the Japanese imperialists' aggression against our country by describing the act of robbing our country of its diplomatic rights and internal governing rights as a change of hands in accordance with a treaty, despoiling our farmers of their lands as an act of land registration, our people's 1 March mass uprising as a riot and the forced draft as a voluntary one, thus beautifying a vicious colonial rule.

Such acts by the Japanese authorities are an intolerable insult to our people's national pride and a violent distortion of history.

In this regard, people in and out of the country are raising voices demanding a correction of the textbooks and are strongly protesting and denouncing the Japanese. Despite such denunciations and protests, the Japanese militarists are trying to rationalize their distortions and fabrications rather than admit them, while showing an arrogance in defiance of pblic opinion at home and abroad. Such acts, intolerable as they are, could be committed only by those who are devoted to plundering and aggression against other countries.

Attempting to militarize Japan, make inroads abroad, realize their ambition to reinvade South Korea and, eventually, achieve their old dream of a Greater East Asia Coprosperity Sphere is the unchanged policy of the Japanese militarists. One part of such an attempt to achieve these ambitions is that the Japanese militarists have revised the textbooks and distorted history, evoking denunciations and protests from the world. By praising the old Japanese imperialists' history of aggression, the Japanese militarists are trying to cover up their predecessors' crimes. They are also trying to rationalize their schemes to reinvade South Korea and provide the ideological foundation to achieve their militarist ambition for aggression by infusing today's young generation in Japan with a militarist spirit.

A recent series of events clearly show this. By reviving the martial songs that once reverberated in the places they invaded and massacred people and by having them sung by present-day Japanese citizens, the Japanese authorities are praising the exploits of those who died in the war of aggression and are making today's Japanese emulate them.

They have also made a film hailing the war of aggression called "The Great Japanese Empire" and are promoting it. This is another example of their schemes.

It is no accident that the Japanese authorities are denounced. The historic lessons about the crimes and tragedy of war are losing their color. The spirit beautifying and viewing World War II in a positive light is growing in Japan. The game of revising the textbooks coincided with the Japanese reactionaries' reinforcement of the Self-Defense Forces and acceleration of naked war preparations. The distortions in the textbooks are even more dangerous because they are aimed at the new generation. This clearly shows that the Japanese militarists' ambition for aggression has not changed and is being revived.

Despite such facts, the Chon Tu-hwan ring is acting subserviently, saying not a word. It is turning its back on stark facts and is showing a humble attitude toward Japan. This exposes its nature as a pro-Japan flunkeyist and an antinational criminal scheming to maintain a one-man dictatorship and entrench itself in office by getting more aid from Japan as a reward for traitorous acts.

Our masses will never tolerate the Japanese militarists' ambition and will bravely join the holy war to overthrow the pro-Japan flunkeyist, the traitorous Chon Tu-hwan ring, which is subserviently obeying the Japanese militarists.

He founded the immortal chuche idea holding the most shining place in the history of human thought and has developed it in depth and splendidly embodied it to convert Korea into a powerful and independent country.

The chuche idea is a banner of struggle not only for the Korean people but also for the oppressed people of the world.

By strengthening political sovereignty and building an independent national economy and a self-reliant national defence through the embodiment of the chuche idea, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea has become a proud example, beacon of hope and source of encouragement for the progressive countries of the world striving to carry out the cause of chajusong (independence).

Therefore, today the world's revolutionary people follow and highly respect and revere President Kim Il-song, the legendary hero, peerless patriot, genius of revolution and construction, great thinker and theoretician and leader of the world revolution. The world's progressive people also highly praise the chuche idea, a revolutionary world outlook, as a genuine declaration of human rights of our era and a fundamental guideline in solving by their own efforts all problems arising in the revolution and construction and realizing chajusong.

The great leader President Kim Il-song put forward national reunification as the supreme task of the nation from the first days of the country's division due to the U.S. troops' occupation of South Korea and has made all his efforts to realize it. He put forward the proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo, an independent, democratic, peaceloving and non-aligned state, and the ten-point policy of the confederal state at the Sixth Congress of the Workers Party of Korea to indicate an original and just road to realise the reunification of the country by the Koran people themselves without any foreign interference. The reunification proposal put forward by the president is a realistic and fair one acceptable to anyone. It can accelerate the peaceful reunification of the country.

The proposal for founding a confederal state which accords with the interests of the entire Korean people enjoys the absolute support of the progressive organizations and people of the world desirous of peace in Korea and her peaceful reunification. As this reunification proposal indicates a most reasonable way of settling the national problem in divided countries, meets the demand of the constantly changing external and internal situation, strengthens solidarity with the anti-imperialist, independent forces and guarantees the development of the Non-Aligned Movement, it makes a great contribution to the world people's revolutionary cause of building a new independent world.

The great leader President Kim Il-song is wisely leading the Non-Aligned Movement to preserve its intrinsic character, firmly defend its idea and principle and thereby exert ever greater influence upon the process of the change of the world. Many countries of the world who aspire after chajusong are struggling, guided by the just idea of external policy put forward by him in accord with the interests of their people and the desires of the world people.

President Kim Il-song has also made an immortal contribution to the revolutionary cause of the world working class and the development of the times by giving a perfect answer to the problem of continuing with the revolution. Under the wise guidance of the great leader President Kim Il-song the revolution is successfully going on in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. This is a most brilliant example in the revolutionary struggle in our time. The great sun which rose from a straw-thatched house with low eaves in Mangyongdae, a holy land of revolution, is not only throwing brilliant rays over Korea but also shedding the rays of life throughout the world.

The great leader President Kim Il-song has rendered distinguished services to history and the times. This is a most significant event in our era.

The cause of President Kim Il-song who performed a world-wide feat in 70 years holds a most brilliant place in human history.

NODONG SINMUN EXPOUNDS ON SPEED OF 1980'S SLOGAN

SK071204 Pyongyang Domestic Service in Korean 2227 GMT 6 Aug 82

[NODONG SINMUN 7 August special article: "Our People's New, Historic March Which Is Advancing With Slogan for Creation of the Speed of 1980's Upheld" -- KCNA identifies this as an "editorial article"]

[Text] A struggle to create a new speed of advance, i.e., the speed of the 1980's, is being vigorously waged in our country. In the course of such a struggle, a new revolutionary upsurge is being created on all fronts of socialist construction and a brighter future is unfolding before the fatherland.

Today's proud reality is a noble fruition of the revolutionary leadership of our party, which is leading the revolution and construction to an endless upsurge with bold strategic slogans. Our party is the staff office of the Korean revolution and organizer and guide of all of our people's victories.

It is an important trait of our party's tested leadership art to lead the revolution and construction to an endless upturn with correct struggle slogans in conformity with the longstanding demand of revolutionary development and the people's aspiration put forth in a timely manner.

Thanks to our party's leadership, which always illuminates the revolutionary path with great struggle slogans, our socialist construction has always been successful with grand revolutionary upsurges, and the ultimate victory for the communist cause is firmly guaranteed.

1. The struggle to create the speed of the 1980's put forth by our party is a glorious project designed to create a decisive change in socialist construction and to energetically accelerate the imbuing of society with the chuche idea.

The respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught: We should always set higher goals and struggle to implement them. We can consummate the revolution and build a communist paradise only when we ceaselessly struggle and develop.

Our revolution, which was pioneered in the forest of Mt Paektu, has ascended a very high stage of tying society together with a single idea. Under the banner of the chuche idea, work for remodeling man, society and nature is being pursued and great victories and successes are being reaped in all sectors of the revolution and construction.

Our revolutionary cause, however, has not been completed, and more difficult and vast revolutionary duties face us now. Starting from a firm position of working to consummate the historic cause of imbuing society with the chuche idea, our party has recently put forth a militant slogan to create the speed of the 1980's -- a new speed in socialist construction.

This is a clear manifestation of the revolutionary traits of our party, which advances and renovates continuously, never boasting of its triumphs and successes.

The purpose of socialist, commuist construction is to bring about serious changes in all sectors and, therefore, we cannot afford to stand still for even a moment in our struggle to consummate this cause.

From the beginning of its leadership of the revolution and construction, our party has been struggling, assuming as a firm principle the need to advance socialist construction at constant high speed. So, our country's socialist economic construction has persistently followed a single path of upturn without the slightest deviation or turmoil. This great revolutionary history of grand upsurge, which has not known recession or stalemate for even a moment and which has singlemindedly pursued ceaseless renovations and, forward marches, is a great honor and pride to our people.

With its bold operations to create the speed of the 1980's now fully unfolded, our party is vigorously summoning the entire party and all the people to a struggle to implement them.

Reflected in these operations is our party's firm, unwavering determination to turn our country into a better place to live -- a people's paradise -- and to hasten national reunification and a complete victory of socialism by creating an unprecedented revolutionary upsurge in socialist economic construction in conformity with the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song's plan and intention. The struggle to create a new advance speed, i.e., the speed of the 1980's, is first of all a rewarding struggle to achieve the 10 major perspective goals of socialist economic construction ahead of schedule.

The 10 major perspective goals of socialist economic construction put forth by the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song are a grand program for economic construction designed to strengthen the nation's political and economic might in all aspects and to improve epochally the people's living standard. They are also a brilliant plan to hasten the historic cause of socialist and communist construction.

Our people have already achieved a great success in socialist economic construction. To achieve ahead of schedule the 10 major perspective goals with which we anticipate a high speed of production and growth and construction of a large-scale, we should redouble our efforts and advance at a speed many times faster than the present one.

The struggle to create a new speed of advance that our people are engaged in now is a grand revolutionary advance designed to create an unprecedented speed in socialist economic construction to the fullest meaning of the word.

The victory of the struggle to achieve the goals of the second 7-year plan and the 10 major perspective goals of socialist economic construction ahead of schedule depends decisively on how the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's is waged in all sectors.

Today's struggle to create a new speed of advance will be a manifestation of great revolutionary spirit, and the might of this struggle stems from the fact that it is based on the Chollima spirit and spirit of self-reliance. The Chollima spirit is a great revolutionary spirit enabling us to bring about world famous miracles and changes by stepping forward with 10 to 100 paces while others take only one step. This spirit is the main source of energy which has enabled us to embroider our country's history of socialist construction with astonishing exploits.

With the revolutionary spirit of Chollima, our people have achieved miracles and renovations, astonishing the world's people by emerging from the postwar ruins and crushing all sorts of manuevers by the enemies within and without, and they have established today's gigantic powerful socialist country of independence, self-reliance and self-supporting in the shortest possible period -- unprecedented in history -- by ceaselessly advancing at a high speed.

Without the Chollima spirit and Chollima force, we cannot conceive of our country -- which has come to pride itself as the country of Chollima that only knows about upswing and advance -- breaking away from the backwardness it has suffered in the past. The Chollima spirit and Chollima force is a great spirit and verve of struggle which our people will have to carry with them and highly display forever in the future.

The struggle to create the speed of the 1980's, which is being vigorously waged in all sectors under our party's leadership, is a struggle which has been generated with the Chollima spirit -- whose invincible driving power and vitality has been fully tested and proven in the practice of our revolution -- as its ideological and spiritual basis and waged with the ideological and spiritual basis as its weapons.

Because of this the spirit to create the speed of the 1980's is a powerful driving force enabling us to achieve ahead of schedule this year's vast plan and the second 7-year plan and achieve the 10 major perspective goals of socialist economic construction of the 1980's at all cost.

This being the case, for our people nothing could be a more honorable and proud task than to actively join in this rewarding struggle put forth and led by our party, and devote their wisdom and passion to it.

The struggle to create the speed of the 1980's -- a new advance speed -- is a glorious task of endlessly glorifying the tradition and history of enacting a great upsurge in socialist construction under the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song's wise leadership. A great revolutionary upsurge has been continuously enacted in socialist construction in our country. This is characteristic of socialist construction. Holding in high esteem as a great leader the respected and beloved Comrade Kim Il-song, who has profound wisdom and a tested leadership, our people have quickly advanced since the commencement of socialist construction, without knowing the slightest stagnation and stalemate. Thus, they have fully demonstrated the revolutionary spirit of heroic Korea. This entire course has been a chronicle strewn with a heroic epic and great miracles and brilliant exploits unparalleled in history.

The lighting of the flames of the Chollima movement by the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song was an historic event providing an opportunity to bring about a decisive change in socialist construction in our country and to instill a great revolutionary upsurge.

Socialist construction forged ahead on a full-fledged scale in our country during the postwar period. During this period, our party and people were assigned an historic task of carrying out a socialist revolution -- a most serious social change in history -- and of completing the basic construction of socialism. Achieving this vast task under the circumstances of inheriting a backward economy and of everything being reduced to ashes was difficult beyond description. Advancing at the speed of Chollima under the leadership of the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song, our people brilliantly conducted a socialist reform in production in 4 to 5 years and ushered in a new era of Chollima in this land.

From the beginning, socialist construction in our country started with a great revolutionary upsurge. Thus, socialist construction has advanced along a single road of upsurge. Following the 1950's, during which the speeds of Chollima and Pyongyang were created, the speed of vinalon was created in the 1960's, astonishing people. In the 1970's, the unprecedented speed of the 70-day battle was created.

The historic task of industrialization, which others took several hundred years to complete, was completed in 10-odd years in our country. Our country, which was once most backward, was turned into a most powerful socialist country in 30-odd years. This is a great fruition of this course, in which these astonishing speeds were created.

Our party values the history of the great revolutionary upsurge led by the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song. It regards it as a noble duty to inherit and endlessly glorify this task. The struggle to create the speed of the 1980's is a worthwhile one designed to brilliantly implement such a plan of our party. When all the people unanimously rise and perform heroic exploits in creating the speed of the 1980's, they can more successfully glorify the immortal revolutionary achievements attained by the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song.

The struggle to create the speed of the 1980's -- a new advance speed -- is not only the brilliant inheritance of the history of a great revolutionary upsurge which has already been enacted in socialist construction, but also a higher stage struggle to achieve this end. This is the characteristic of the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's.

The might of the mass movement for social change is related to the circumstances, the goal and the methodology with which this movement is carried out. The aim of the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's is to lay a firm material and technical foundation to completely suit [word indistinct] socialist society following the completion of socialist revolution and industrialization and the comprehensive technical (?reform) of the people's economy, and to make decisive progress in carrying out the historic cause of imbuing society with the chuche idea. This shows that the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's has an unprecedented, magnificent goal in socialist construction and that this struggle has as its vast task raising our revolution to a higher stage.

The work of creating the speed of the 1980's is a struggle which is waged through a speed battle -- a most vigorous work method. The speed battle is the basic battle form of socialist construction -- a method of attaining the best result both in quantity and quality in the shortest span of time by mobilizing all forces available.

Only when we adopt the method of the speed battle -- a most revolutionary form of battle meeting the requirements for developing our revolution and the desire of the people -- can we gain great successes in all sectors of socialist construction. This is a precious truth shown by our practical revolution.

The struggle to create the speed of the 1980's -- today's new speed -- is a great advance movement to continuously promote the spirit of the period of great Chollima upsurge and to add the might of the speed battle to this spirit. The struggle to create the speed of the 1980's is a high-stage, comprehensive and pannational struggle that enables us to brilliantly achieve unprecedented goals and vast tasks in socialist construction.

Through this struggle, chuche Korea -- Chollima Korea -- has embarked on the road of a new advance, and the 1980's shines as a most brilliant era in carrying out the historic cause of imbuing society with the chuche idea.

2. Only under the wise leadership of the great party and leader can we enact a new, great upsurge in socialist construction and gain great successes.

The struggle to create the speed of the 1980's -- a new speed of advance -- is a struggle waged lawfully as a result of the immortal achievements the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song has attained in leading the revolution and construction to victory and of the wise leadership of our party resolutely protecting and glorifying these achievements. The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught: We have every potential to readily achieve the new, magnificent goal for socialist economic construction.

A great struggle cannot be waged automatically in a barren land. Socialist construction work, which has for a high goal, can only be carried out victoriously on firm political, ideological and material foundations. In the course of leading the revolution and construction to victory under the banner of the chuche idea, the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song has laid firm political, ideological, material and technical foundations so as to enact a great revolutionary upsurge today. Through energetic meditation and research, the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song has provided precious ideological and theoretical assets -- such as the general goal and strategic line for building socialism and communism, the system and method of economic management and the method of men's activities -- in order to help us advance socialist construction without deviation. By firmly rallying the entire party and all the people, he has firmly organized a chuche-type revolutionary force, built a superior socialist system and a self-reliant national economy and strengthened their might in various ways. This is a firm basis for making socialist construction in our country always advance along the single road of continuous upsurge.

Our party has protected and consolidated this mighty basis that the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song has provided while, for a long time, devoting everything toward achieving victory in the cause of socialism and communism. Under the wise leadership of our party, the unity of our revolutionary rank has been matchlessly strengthened, and the political and ideological awareness of all the people has been greatly promoted.

To carry out the revolution and construction by utilizing the creativity of the people, we should rally the masses into a single political force. The might of the masses comes from their unity. When they unite into a single entity, they will display a very formidable strength and will create an astounding speed in socialist construction. Always attaching primary significance to the work of strengthening the unity of the revolutionary rank, our party has concentrated on this work. In particular, it has set forth a militant slogan for imbuing society with the chuche idea and has brilliantly carried out this work. This is a great event that provides an opportunity for marking a new turning point in strengthening the unity of our revolutionary ranks in various ways.

With the announcement of our party's revolutionary policy for imbuing society with the chuche idea, a bright way was opened for training all party members and workers as true chuche-type communist revolutionaries and for turning society into a body that is perfect, pure and ideologically flawless.

In the course of imbuing society with the chuche idea, a basic change has taken place in the ideological and spiritual trait, i.e., the work and life style of our people. From experiences in their daily life, all party members and workers have fully understood the greatness of our party, its wise leadership and immortal achievements. They have entirely entrusted the party with their destiny.

Today our people are defending and safeguarding our party politically and ideologically in defiance of any ordeal and trial, accepting our party's policies and lines as a life-and-death demand and regarding devotion of everything to the implementation of the policies and lines as their greatest reward and solemn duty.

The party is unfolding a grand plan, trusting in the people; the people are following the party, depending on the party for everything. This is, in a genuine sense, the strength of great cohesion and unity of the party and the people. The strength of great cohesion and unity of the party and the people is the fundamental resource for the stout advance of our revolution and the basic key to winning victory in the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's.

Our party has also laid solid material and technical foundations for the creation of the speed of the 1980's. The struggle to create the speed of the 1980's is a great struggle for economic construction in which greatly increased production and a grand construction are envisaged. Since we have powerful material and technical foundations, we will certainly gain victory in this struggle.

As a result of the chucheization, modernization and scientization of the people's economy that has been pushed ahead under the energetic leadership of our party, the people's economy has been equipped with modern technology and the socialist self-reliant national economy has been proving its worth each passing day.

Our economy, which is totally different from that when we were paving the way for socialism, has been converted into a powerful and large-scale economy in which we are able to produce anything that we want to produce. In particular, experiences and achievements, which our party has gained in the course of creating a remarkable construction speed that has surprised the world's people, are precious foundations for continuously effecting upsurges in socialist economic construction.

Since 1980, leading revolution and construction, our party has directly arranged and vigorously led, with a bold operation and an outstanding organizational ability, countless great monumental creations, including the Chuche Tower, the Arch of Triumph and Changgwang Street. In this course, a great example of pushing ahead with socialist economic construction in a high speed has been created.

Our people's historic advance for creating the speed of the 1980's is a struggle based on precious experiences under our party's leadership and a struggle to comprehensively embody a miracle speed created in the course of constructing great monuments to all the sectors of the people's economy.

Our party has not only laid powerful political, ideological and material foundations, guaranteeing a high speed in carrying out socialist economic construction, but has kindled the flame of the new great revolutionary upswing by setting forth a correct fighting slogan. Even when a subjective and objective condition matures, a new upsurge in socialist construction is never effected by itself. Only when there are the wise leadership of the party and the leader and a great fighting slogan, organizing masses and mobilizing them toward the realization of a certain goal, can the new upsurge be effected.

The consistent principle of our party's leadership is to rally the people to a new victory by setting forth a unique fighting slogan in every period and on every stage of revolution and construction. In the difficult postwar period when revolution faced a grim trial, our party created a great period of upsurge in socialist construction by putting forward the political slogan: "Let us advance in the spirit of Chollima!" In the period when the cause of imbuing society with the chuche idea was presented, our party opened a new period of the speed battle under the slogan: "Ideology, technology and culture -- all in accordance with the demands of chuche!"

Demanding a new period of the creation of a new speed of advance and setting forth a revolutionary slogan -- "Let us create the speed of the 1980's in the spirit of the great upswing of Chollima in the glorious 1980's when our revolution has reached a high level" -- is additional clear evidence of our party's excellent leadership art in leading revolution and construction to an endless upsurge by laying down a correct fighting slogan that meets the demand of the development of revolution and the aspirations of the public masses.

Thanks to the new revolutionary slogan set forth by our party, the socialist economic construction of our country can advance again at a high speed, and the future of socialist economic construction will be more promising. This gives our people endless pride, confidence, faith and hope.

For this reason, all party members and workers are vigorously rushing to all the socialist construction fronts with a burning passion for implementing without fail the revolutionary slogan laid down by the party. No force can block the new revolutionary advance of our people who are upholding the great revolutionary slogan under the leadership of the great leader and the party. The history of our fatherland will be embroidered in worldwide miracles and exploits.

3. The winning of a great victory in the struggle for the creation of the speed of the 1980's, upholding the glorious KWP leadership, is our people's rock-firm will and faith.

The respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught: Without the leadership of our party our revolutionary struggles and renovation movements cannot advance even one step.

Today we are assigned the revolutionary duty of making the 1980's shine as a great decade filled with victory and glory in socialist construction by creating the new speed of advance. To win a glorious victory in this rewarding struggle, we should uphold our party's leadership. Our party is a tested political leader, leading the cause of socialism and communism to an ever-victorious road.

Without our party's leadership our revolution cannot advance even one step, nor can we expect any victory and success. This is invariable truth shown by the history of socialist construction, which has won the greatest victory in the most adverse circumstances.

Today our party is unfolding a grand plan for enacting new upsurges in socialist economic construction under the slogan demanding the creation of the speed of the 1980's and is in the vanguard of the struggle to realize the slogan. All party members and workers should enact heroic exploits in the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's by brilliantly implementing our party's plan with a high political awareness and revolutionary passion.

What is more important in effecting new great upswings, upholding the party's leadership, is to closely combine the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's with the movement for winning the red banner of the three revolutions and the movement for following the examples of unheralded heroes.

As was delineated by our party, the core of the slogan demanding the creation of the speed of the 1980's is the work with people. Only when we make the masses display their revolutionary passion and creative positivenss by strengthening the work with people -- political work -- can we continuously maintain a great revolutionary upswing.

Combining the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's with the movement for winning the red banner of the three revolutions and the movement for following the examples of unheralded heroes signifies creating the new speed of advance by displaying the might of the movement for winning the red banner of the three revolutions and the movement for following the examples of unheralded heroes.

Enacting a great revolutionary upswing in socialist construction through mass movement is the line to which our party has adhered since the first period in which our party led the construction of a new society. The socialist construction of our country has continuously advanced in the spirit of the speed battle joined to Chollima. This is attributable to our party, which has proposed various mass movements, including the Chollima work team movement, and has continuously deepened them.

The Pyongyang speed which surprised people in the postwar period was created in the course of staging the Chollima movement. The micracle of completing the grand 6-year plan 1 year and 4 months ahead of schedule was created in the flame of the movement for winning the red banner of the three revolutions.

All the great events, exploits, miracles and changes recorded in the proud annals of the chuche fatherland were effected through our people's mass movement. The movement for winning the red banner of the three revolutions and the movement for following the examples of the unheralded heroes, which were proposed and are being led by our party, are powerful communist-type movements which enable socialist construction to be accelerated at a high speed by increasing the role of the popular masses, the masters of revolution and construction, and by making their strength and wisdom fully displayed.

Only when we firmly adhere to the movement for winning the red flag of the three revolutions and the movement for following the examples of the unheralded heroes and continuously deepen them can we vigorously accelerate socialist construction by fully displaying the spirit of absoluteness and unconditionality toward the party's policy and the revolutionary spirit of self-reliance and fortitude.

The party's organizations and functionaries in all the sectors and all the units should thoroughly grasp the party's intention of combining the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's with mass movements and to implement it. So, like the unheralded heroes, functionaries, party members and workers should be the creators of exploits and genuine revolutionaries who devote everything to the construction of socialism and the prosperity and development of the country. Thoroughly implementing the party's political slogan "Production, study and life -- all in the manner of the anti-Japanese guerrillas" is a firm guarantee to create the speed of the 1980's and achieve the ultimate victory of our revolution.

The struggle to create the speed of the 1980's is a very fierce struggle to enact great new revolutionary upswings in socialist economic construction. The struggle demands that all the functionaries and workers rise in the struggle with burning loyalty and extraordinary resolve. The slogan: "Production, study and life -- all in the manner of the anti-Japanese guerrillas" set forth by our party is a great revolutionary slogan which makes party members and workers fight to the end along the single road of revolution indicated by the party, firmly trusting in the party and the leader.

Reflected in this slogan is the fundamental position of our party which demands that all party members and working people display a high, persistent revolutionary spirit in socialist construction just like the anti-Japanese warriors who, during the arduous anti-Japanese revolution period, performed their revolutionary duties with a firm revolutionary belief that they had no right to die before they had carried out the comrade commander's order, overcoming all difficulties time after time.

Only when we have thoroughly embodied this slogan in our work and life can we have the noble revolutionary spirit and enthusiasm for struggle born in the forest of Mt Paektu infuse the nation and have the flames of the speed battle burn fiercely on all fronts of socialist construction.

With deep understanding that the slogan of production, study and life -- all in the manner of anti-Japanese guerrillas -- is the revolutionary slogan which should be upheld as the basis of the struggle waged to create the speed of the 1980's, all the party organizations, functionaries, party members and working people should live and struggle in accord with what this slogan demands of them.

Thus, all the functionaries and working people should join in the struggle to create a new grand upsurge, arming themselves with the revolutionary spirit and persistent spirit of battle of the anti-Japanese warriors. The functionaries should vigorously lead the masses by their personal example in the struggle to create the speed of the 1980's, lay the groundwork for organizational and political work and ambitiously direct them in production by completely adopting the work methods and work style of the anti-Japanese guerrillas.

To create the speed of the 1980's in all sectors of the national economy is a holy task to inherit the history of the Chollima marches led by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and a most rewarding struggle to establish a communist paradise in this land under the leadership of our party at an early date.

Cherishing deep in their heart the great national dignity and pride of living and enacting the revolution under the leadership of the great party and leader, all the party members and working people should continue the struggle more vigorously to accelerate imbuing society with the chuche idea and consummate the communist cause by effecting a new grand revolutionary upsurge in socialist construction.

DEATH SENTENCE GIVEN TO TWO PUSAN ARSONISTS

SK110505 Seoul Domestic Service in Korean 0300 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] Report by KBS Pusan affiliate -- The death sentence has been handed down to Kim Hyon-chang and Mun Pu-sik at their trial for involvement in the arson at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan.

At 0930 at Court No 1 of the Pusan District Court, presided over by Chief Judge An Mun-tae, the death sentence was handed down against defendants Kim Hyon-chang and Mun Pu-sik, with Choe Ki-sik sentenced to 3 years imprisonment and suspension of rights. All 16 defendants involved received sentences.

The following are the sentences of the other defendants: Kim Un-suk and Yi Mi-ok sentenced to life, as demanded; Yu Sung-yol given 15 years; Pak Won-sik sentenced to 7 years imprisonment and suspension of rights; Choe Chung-won sentenced to 5 to 7 years imprisonment and 7 years suspension of rights; Choe In-sun and Kim Chi-hui sentenced to 15 years imprisonment and suspension of rights; Pak Chong-hui sentenced to 4 years imprisonment and suspension of rights; Mun Kil-hwan sentenced to 3 years imprisonment and suspension of rights; Ho Chin-su given 2 years imprisonment; Kim Hwa-sok given 3 years imprisonment, and Yi Chang-pok given 2 years imprisonment and suspension of rights.

In his decision, the judge said that defendants Kim Hyon-chang and Mun Pu-sik should be eliminated from society in light of their criminal motives and method of sympathizing with the line of the North Korean puppets while leading a left-leaning indoctrination class, of destroying human life by setting fire at a U.S. cultural center through the use of cell organizations, of alienating the ROK from its ally the United States -- with which it has maintained blood ties -- and of creating a disturbance in the country and society.

The judge also said that defendant Choe Ki-sik's act of assisting Kim Hyon-chang in seeking refuge after violating the law and of overlooking and even encouraging his conducting an indoctrination class is a violation of the law. The judge added that, although the crimes committed by the other defendants, except for defendants Kim Un-suk and Yi Mi-ok, are grave, he has reduced penalties for them in light of their youth and future.

PARTY OFFICIALS TO DISCUSS JAPANESE TEXTBOOKS

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 11 (YONHAP) -- The floor leaders of South Korea's major political parties will meet Wednesday to discuss a parliamentary strategy to deal with the "textbook controversy" amid renewed attacks by lawmakers of both ruling and opposition camps of a Japanese Cabinet official for his continuing remarks defending the revisions in Japanese high school textbooks.

Speaking at a news conference Monday in Nagoya, Yukiyasu Matsuno, Japan's state minister in charge of the National Land Agency, said that critics of Japan's textbook revisions should take into account the historical circumstances of the colonial era, thus suggesting that Japan's colonization of Korea was inevitable.

At Wednesday's meeting, floor leaders of opposition parties are expected to demand that the National Assembly convene its foreign affairs committee to address the issue, which has triggered a diplomatic row between Seoul and Tokyo. Meanwhile, Korean lawmakers belonging to the Korea-Japan Parliamentarians Union said they may have to boycott the union's general meeting slated for early September in Tokyo in the absence of a commitment by the Japanese Government to correct the distortions.

Commenting on Matsuno's remarks, Rep. Pon Tu-wan of the majority Democratic Justice Party (DJP) said: "A politician with sound judgment would not have made remarks outraging a foreign nation. The textbook distortions are isolating Japan from the international community." Rep. Sin Sang-cho, a DJP lawmaker and a former journalist, observed that Matsuno's remarks "did not make any sense" and said the Koren Government should prod the Japanese Government and Matsuno to apologize.

Rep. Yi Man-sop, vice president of the minority Korea National Party, said Matsuno's remarks only aggravate the current strains between Seoul and Tokyo, and added the Japanese minister should apologize for what he said. Rep. Ho Kyong-ku of the Democratic Korea Party said Matsuno's remarks reflect the sentiment of some people in Japan, and voiced concern that such thinking would affect Korean-Japanese relations.

Construction Contract Shelved

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 11 (YONHAP) -- The state-run Korea Electric Power Corp. has shelved a plan to give the Marubeni Corp. of Japan a 30 million U.S. dollar contract to construct part of a projected liquefied natural gas (LNG) terminal in Asan Bay, some 60 km south of Seoul, and a submarine pipeline between the terminal and the west coast port of Inchon, it was learned Wednesday.

Corporation sources said the decision was thought to be a result of the Korean people's growing anti-Japanese sentiment triggered by Japan's "distorted" historical descriptions of past Korea-Japan relations in revised editions of high school textbooks. The sources also said the Technicaz Gas Co. of France will be awarded a 120 million-dollar contract for the construction of three 100,000-kilolitre-capacity LNG tanks in consideration of a French desire to participate in the project which was expressed during the visit of French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson to Seoul early this month.

International bidding for the construction of the pipeline, the three LNG tanks and a LNG plant was held last year and the foreign firms which submitted successful bids were to be announced last week.

Rallies Protest Textbooks

[Text] Outcry and fury over the controversial distortion of historic facts in Japanese school textbooks continued to rock the country yesterday. In Seoul yesterday, 13 social organizations established in memory of independence fighters and those killed for the cause of their motherland issued a collective statement in protest of the falsification of Korea-related history in Japanese textbooks.

Members of the organizations declared in the statement that the distortion of historic facts and a series of absurd remarks by Japanese officeholders should be denounced and rebuked in the name of the Korean people. They said that the world would not tolerate Japan if it decides to return to imperialism.

The statement called for the prompt correction of distorted accounts of historic facts and an official apology by Japanese Cabinet members for their "irresponsible" remarks on the textbook case. They also urged the Korean Government and people to sever diplomatic relations with Japan unless their demands are met. "The controversial remarks by Yukiyasu Matsuno, Japanese state minister in charge of national land, is tantamount to insults against martyred patriots," the statement said.

In the provincial city of Kwangju, Cholla Namdo, 500 citizens participated in a lecture in protest of the revision of historical facts. In a lecture session held in downtown Kwangju, Prof. Pak Chun-chae, 68, dean of the graduate school at Chosun University, said that it is absurd for Japan to brand the student uprising as a riot. During the Japanese occupation of Korea, Japanese imperialists called the student movement an independence movement and punished the student participants as political offenders, Prof. Pak said.

In his lecture entitled "Japanese Imperialists' Brutalities in Korean History," Prof. Song Chung-hwan, curator of Chonnam National University, said that while ruling Korea, the Japanese Government forced Korean people to report their farmland to the concerned authorities and exploited vast acres of irrigable land.

Later in the day, an estimated 300 Confucianism Association members held a rally and denounced the history textbook errors. They called on Japan to recognize that the Korean people staged a nationwide movement March 1, 1919, to obtain independence from Japanese colonial rule. They also adopted a seven-point resolution in which they said they will boycott Japanese products and urge the government to cut diplomatic ties between the two nations. They were joined by 1,200 aged people, affiliated with the Cheju-do and Songnam chapters of the Korean Senior Citizens' Association in their anti-Japanese rally.

In Pusan, the nation's second largest city, farmers infuriated by the falsification of historic facts Monday destroyed a monument erected in Puggu, Pusan, in memory of meritorious service rendered by Japanese workers to construct a bridge linking Pusan and Kimhae.

KOREA HERALD DISCUSSES ATOMIC BOMBINGS ON JAPAN

[Editorial: "One-Sided Memory of History"]

[Text] The 37th anniversary of the atomic attack on Nagasaki was marked by a ceremony at Peace Park in the once condemned city in Japan early this week. It was preceded shortly by a similar occasion in Hiroshima. Dropping of the genocidal atomic bombs is a tragic and bitter thing to remember. It would be the last thing for any sane man to repeat.

Naturally, any gatherings in memory of that lurid and catastrophic end to the Pacific war are accompanied by rallies against nuclear weapons. The motive is sufficiently humane and naive. The logic is apparently clear and sound. But, on second thought, we awaken to a missing link.

Not only the Japanese people, but also all of humanity vividly remembers the inhuman massacre and destruction that resulted from the world's first atomic bombing on Japan. Obviously the victims were Japanese. From this, however, it does not necessarily follow that the Japanese were innocent sufferers.

A fair retrospection should focus on what caused the Pacific war and what called for nothing short of the ultimate weapon to end the war which appeared unlikely to end without wholesale extermination of the desperate war machine. The central issue here is the sequence of events leading up to the outbreak of the hostilities and their horrendous implications.

The dramatic anticlimax of who dealt the final blow and who licked the ground is only a matter of secondary importance. At this juncture, it is very hazardous to pass casual judgment on the relative moral scores of the two parties to the duel. The question of who was the good guy and who was the bad one should be answered in a broader and impartial historical context and perspective.

Visitors to the Peace Memorial Museum in Nagasaki will see a massive collection of the remains of the atomic bombing, its bloody and brutal aftermath, but they will look in vain for anything on the historical background to Hiroshima. A recent New York TIMES dispatch points out that there is nothing in the museum guides, the books at the bookstand or the museum photo captions about the 1930's, which were the high tide of nearly half a century of Japanese aggression, chiefly on the Asian mainland. Nor is there any mention of Japanese militarism or the attack on Pearl Harbor on the day of infamy in 1941.

The exhibits at the museum are so arranged as to arouse suspicion that the Japanese sought to slant them in favor of the victims, while blaming Americans for inflicting the blow they had no choice but to deal. No one under the sun desires the holocaust to repeat. But this should not blind us to the responsibility of those who created the unwanted circumstances.

The current furor among many nations of East Asia over Japan's attempt to dilute references to its crimes of carnage, abuse and repression makes a definite case against the one-sided and self-justifying attitude of Japanese in interpreting and presenting the ugly past of the Japanese empire. Be it in Nanking or in Seoul or in Hiroshima, many historical records await to be straightened out by remorseful Japanese.

EPB REPORT SUMMARIZES ECONOMIC SITUATION

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 6 (YONHAP) -- An increased money supply, provided to invigorate South Korea's ailing economy in the aftermath of May's huge curb loan scandal, may threaten Korea's economic stabilization. According to an Economic Planning Board [EPB] report on monthly economic movements released Friday, the total money supply's basic monetary indicator (M2), which includes currency in circulation, demand deposits, time deposits and savings deposits, increased in July by 14.5 percent or 648.4 billion won (876.2 million U.S. dollars) from June's 457.3 billion won (618 million dollars). The figures showed a 32.5 percent rise from the level registered in the same month last year. The issuance of new currency, which had showed a moderate increase rate until June, rose by 16.3 percent in June compared with the same month last year.

According to the report, however, there are some signs that recovery is underway because the composite index of leading business indicators, which is a barometer for the economic climate two to three months ahead, rose by 2.2 percent in June, following slow but steady rises in the previous three months.

The country incurred a trade deficit of 295 million dollars in the first six months of this year, compared with the 1.9 billion dollar trade deficit in the same six month period last year. The report attributed the improvement to decreased imports.

Thanks to active overseas construction projects by Korean firms, the invisible trade deficit decreased fro 839 million dollars in the Jan.-June period last year to 131 million dollars this year, reducing the country's current account deficit from last year's 2.7 billion dollars to 724 million dollars at the end of June this year. Due to inactive capital inducement stemming from the wide gap between domestic and international interest rates, however, the overall balance of international payments registered a deficit 1.3 billion dollars, compared with 1.2 billion dollars in the first half of last year. The country's foreign exhcange holdings as of the end of June totaled more than 6.3 billion dollars, the same level at a similar time last year.

Industrial output and deliveries after seasonal adjustment in June rose by 4.3 percent and 3.5 percent, respectively, over the previous month. Although inventories decreased by 1.4 percent in June, they were still up 12.1 percent from the level of one year before. Machinery orders in June totaled 935.7 billion won (1.3 billion U.S. dollars), up 9.9 percent from the same month last year. Machinery orders from abroad in June increased by 81 percent, according to the report.

Commodity Imports Decrease

[Text] Seoul, Aug 5 (YONHAP) -- South Korea's commodity imports in the first half of this year amounted to 11.8 billion U.S. dollars, down 7.3 percent from the same period last year, the Commerce-Industry Ministry said Thursday.

Imports of raw materials for the manufacture of export goods in the six-month period amounted to 3.1 billion dollars, a mere 0.3-percent rise from the corresponding period last year. But imports for domestic consumption dropped by 9.7 percent to 8.8 billion dollars. Imports of consumer goods during the cited six-month period fell by 27.9 percent from 1.3 billion dollars last year to 920 million dollars this year. The decline in the imports of consumer goods chiefly resulted from a 44.2-percent drop in food grain imports from last year's 810 million dollars to 450 million dollars this year.

Imports of raw materials for both exports and domestic consumption were also off 6.7 percent to 5.4 billion dollars. Crude oil imports, which usually accounted for a quarter of the nation's total imports, also fell by 13.4 percent from last year's 3.4 billion dollars to 2.9 billion dollars this year, reflecting inactive production activities. Imports of machinery and other capital goods also registered a 7.6-percent decline to 2.5 billion dollars, reflecting indication of slack in new investments in production facilities.

Imports financed by private foreign loans plummeted by 75.3 percent from last year's 770 million dollars to 190 million dollars this year. This is a result of lower domestic interest rates than those available internationally, a ministry official explained. The official added that if imports go down at the current pace, the nation's trade deficits are expected to shrink from the original projection of 3.2 billion dollars to 1.5 billion dollars by the end of this year.

Tight Money Measures Planned

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 9 (YONHAP) -- South Korean Deputy Premier-Economic Planning Minister Kim Chu-song Monday directed his economic officials to take appropriate measures to withdraw currency in circulation to prevent it from upsetting the base of the country's economic stabilization.

At a meeting of leading government economic officials, the top economic policymaker expressed fear that an increased money supply since the May curb loan scandal might contribute to the threatening of stabilized commodity prices.

During the first seven months of this year, the country's commodity prices showed a moderate 3.1 percent rise (in wholesale prices) and a 4.6 percent gain (in consumer prices) at an annual rate. According to recent government statistics, however, the total money supply in the same period rose by as much as 32.5 percent to 2.6 trillion won (3.5 billion U.S. dollars) from the level of one year before.

The increased money supply has not affected commodity prices yet, but it could eventually cause an inflationary spiral, Kim said.

TSEDENBAL SENDS SUPPORT MESSAGE TO YASIR 'ARAFAT

OW101752 Ulaanbaatar MONTSAME in English 1704 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] Ulaanbaatar, August 10 (MONTSAME) -- Follows the full text of a message sent by Yu. Tsedenbal, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party, chairman of the Presidium of the Great People's Hural of the Mongolian People's Republic to Yasir 'Arafat, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Palestinian Liberation Organisation:

In these days of the historical trial for the Arab people of Palestine, I address this message to you and the entire leadership of the P.L.O. to express once again the full support by the Mongolian people and the Government of the Mongolian People's Republic of the heroic struggle of the Palestinian Arab people for their freedom and independence against the joint offensive of the Zionist reaction and the American military.

Perpetrating new brigand aggression against Lebanon, Israel and its American protectors aim first of all at the destruction of the P.L.O., physical annihilation of the Palestinian people, liquidation of the Lebanese National Patriotic Forces and also at creating an obedient puppet regime in Lebanon. Genocide against the Palestinian people and fascist type crimes on the Lebanese soil are conducted with the use of the most barbarous kinds of American weapons including chemical poisoning substances. These criminal actions are a direct outcome of the so-called strategic cooperation between Tel-Aviv and Washington.

The aggression launched by Israel against Lebanon is a component part of the global strategy of the American imperialism spearheaded against the national liberation movements and independent states occupying anti-imperialist positions. The facts show that the Reagan administration is seeking to use the situation shaped in Lebanon for a direct military interference for its mercenary motives. Washington has an object of perpetuating the occupation of a part of Lebanon and creating of a new bridgehead for the U.S. military presence in the region.

In this connection I would like to stress the great importance of the appeals of Comrade L.I. Brezhnev, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the J.S.S.R. to the president of the U.S.A. as well as of the answers of the head of the Soviet state to questions from PRAVDA concerning the Israeli aggression against the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples. The Soviet Government made a firm warning to the U.S.A. on the dangerous consequences of the military intervention in Lebanon planned by them and again advanced constructive proposals aimed at the achievement of stable settlement of the Middle East problem in the interests of peace, national independence and social progress of the Arab peoples.

Together with you we see that today as never before has increased the necessity to strengthen the unity of actions and cohesion of all honest and progressive forces of the Arab world in the struggle against Zionist and imperialist aggression for the defence of the vital interests of Arab peoples. The lessons drawn from the events in Lebanon testify to the fact that by united efforts only it is possible to frustrate far-fetched insidious plans of aggressive forces, to achieve peace and justice. We admire the heroic struggle of the Palestinian people and the PLO which gave a worthy rebuff of aggressors, set an example of courage and staunchness in upholding of the Arab peoples.

The Mongolian peole wrathfully condemns the criminal aggression of the united forces of reaction and join its voice to the demands of the peaceloving public to immediately stop bloodshed and unconditionally withdraw Israeli troops from the territory of Lebanon. A wide campaign of support of the just struggle of the Palestinian and Lebanese people is carried out in our country. At mass meetings in towns and villages combat solidarity is expressed with the heroic people of Palestine and the PLO. We are confident that no force can break the spirit and will of the Palestinian people, enjoying full support of progressive mankind. The struggle of peoples for freedom, independence and social progress is invincible.

I wish you, dear Comrade Yasir 'Arafat and in your person the heroic Palestinian people new successes in the struggle against Zionist and imperialist algression, for exercising its lawful right for freedom and national independence, for the establishment of solid and just peace in the Middle East.

VODK SCORES CONTINUED SRV TROOP REINFORCEMENTS

[Text] On 13 July, the Vietnamese enemy mustered 70 truckloads of troops and sent them northward from An Giang Province to Kampuchea, passing through Krabau and Tonloap markets along Route 2 and Takeo Province en route. The trucks stopped at Ronteas Hill. During this stop, two truckloads of Vietnamese troops jumped down from the trucks and fled back to Vietnam because they were afraid of being killed in battle. They would not fight and die in Kampuchea in the place of the Le Duan clique.

On the one hand, this report on the Vietnamese reinforcements in Kampuchea exposes the deceitful announcement of Nguyen Co Thach and the Hanoi clique that they have withdrawn some of their troops from Kampuchea in order to display Vietnam's so-called good will toward the ASEAN countries. On the other hand, this report clearly attests to the world that Vietnam has neither withdrawn nor is preparing to withdraw even a single troop from Kampuchea.

On the contrary, it has continued to send more troops to Kampuchea and has deployed troops along the Thai-Kampuchean border. This is being done in preparation for an intensification of military operations so that Vietnam can strengthen its position in Kampuchea and threaten the neighboring countries. All of this is aimed at implementing its own expansionist strategy and that of its Soviet boss in the Southeast Asian region.

SRV REQUEST FOR AIR TRANSPORT OF PLANE REJECTED

[Text] Thailand has rejected Vietnam's request to fly back the wreckage of its Soviet-built transport plane which crash-landed in the border province of Prachin Buri in February, Supreme Command spokesman Lt Gen Som Khattaphan said yesterday.

He said the government agreed that the Antonov aircraft would be returned to Vietnam and its wreckage has already been moved to U-Taphao in Sattahip to wait for Vietnamese officials to take it back by ship. Lt Gen Som said Vietnam wanted its military plane to fly into Thailand to take back the remains of the plane but "we will not allow another violation of Thai airspace."

After the government decided that the wreckage of the plane would be given back to Vietnam, the military has given the responsibility to the Foreign Ministry, he said.

The navigator of the Antonov-26 was killed in the crash-landing on Thai soil while 12 other Vietnamese airmen on board were arrested by Thai authorities. The 12 Vietnamese were later set free and returned to their homeland following an apology for the incident by Vietnam. The killed navigator was cremated in Thailand and his ashes were brought home by Vietnamese officials.

OFFICIALS STOP REPATRIATING KAMPUCHEAN REFUGEES

[Text] Thai authorities have stopped the voluntary repatriation of Kampuchean refugees from the Khao-I-Dang refugee camp following a personal appeal from Democratic Kampuchea President Prince Norodom Sihanouk, diplomatic sources revealed last night.

Some 15,000 refugees had signed up, volunteering to return to Kampuchea to join the struggle against the occupying Vietnamese Army. Most of the refugees had asked to join the Sihanouk faction of the coalition government in Sihanouk Boray (town), originally O Smach, opposite Chong Chom in Surin Province. Some 2,000 refugees had already arrived in Sihanouk Boray from Khao-I-Dang. Adding to the 5,000 original residents at the camp, this had caused serious overcrowding in Sihanouk Boray which is encircled by old mine fields laid by both the Khmer and the Vietnamese.

Prince Sihanouk, who is in Beijing, made the request in telegrams to In Tam, his personal representative on the Thai-Kampuchean border, and to Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila, a government spokesman earlier told REUTERS.

The prince said In Tam should tell Kampucheans in Khao-I-Dang camp in Aranyaprathet not to cross back into Kampuchea "because in our zone they would lack food and risk being attacked or bombarded by the Vietnamese." He asked Air Chief Marshal Sitthi to keep "Sihanoukist" Kampucheans in the camp for the time being because of lack of food and medicine at the border. ACM Sitthi has not yet replied to the telegram, the spokesman said.

Government sources earlier said that Kampucheans were free to leave the camp for the border, where the anti-Vietnamese resistance groups are based. The sources said the Thai military would provide transport for Kampucheans wanting to go to the border. But any refugees who left could not legally return to Khao-I-Dang, which houses about 38,000 Kampucheans.

About 13,000 Kampucheans in Khao-I-Dang have told camp officials recently that they want to leave for the border and about 2,000 had already gone, refugee officials said. Many planned to go to nearby, well-established border settlements controlled by guerrillas loyal to Prince Sihanouk, the officials said.

Prince Sihanouk will leave China tomorrow for a week-long visit to Yugoslavia, his official spokesman said yesterday. Khmer Rouge leader Khieu Samphan left last night for Egypt where he will stay until Thursday when he will join the prince in Yugoslavia in his capacity as vice-president and foreign affairs chief of the Democratic Kampuchean Government.

SITTHI STATEMENT MARKS 15TH ANNIVERSARY OF ASEAN

SK100817 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 1300 GMT 8 Aug 82

[Summary] Today marks the 15th anniversary of ASEAN's founding. Fifteen years ago on 8 August 1967, the then foreign minister, His Excellency Col Thanat Khoman, and the foreign ministers of Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Singapore signed the Bangkok Declaration on the establishment of ASEAN. ASEAN is the organization of the Southeast Asian people, established by the Southeast Asian people and for the Southeast Asian people. When ASEAN was newly established, no one knew how long the organization could exist. ASEAN overcame numerous obstacles and difficulties and, on several occasions, confronted political storms. However, ASEAN has survived through mutual understanding, reconciliation, perseverance and close cooperation and coordination. ASEAN has realized the values of mutual cooperation and trust. At present, ASEAN is recognized by all countries as a regional organization. ASEAN major objective is to accelerate economic growth, social and cultural progress for prosperity and peace for its five member countries and the Southeast Asian region. We are elated that economic, trade and industrial cooperation among ASEAN member countries is growing and contributing to the strengthening of ASEAN member countries' economic and social infrastructure.

"The progress and achievements of ASEAN in the past were also assisted by the countries outside the region, particularly the developed countries."

"At the present we cannot isolate ourselves from the world community. What happens outside the country affects our stability. The grouping of Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand over the past 15 years has created solidarity, stability and strength for our five nations and increased our bargaining power in our international activities. ASEAN's diplomatic success, which is well known all over the world, is the move to seek a peaceful solution through political means to the Kampuchean problem which is an immediate problem now endangering the peace, stability and prosperity of this region as a whole and of Thailand in particular.

"The ASEAN foreign ministers at their latest meeting in Singapore confirmed ASEAN's unswerving attitude that the crisis in Kampuchea can be settled only through the UN resolutions which provide a political and peaceful solution to the problem. Thailand maintains that ASEAN's actions in dealing with the Kampuchean problem conform with our national interest and stability as well as with the present government's policy, according to the policy statement presented to the Parliament on 28 March 1980."

"What Thailand and ASEAN are doing now is maintaining the effectiveness of the UN Charter. In seeking a peaceful solution to the Kampuchean problem, Thailand and ASEAN have considered the interests of all countries concerned. ASEAN has already opened the door.

"If Vietnam complies with the UN resolutions by withdrawing its troops from Kampuchea and allowing the Kampuchean people to determine their own future, the Southeast Asian nations will take the first step toward the peaceful, free and neutral Southeast Asia as prescribed in the ASEAN declaration. Thailand and the other ASEAN member countries firmly believe that ASEAN cooperation at present and in the future is the tool that can bring peace, progress and prosperity to the region eventually."

NATION REVIEW VIEWS CPT'S PRASIT, MAJOR FACTIONS

BK100219 Bangkik NATION REVIEW in English 9 Aug 82 p 4

[Text] Former labour activist Prasit Taphianthong, who was elected new secretary of the trouble-plagued Communist Party of Thailand (CPT) last month, is said to be the "least conservative among the conservatives" now in power in the outlawed party.

At the age of 57, Prasit is considered the youngest of all the seven remaining members of the previous Politburo of the CPT. The election of Prasit as the new boss of the pro-China party marked an end to the long-awaited "fourth congress" which was held more than 20 years after the last one in 1961.

Prasit, according to well-informed sources, had identified himself with a faction within the Politburo which included the late secretary general, Charoen Wan-ngam, and former Second Deputy Secretary General Thong Chaemsi. The sources said this faction was believed to have maintained a more independent line of thinking than the other two pro-Beijing factions in the Politburo.

The two pro-China factions, which were also at times at odds with each other, were led by former First Deputy Secretary General Wirat Angkhathawon and former Politburo member Damri Ruangsutham, who is now being detained in Bangkok after his arrest last year. Following Damri's arrest, Wirat was able to exert a higher degree of influence within the party.

The death of Charoen in Beijing in 1979 also forced Prasit to strike a "compromise" with Wirat to safeguard his own survival in the party's hierarchy. "This is one of the reasons why Prasit's rise to power was not opposed by Wirat," said one of the sources.

Unlike Wirat, who has strong connections with the Chinese, Prasit could well be said to be "a purer Thai" and was naturally the less controversial choice in the midst of strong criticism against the CPT's dependence on China.

The rising discontent among the "more progressive elements" within the party's rank-and-file over the CPT's steadfastness in its revolution strategy also tipped the scale in favour of Prasit. "Though he is definitely not the most liberal of all the Politburo members, Prasit seems to be more acceptable than others," the source said.

Prasit, therefore, was viewed by many as a compromising choice "more to pacify the growing dissidence among the liberal party members," another source said.

Prasit was a better known labour activist during the period of 1950's in the labour union of the Thailand Tobacco Monopoly -- a hotbed of labour activists at the time. His contemporary colleagues included Damri and Si Nothai who later also became members of the CPT after a series of purge of the leftists during the dictatorial Sarit regime.

The three joined hands to found the so-called "Saha Achiwa Movement" -- a powerful labour group -- during the period around 1957. According to available records, Prasit took his first trip to China in 1960 to study at the Marx-Lenin Institute in Beijing until 1967.

After his return to Bangkok, Prasit began his underground work until Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat came to power. He fled into the jungle in Ubon Ratchathani before moving to the headquarters of the outlawed party in the north. From then on, Prasit, who was known by his nom de guerre of "Comrade Sin or Hong," has been in charge of theoretical and propaganda fields of the party. "He is best known as a theoretician," said a source who claimed to have good acquaintanceship of Prasit.

Prasit, however, did not rise to power without any rivalry. Thong Chaemsi, another prominent member of the Politburo, also stood out as a likely choice to lead the party out of its present mess.

Thong was said by many to be equally acceptable to the liberal elements in the party. "Thong is believed to be more open-minded and responsive," said the source.

He said Thong was put in charge of affairs of the party following Charoen's death. But because of his Vietnamese origin, he did not command the trust a leader should. Thong reportedly became under increasing pressure from the pro-Beijing factions within the party and complained frequently that he wanted to call it quits.

With Prasit now at the helm, the leadership of the outlawed party, whose popularity has never suffered a more severe attack, is likely set to try to heal the splits that are threatening its whole structure.

Several regional blocs of the CPT, particularly those commanding the fighting forces in the south and northeast, have already made known their intention to break away if no visible changes in the party's strategy appear in the near future.

They claimed that the fourth congress has produced no tangible changes in the power structure within the party and that those who are now in power "had been fixed beforehand."

Sources with access to the party said last week that the mass defections of students and intellectuals from the party dealt a heavy blow to the liberal elements who did stay behind to fight for positive changes.

"Things could have been different if the students and the intellectuals had not deserted the party," observed one of the sources. "The conservative members could have been purged in the election."

The sources claimed that the powerful regional blocs, led partly by an influential regional commander, Suwit Niamsa or Comrade Yut, have already submitted an ultimatum with the newly-elected Politburo.

"They want a new election or they split," they said.

The challenge could not have come at a worse time for Prasit. The sources said Prasit will have to try to pacify the dissident members and at the same time satisfy the leadership of which he is a party.

But with things as they are now, there is no way he will be able to make both sides equally happy.

"Whatever course of action he decides to take, he knows a compromise will be difficult," the sources said.

CROP REPLACEMENT PROGRAM -- Thailand is expected to get additional assistance from the United Nations for its crop replacement program soon. The additional contribution will enable Thailand to expand the project to 40 more villages in the north. This will bring the total number of villages that come under the project to about 80. The crop replacement program is aimed at encouraging hill tribesmen in the north of Thailand to grow other income-producing crops instead of opium poppy. According to the Thai secretary general of the Narcotics Control Board, international institutions have shown their interest to adopt this project in Pakistan following the success in Thailand. NHAN DAN URGES REVIEW OF ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES

[NHAN DAN 9 August editorial: "Review Economic Activities"]

[Text] Revolutionary theories are drawn from realities of the revolution and they, in turn, serve as guidelines for revolutionary actions. Realities of socialist construction in our country are very diverse. The task of reviewing these realities regularly and periodically, analyzing activities deeply in all aspects, pointing out strongpoints and shortcomings, and bringing forth lessons of experience and developing them into theories is of great significance to the task of leading and directing the revolution. The fifth party congress made important reviews in all spheres.

The congress also pointed to the need to continue reviewing past economic activities in order to devise, on the basis of lessons and practical experience, appropriate and correct viewpoints and policies and realistic and suitable forms.

To implement the congress resolutions, the party Central Committee Secretariat has instructed all sectors and echelons to continue reviewing economic activities from 1975 to 1981 in order to perfect their past activities and draw lessons from experience characterized by viewpoints and principles related to the policies for economic transformation and construction and for socioeconomic organization and management in support of the work program of the central level during its current term of office and, in the longer term, to prepare for the holding of the sixth party congress.

Review activities will be carried out through many steps with specific requirements and contents for each time period. As an immediate step, between now and the end of 1982, all sectors and echelons must, despite the need to carry out a large volume of urgent work, concentrate forces on reviewing a number of specific issues related to economic viewpoints and policies and to organization and management in order to support the implementation of the 1981-85 5-year plan and the 1983 plan, and further improve upon economic management and the planning of the national economy. The contents of review work consist of five categories of the most important and pressing problems which are closely interrelated. First, there are a number of problems concerning economic organization in the fields of production, investment in capital construction and consumption; the development of agriculture with attention focused on grain and food; the distribution of labor and the building of new economic zones; the development of industry, especially the consumer goods industry; exports; and communications and transport. Second is the implementation of the resolutions of the sixth plenum of the Fourth VCP Central Committee on developing production, improving economic management, renovating planning work at the grassroots level and decentralizing management to the local authorities. Third is the implementation of resolution No 26 and directive No 109 of the Political Bureau on distribution and circulation. Fourth is the transformation of agriculture, industry and commerce in the south and the consolidation of the production relations in the north. Fifth is the issue of building the district level.

Having reviewed these issues, in 1983 we will continue to review other issues concerning construction, economic transformation and the system of economic management with better quality and greater attention. The party Central Committee has pointed out that the basis of economic reviews is the party's lines, including the general line and the economic line, which are manifested in the resolutions of the fourth and fifth party congresses.

We must use reality and the results of the implementation of a line as the basis to evaluate the application of that line. Reviews should be carried out by every sector and echelon and they should review issues that are under their responsibility. It is necessary for us to determine what is right and correct and what is wrong through reviews so that we can overcome all immediate difficulties to step up production, restore socialist order and stabilize the situation while creating important changes in all economic and social activities to help advance our revolutionary cause.

We have carried out economic transformation and development within the framework of the sharp struggle between the socialist and capitalist paths, as well as within the framework of the struggle against the multifaceted war of sabotage waged by the Beijing expansionists and hegemonists with the support of the U.S. imperialists. Therefore, reviewing economic activities should also be carried out within the framework of these struggles in order to be able to analyze the nature of various problems, determine the principles of socialist economic management for the transitional period, and clarify the party's line on socialist transformation and construction.

Meanwhile, through reviews of the movement for productive labor and the movement for progressive models, every sector, echelon and unit should determine how to implement scrupulously such slogans as: Leadership by the party, management by the state, and mastery by the people; the state and the people work together, the central and local authorities work together; and combine the three interests harmoniously.

The moving force that encourages the mass revolutionary movement in the present stage is the need to make every issue clear. Together with the political indoctrination drive to study and understand thoroughly the resolutions of the fifth party congress, reviewing economic activities is an important objective of the work to prepare for the second round of the party congresses at all levels.

By firmly grasping the party Central Committee's views on leadership to review economic activities satisfactorily, all sectors and echelons will be able further to improve their leadership and management capabilities.

PACIFIC FORUM LEADERS MEET IN NEW ZEALAND

AFP Outlines Issues

[Excerpts] Rotorua, New Zealand, Aug. 8 (AFP) -- by Ray Lilley -- The dumping of nuclear waste in the Pacific could cause more concern for South Pacific Forum nations than French nuclear testing.

Leaders of the 13 Pacific nations starting a two-day meeting here tomorrow have already expressed concern over nuclear dumping proposals for the Pacific region from both Japan and the United States. A senior Australian Government spokesman tonight told journalists there was "general concern" over the prospect of any nuclear dumping in the ocean or on deserted Pacific islands. Observers recall that the Japanese are seeking approval for the dumping of low-grade nuclear waste in deep Pacific trenches, and the United States has plans for dumping everything from scrapped nuclear submarines to general nuclear wastes.

Forum host, New Zealand Prime Minister Robert Muldoon, siad the United States refusal to sign the Law of the Sea conference agreement had also stirred considerable comment when Pacific leaders held their "retreat" to discuss issues before the formal talks begin. The senior Australian Government spokesman said Pacific leaders were "concerned" at the U.S. move and what might result.

Meanwhile, about 50 anti-nuclear protesters today demonstrated outside the forum centre with banners such as "Stop nuclear war games," "French radiate death; Pacific people mourn," "Remember Hiroshima, Nagasaki; Disarm now."

The countries taking part in the forum here are Australia, Cook Islands, Fiji, Kiribati, Nauru, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Solomon Islands, Tonga, Tuvalu, Vanuatu, Western Samoa and the Federated States of Micronesia.

Vanuatu is to ask South Pacific states to support it in having French-ruled New Caledonia placed on the United Nations Decolonisation Committee's list of 24 territories to be decolonised. Vanuatu Prime Minister Father Walter Lini said a draft resolution of the issue would be put to the heads of government of the forum nations tomorrow. "New Caledonia should become independent and Vanuatu is prepared to say it should happen immediately," he said, adding there should be a timetable for independence drawn up, "perhaps including some schedule for political power to be transferred to New Caledonia." Vanuatu wanted "more than just social and cultural changes" in the French-controlled territory.

"We fear further delay in decolonising New Caledonia and Tahiti will mean confusion and exploitation by outside powers who wait for these opportunities to arise in the (Pacific) region. Every member of the forum believes independence in New Caledonia is coming very, very soon. What is not clear is whether France can be persuaded to make it happen much more quickly," he said.

Report on Communique

[Text] Rotorua, Aug. 10 (AFP) -- by Ray Lilley -- The 13-nation South Pacific Forum, which has just wound up a three-day conference here, was united in attacking U.S. marine resources policy, French nuclear testing and Japanese plans to dump nuclear waste in the Pacific and to link its aid with fisheries access.

On the positive side, it agreed to provide 12 million U.S. dollars to help the Pacific Forum Shipping Line and had nearly resolved a Pacific airfare dispute.

Strongest criticism was levelled at the United States for its refusal to sign the Law of the Sea convention, and to recognise the rights of the small South Pacific nation states to exclusive exploitation of their skipjack tuna resources in their 200-mile economic zones. The United States was also attacked for threatening Papua New Guinea (PNG) after it seized an eight million dollar U.S. trawler found fishing in PNG waters. It was the forum's first strong criticism of U.S. policy in recent years.

The forum states unanimously rejected Japanese plans to dump nuclear waste in the Pacific, although Japan had said it would only dump the "low grade" waste if all the forum states agreed. But the conference's final communique restated members' "grave concern at the possible environmental hazards in the event of the Pacific becoming an international dumping ground for nuclear wastes", and issued a warning aimed also at the United States "not to store or dump nuclear wastes in the Pacific."

It strongly condemned French nuclear testing at its underground Mururoa Atoll site, as well as France's "failure to provide full details" of the effects of its testing.

But France earned praise from forum states for reform moves in its New Caledonia territory, and rejected a Vanuatu proposal to ask the French at the United Nations to withdraw their administration from the colony, as "counterproductive". The forum governments, although split on the issue, ended with a concensus hope that France "would continue the reform process" and "work closely with the kanak (native) people in formulating a political programme for a peaceful transition to independence."

Vanuatu Prime Minister Father Walter Lini accused Chairman and New Zealand Prime Minister Robert Muldoon of creating divisions by his remark that the New Caledonian Independence Front did not represent all the people of the territory, just as the Palestine Liberation Organisation does not represent all the Palestinian people. Father Lini said that: "The Independence Front represents seven political parties which have worked for many years to try and get New Caledonia to be independent. As such we do not consider the independence front a PLO."

The conference warned big fishing nations to stop trying to tie their aid grants to Pacific island states to fishing zone access licenses, but named only Japan.

It also agreed to provide 12 million U.S. dollars capital for the financially ailing Pacific Forum Shipping Line to allow it to take up a European Investment Bank loan of 5.1 million U.S. dollars for the purchase of fifteen hundred containers. Container and equipment hire is the single biggest factor causing the line losses of millions of dollars a year.

The conference also ended by agreeing on a full study to work out "an effective and competitive air transport system" for the regions served by five competing airlines, a near-solution to the Pacific air fare war.

Forum heads of government reached consensus agreement on all but the decolonisation issue, which promises to be a festering sore in the South Pacific region.

Remarks by Area Leaders

[Excerpts] Rotorua, Aug. 9 (AFP) -- by Ray Lilley -- The South Pacific Forum's 13 nations are to tell the United States it should sign the Law of the Sea convention, Prime Minister Robert Muldoon of New Zealand said here today. Speaking in his capacity as forum chairman, Mr Muldoon said the South Pacific countries holding a two-day session here felt it "unreasonable" of Washington to have spent years negotiating it and refusing to adopt it.

"Our view (New Zealand's) is very strong," said Mr Muldoon. The fishing aspects of the Law of the Sea were far more important to the South Pacific region than they were to any other area of the globe. He said there was a suggestion the United States had de facto agreed to the fisheries aspect of the convention by agreeing to the licencing of tuna fishing boats by various countries. "That clearly is a move in the right direction if they're prepared to accept licensing -- if they're prepared to accept ownership of a highly migratory species, even though they do not formally recognise that," he said.

Forum spokesman President Teremiah Tabai of Kiribati said members had also agreed there "was no reputable scientific evidence to show nuclear waste dumping was not harmful." He said all the forum states were "very concerned" about proposals from both Japan and the U.S. to dump their waste in the Pacific region. Mr Muldoon said Japan had "said they won't proceed until they have general approval of their neighboring states." Asked whether the forum would not buy nuclear dumping in any form, Mr Muldoon said he would not put such emphasis on it. "The forum is not happy with it, and the Japanese say if the neighbouring states are not happy, they're not going to proceed with it."

Meanwhile, Fijian Prime Minister Raur Sir Kamisese Mara told the 13 France had taken the first formal steps towards New Caledonian independence with reforms recently introduced in the territory. Mr Muldoon said the feeling of Pacific states was that "independence will come at much earlier date than anyone thought possible even 12 months ago."

Question: By 1984? "Well, that kind of thing. This talk is current and comes from discussions the prime minister of Fiji has had with the high commissioner and others in his role as representative of the forum to France.

"Last year I said I believed that 20 years from now both French Polynesia and New Caledonia would be independent. But it seems pretty obvious that New Caledonia will be independent long before that. The position of French Polynesia is much different because of the French nuclear testing," Mr Muldoon said.

He (?thought) it was unlikely that former French territories like New Caledonia could become full members of the forum because they did not have a system of government similar to that of the other 13 forum states.

Fraser on Australian Aid

BK091330 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0500 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Australia is to provide South Pacific countries with $300 million in aid funds over the next 5 years. The Australian prime minister, Mr Fraser, outlined the aid program today at a news conference during a break in the opening session of the South Pacific Forum at Rotorua in New Zealand. The new scheme will replace an existing 3-year program and will substantially increase Australian assistance to the region.

Mr Fraser said the Pacific received $44 million from Australia in 1981-82. Under the new program, the figure should be $69 million a year but the exact total will not be known until the budget speech in Australian Parliament on 17 August. The Australian prime minister said the longer term of the new scheme would allow island countries to plan further ahead. The funding would go to bilateral programs and assistance to regional bodies like the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Cooperation, known as SPEC, and the South Pacific Commission.

Mr Fraser also outlined two specific programs for regional aid. He said Australia would provide the ailing Pacific Forum Line with $2.3 million over 2 years to buy containers and new equipment for its regional shipping service. As well, Australia, on an equal basis with New Zealand, will fund feeder shipping services to Kiribati and Tuvalu. This is expected to cost the two donor countries $300,000 a year each.

[In a later report on Fraser's press conference, Melbourne Radio at 0830 GMT on 9 August added: "Mr Fraser also called today on the United States to do all it could to end the conflict in Lebanon and said Australia would provide $10 million for the reconstruction of Beirut. The prime minister said Australia was asking other developed countries to make similar contributions and the government would attempt to mobilize Australia's Jewish community to use its influence against Israel's invasion. He said Israel's use of its formidable strength in Beirut long after it had achieved its initially declared objective was short-sighted and foolish. By the continuation of its present policy, Israel was serving its own inerests and those of the region very badly. Mr Fraser said there could be no solution to the problem of the region by destruction, killing and war. He also said the United States had already been informed of his statement."]

FRASER COMMENTS FURTHER ON U.S. ROLE IN LEBANON

[Text] The Australian prime minister, Mr Fraser, is back in Canberra after a 10-day overseas trip in which he visited Malaysia, China, the Philippines and New Zealand where he attended the South Pacific Forum meeting. At an airport press conference, Mr Fraser elaborated on his statement of yesterday that the United States should take action on the situation in Lebanon. Mr Fraser said there were many measures that America could take. However, he stopped short of suggesting that the United States should end its arms sale to Israel. He said that would be the ultimate reaction.

Opposition Leader's Support

[Text] In Sydney today, the opposition leader, Mr Hayden, told leaders of the Jewish community he agreed with Mr Fraser that Israel had gone too far in Lebanon. Mr Hayden said the Labor Party applauded the prime minister's condemnation of Israel and supported his international initiatives to end the violence.

Later, the head of the largest Jewish organization in Australia said most Australian Jews supported Israel's action in Lebanon. The president of the Executive Council of Australian Jewry, Dr (Yarkim Schneeweis), was speaking after the meeting with Mr Hayden.

Sinai Force Withdrawal Urged

[Text] The opposition spokesman on foreign affairs, Mr Bowen, says Australia should withdraw its units from the Sinai peace-keeping force if Israel does not agree to an immediate halt to its military actions in Lebanon. Mr Bowen says that compared to deaths, injuries, suffering and destruction inflicted by Israeli forces in Lebanon, the Fraser government's offer of $10 million for reconstruction was a token gesture.

He said it would have been more practical for the Australian government to have indicated very firmly to the United States that unless Israel was compelled to stop its mass destruction in Lebanon, Australia would withdraw from the American-sponsored force in the Sinai.

MOKHTAR: DIALOGUE WITH SRV SHOULD CONTINUE

SK101716 Jakarta Domestic Service in Indonesian 1500 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] Foreign Minister Mokhtar Kusumaatmaja returned home this evening from a visit to Thailand and Brunei which began 6 August. Radio Republik Indonesia reporter Arif Hartoyo reported from the Halim Perdanakusuma International Airport in Jakarta as follows:

On his return at the Halim Perdanakusuma International Airport in Jakarta at 1920 today, Minister Mokhtar briefed newsmen on his official visit to Brunei.

[Begin recording] I just returned from a 2-day official visit to Brunei. It was a good will visit. I met Brunei leaders, and was received by His Highness Sultan Pangiran Bolkiah, Chief Minister Aziz and other officials.

As you know, the sultan of Brunei visited Indonesia last year and just recently a Brunei parliamentary delegation led by its speaker also visited us. This exchange of visits by Brunei and Indonesian leaders has been made so that they can get to know each other, which is important since Brunei becomes independent at the end of 1983 [end recording]

Prior to his Brunei visit, Minister Mokhtar attended an ASEAN foreign ministers meeting in Bangkok, Thailand, on 7 August, discussing the problem of settling the Kampuchean conflict. On the same occasion, Minister Mokhtar also briefed newsmen in the capital on the ASEAN foreign ministers discussions in Bangkok.

[Begin recording] Briefly speaking, the ASEAN foreign ministers believe that the substance of the visit of Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach showed no change in the Vietnamese attitude. It is still far apart from the ASEAN attitude which seeks a political solution to the Kampuchean problem based on the withdrawal of all Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea and granting the Kampuchean people the right of self-determination free from outside pressure.

Nevertheless, the direct talks between the Vietnamese foreign minister and those of ASEAN, in this case the foreign ministers of Singapore, Malaysia and Thailand, were useful in the sense that they were frank. Indeed, it would be too much to expect that such a complicated issue like Kampuchea could be settled through a single discussion. [end recording]

In the end, the minister said that the dialogue nevertheless was the beginning of an exchange of views leading to a settlement, and it should be continued.

INDONESIA TIMES COMMENTS ON COMING MPR SESSION

[Editorial: "Two Vital Possibilities During the MPR Session"]

[Text] The speaker of parliament, Daryatmo, stated to the press on Monday that the forthcoming session of the MPR (People's Consultative Assembly), tentatively scheduled for March, 1983, would be a milestone in the nation's history since it would decide on the main outlines of state policy for the next five years and elect the president and the vice-president. And besides, according to Daryatmo, there are two possibilities which cannot be ruled out: First, the forthcoming MPR session may adopt a resolution ending the practice of filling one third of the assembly's seats with appointed members. Second, the session may decide to hold a nationwide referendum on the application of Article 37 of the 1945 Constitution.

Actually these two questions are very touchy and sensitive questions. Both of them are closely inter-related.

As we know, the new order and the armed forces are irrevocable committed to the defence and maintenance of Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution and against any attempt by the extreme right or extreme left or any group to change and alter the state philosophy of Pancasila and the 1945 Constituion. For instance, our recent general elections, like other elections previous to these, were held on the basis of preserving and implementing Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution. It has become a national consensus to maintain and preserve Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution, but Article 37 of the Constitution provides for modifications of the Constitution. It reads as follows: "To modify the Constitution, there must be present at least two-thirds of the total members of the People's Consultative Assembly (sect. 1). Decision shall be made in concurrence with at least two-thirds of the total members who are present" (sect. 2).

In order to prevent modification and change in the Constitution, especially its preamble which contains Pancasila, the government must always be assured of a two-thirds majority in the MPR. So far, Golkar and appointed members assure the government of the two-thirds majority and more. So the appointment of one-third of the members is part of a mechanism to prevent the Constitution from being modified and altered. It is also a device to represent one of the most vital groups in the society which is not entitled to participate in the elections, namely the armed forces.

Now if the MPR session will adopt a resolution ending the practice of filling one-third of the assembly's seats with appointed members, some other means will have to be found that the Constitution will not be modified or changed. That would be for the MPR to hold a nationwide referendum on the application of Article 37 of the 1945 Constitution. For instance, to make it clear that our state philosophy of Pancasila is not subject to modification, change and replacement.

Some time ago, President Suharto suggested such a nationwide referendum on the application of Article 37 of the Constitution, of course if the MPR so decides.

Actually we are in a fix. To let Article 37 discharge its function will open the way for modification, amendment and alteration of the Constitution which is against our determination to keep the Constitution intact and to preserve it as it is. On the other hand, to delete the article means to modify the Constitution. Maybe the session of the MPR will be able to find a way of ensuring that Article 37 cannot be used to harm our fundamental principles of Pancasila, Musyawarah and Mufakat, economic democracy, economic structure based on brotherhood and cooperatives etc. And this way out will be placed before the people for their approval through a nationwide referendum.

Many honest and sincere people feel that membership of the MPR by appointment does not fit well with our democratic system. If the MPR succeeds in finding a way out, the appointment system can be abolished and our democratic system deriving from Pancasila democracy will be further improved.

MRS MARCOS INDUCTED INTO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

OW101421 Quezon City RPN Televiswon Network in English 1100 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] The president is expected to complete the 15-member composition of the Executive Committee in the very near future. The president gave this indication in brief remarks during the induction of four newly appointed members of the Executive Committee.

President Marcos made it clear today that the successor to the president in case of his disability or death is the Executive Committee headed by the prime minister. There are now 11 members of the Executive Committee, three of whom recently appointed took oaths of office before the president today. They were the First Lady and Human Settlements Minister Mrs Imelda Marcos, (Mindanao) new Governor (Ali di Marborro) representing the Muslim region, and Assemblyman (Renaldo Somorra) representing the youth. Philippines Sugar Commission Chairman (Roberto S. Benedicto), representing the Visayas and the private sector, has also been appointed. Other members of the committee include Prime Minister Cesar Virata, Deputy Premier Jose Rono, Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile, Industry Minister Roberto Ongpin, Budget Minister Manuel Alba, Cebu Governor (Eduardo Goulyas) and Assemblyman (Emmanuel Kalayas).

In his brief remarks, the chief executive said he intends to fill up vacancies in the 15-man Executive Committee very soon.

[Begin Marcos recording] It is my intention to implement, (?to fill), the membership so that as many men and women in government who [words indistinct] to take over the reins of government at any given time. And so, while we have not yet filled the entire membership of 15, we expect that very soon this will be done. At the same time, in the event of any untoward incidents that may happen to the president, it is the Executive Committee that calls a special election to replace the president. [end recording]

TIMES JOURNAL ON ECONOMIC PROBLEMS, TERROR PLOT

[Editorial: "Our Ailments Aren't of Our Own Making"]

[Text] It is tragic that despite efforts by the government to restore full democratic rights to the people, a number of recalcitrants, abetted by overly ambitious politicians, secessionists, die-hard subversives and revolutionists and misled liberals, would seek to downgrade, if not destroy, the foundations upon which the new society stands.

The move was subtly prepared and timed.

The Philippine economy, like the economies of other Third World (developing and under-developed) countries, has been hard hit by inflation, recession and high interest rates. To this has been added the severe protectionist policies adopted and implemented by most of the highly industrialized Western countries, policies which would stunt further growth of our young industries, if not kill them.

Add to this the increasing number of unemployed and one has a unpalatable broth that Filipinos from all levels of society would find hard to swallow.

It is this very situation, precipitated by international developments attributed largely to the spiralling cost of oil and its effects on the budgets of developing and under-developed nations, that the Philippine Government must resolve and hurdle.

The truth becomes more apparent with a recent report from the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) which says that economic growth in the Third World has come to a virtual standstill and developing nations' economies face their worst crisis since the 1930's.

In plain words the UNCTAD said that high interest rates and recession in the industrialized countries have all but negated the advantages of increased exports and better farm output by developing countries in recent years. The slower growth has led to increased urban unemployment in several developing countries and social tensions and instability could increase if the crisis continues, the UNCTAD added.

Have the secessionists, revolutionaries, subversives, misled liberals and disgruntled politicians taken advantage of this situation in the Philippines to plot a conspiracy of terror involving assassination of ranking government officials, a series of bombing attacks and a nationwide violent demonstration next month?

If so, why should they blame the government for a situation not of its own making -- a situation that began as a result of warring groups in the Middle East supported by highly industrialized Western states, busy selling arms and raking in dollars from hiked oil prices, and the subtle ideologues furthering their aims in an effort to expand their sphere of influence?

President Marcos had reason to be angry. He also had reason to issue stern warning to those who would subvert the government.

Filipinos should consider the international aspects that led to the gradual erosion of Philippine economy as well as the economies of other Third World countries. They would better understand why it is necessary to help the administration find remedies to ease the hardships of the people.

Violence will never solve the problem. It could result, instead, in the shackling of the Filipino people by a totalitarian government alien to the Filipino way of life and the stifling of all right to dissent forever.

BUSINESS DAY REVIEWS ASEAN'S PURPOSES, GROWTH

HK110158 Manila BUSINESS DAY in English 10 Aug 82 p 11

[Two-part feature by reporter Abrino Aydinan: "ASEAN's Growth Reviewed -- Part I"]

[Text] The Association of Southeast Asian Nations marked its 15th anniversary last Sunday with, as in previous anniversaries, scarcely a whisper of celebration in the five ASEAN capitals. The average man in the street could not care less about the event, if he even knew at all what ASEAN is all about.

But no matter. Consciously or not, ASEAN's total population of more than 264 million have cast their lots with the 15-year-old proposition for regional integration -- their national political leaderships have made the decision for them.

Indeed, doubts raised in some conscious ASEAN quarters are not so much on the need for the organization as over the kind of ASEAN that will best respond to the need. In the final analysis, as the region's statesmen are so painfully aware, the relevance of the regional vision hinges on how it touches the lives of the people: how it can help deliver food to millions of hungry mouths and provide solutions to other age-old social problems.

Basic issue: Whether ASEAN is serving to cure the common afflictions which each member state cannot hope to overcome singly or whether it merely imposes new problems extraneous to national concerns, appears to be a basic issue which has impelled the private sector to call for a "review of ASEAN's fundamental purpose." ASEAN businessmen think the organization has been distracted from its original goal to evolve a regional economic community not unlike the European Economic Community. They charge that the progress of ASEAN cooperation has been wittingly or unwittingly steered into politics by its politically oriented leaders and is veering on military concerns (which is officially abhorred by ASEAN) at the expense of economic undertakings. Filipino businessmen have suggested that the running of ASEAN affairs should be left ultimately to economic ministers rather than foreign affairs ministers, who, they think, have shown inability to "get the ASEAN economic community off square one." Against this background, the ASEAN ministerial meeting -- the council of the foreign affairs ministers which is the highest policy-making regular organ in ASEAN's structure -- last June decided to create a task force to study the progress, goals and assumptions of the organization.

Political: ASEAN officials and foreign observers agree that the cause of regional unity and cooperation has gained more headway in the political field than in any other, with the five noncommunist Southeast Asian countries' struggle against Vietnamese advance in the region as the focus. ASEAN, campaigning as a solid front in international fora, has repeatedly kept the government in control in Kampuchea away from that country's seat in the United Nations assembly. Although the international conference on the Kampuchean problem, whose organization ASEAN spearheaded, did not bring the conflict in the region any nearer to solution, ASEAN has apparently gone some way in getting Vietnamese response after its recent success in bringing together mutually hostile Khmer guerrilla factions and installing respected Prince Norodom Sihanouk at the head of a Kampuchea coalition government.

Amidst the world recession the ASEAN countries last year sustained the highest economic growth rate of any region in the world -- although it is doubtful whether such an accomplishment could be considered a result of regional cooperation.

SAKURAUCHI: TEXTBOOKS MUST REFLECT 'DEEP REGRET'

OW120935 Tokyo KYODO in English 0923 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Tokyo, Aug 12, KYODO -- Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi said Thursday Japan's school textbooks should reflect the country's deep regret about the military occupation of Korea between 1910 and 1945. If they do not reflect such regret at present, the government should do something to correct the situation without delay, Sakurauchi said at a news conference.

He said "deep regret" was expressed in a 1965 Japan-South Korea joint communique issued at the end of prolonged negotiations to restore diplomatic relations between Tokyo and Seoul.

Statement to ROK

OW111257 Tokyo KYODO in English 1249 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Tokyo, Aug 11, KYODO -- The government will express its "sincere efforts" in a statement to South Korea Friday to settle the current growing dispute over Japan's revised school textbooks which Koreans say "distorted" Japan's military activities in Korea before and during World War II.

The sources said the government gesture is aimed at calming down South Korea's anti-Japan public sentiment that has been building up toward the August 15 anniversary of its national liberation from Japan's 35-year colonial rule in 1945.

The sources said the statement will be issued by Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi or Chief Cabinet Secretary Kiichi Miyazawa.

Film on China War Approved

OW111201 Tokyo KYODO in English 1100 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 11, KYODO -- The Education Ministry now recommends that public school students ought to see a movie jointly produced by Japanese and Chinese which unequivocally depicts the Sino-Japanese war as an act of Japanese aggression in China. The ministry's appreciation, which contradicts its unbending stand on the textbook revision issue, was made known to the parties concerned Wednesday.

Attention had been focused on how the ministry assesses the film, following criticism by China and South Korea of the ministry's revised history textbooks which describe Japanese "aggression" in those countries during and before World War II as a mere "advance."

The film, tentatively titled "The Game Yet Finished," vividly describes mass atrocities and pillage committed by the former Japanese Army against Chinese, and gives the exact number of Chinese victims. It was co-produced by Yasuyoshi Tokuma, president of the Toko Tokuma Production Co., and Wang Yang of the Beijing Film Studio as the first joint work to commemorate the 10th anniversary of restored diplomatic relations between the two countries.

The film starts with a scene of a Japanese "go" player fighting his Chinese rival. The son of the Chinese falls into love with the daughter of the Japanese, but their romance is destroyed by the scars of war. It is to be released in Japan by Toho Co. through its theaters throughout the country in mid-September.

The majority members of a screening division of an advisory organ to the Education Ministry praised the film as an educationally-recommended one after a preview August 5. Supporters then separating the textbook controversy from the film world, emphasized that the movie places high values on peace and love of mankind.

Education Minister Heiji Ogawa later endorsed their appraisal.

If a film is recommended as in this case by the Education Ministry, teachers are allowed to take their students to theaters as part of civics education.

SAKURAUCHI MEETS PLO REPRESENTATIVE IN TOKYO

OW120633 Tokyo KYODO in English 0621 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 12, KYODO -- Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi criticized Israel for its military incursion into Lebanon at a meeting Thursday with Fathi Abdul Hamid, director of the Tokyo office of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and representatives of the Arab diplomatic corps in Tokyo. This was the first official meeting between a Japanese foreign minister and a PLO representative present with members of the Arab diplomatic group.

The meeting held at the Foreign Ministry indicated Japan was taking an increasingly pro-Arab diplomatic stand on the Middle East situation. Sakurauchi criticized Israel for its military attacks in Lebanon and called for immediate suspension of such actions, while saying that the PLO should sit as a key party in talks for a settlement of the Middle East dispute. Hamid appreciated U.S. Mid East Envoy Philip Habib's mediation efforts which he said took the Lebanese and PLO positions into account.

When requested that Japan should make efforts internationally for recognition of the PLO, Sakurauchi said Japan's stand giving importance to the PLO remained unchanged. The Arab envoys asked Japan to make political efforts for a settlement of the Middle East conflict and not merely take a bystander's attitude. Sakurauchi said Japan would continue its efforts to make Israel suspend its military actions in the forum of the United Nations.

Present at the meeting were Hamid and the ambassadors of Syria, Iraq and Sudan.

MANIFESTO FROM RED ARMY LEADER RECEIVED FROM BEIRUT

OW120129 Tokyo KYODO in English 0058 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 12, KYODO -- Four Japanese magazines and leftist newspapers have received copies of a 20,000-word manifesto penned by Fusako Shigenobu, 36-year-old leader of the Japanese Red Army, in Beirut at the end of June. The document, written in a cramped hand on 19 pages of report paper, is dated June 28, but was mailed July 21 in Milan, Italy.

Authorities say the manifesto is the first known publication by the Red Army, headquartered in Lebanon, since the Israeli invasion of the Middle Eastern country. The Red Army's two regular publications, the Japanese-language JINMIN TSUSHIN and the English-language SOLIDARITY, have not been published since the Israeli assault began.

A letter to the editors accompanying the manuscript apologizes for the haste with which it was written in the besieged Lebanese capital. The text itself is full of reference to the confusion and grim state of Beirut in the face of Israeli attacks.

Yasuhisa Tazaki, editor of CONVERSATIONS magazine, said his publication will carry the full text in several installments. "It's a fine indictment of the inhumanity of Zionist Israel," Tazaki said, adding Shigenobu apparently asked a Japanese leaving Beirut to mail the document for her.

In the document, the radical leader calls on Japanese anti-nuclear and pro-disarmament demonstrators to support the "inextinguishable Palestinian movement."

MITSUBISHI TO EXPORT BORING MACHINES TO PRC

OW120628 Tokyo KYODO in English 0551 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 12, KYODO -- Mitsubishi Heavy Industries Ltd. said Thursday it has received a 370 million yen ($1.4 million) order for three boring machines from the China National Technical Corporation for delivery in October.

The company said the machines, capable of both slant and vertical boring, will be used to construct main railway bridges for a railway line to be built between Beijing and Quinhuangdo to facilitate coal transportation from a mine in Shanxi Province. It is one of five construction projects China is promoting with yen loans from the governmental Overseas Economic Cooperation Fund. Mitsubishi, with a more than 50 percent of the domestic boring machine market, said this is the first export of such machines to China.

MACHINERY EXPORTS DECREASE IN FIRST HALF YEAR

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 12, KYODO -- Japan's machinery exports in the first half of this year decreased 4.3 percent from the year-earlier level to $47,843.7 million on a customs clearance basis, the Japan Machinery Exporters Association announced Thursday.

The association blamed the decline on a combination of various factors, including the global recession, decreased oil revenue in oil producing countries, swelling debts in non-oil producing developing nations, the readjustment of China's economic programs and voluntary export restraints by manufacturers against the backdrop of trade frictions with other countries. As a result, the association said, the share of machinery in Japan's total exports in the first half of this year -- $71.14 billion -- declined 0.5 percentage point from the comparable period of last year to 67.3 percent.

Of the total, heavy machinery, such as motor vehicles, industrial machinery, heavy-duty electric machinery and industrial vehicles, accounted for $32.4 billion, down 2.5 percent, and light machinery including home electric appliances and office equipment, $15.4 billion, 7.8 percent. Itemwise, motor vehicles (including parts) decreased 6.6 percent, machine tools 17.7 percent, industrial machinery 23.1 percent, home electric appliances 3.3 percent. Exports to North America increased 3.2 percent but those to West Europe decreased 7.4 percent and those to China plummeted 61.9 percent.

VLSI COSMIC RAY EXPOSURE TESTS TO BE CONDUCTED

[Excerpt] Tokyo, Aug 12, KYODO -- Two governmental research institutes, aiming to develop VLSI (very large scale integrated circuits) not vulnerable to cosmic rays, will conduct a joint cosmic ray exposure test on CMOS, bipolar and NMOS RAM (random access memory) chips in mid-September, it was revealed Thursday. The Nippon Telegraph and Telephone Public Corp, (NTT)'s Mushashino electric communication laboratory and the Institute of Space and Astronautical Science will conduct the test -- the first of its kind to be undertaken in Japan -- September 17 or 18 off Sanriku, Iwate Prefecture, northeastern Japan, a laboratory spokesman said.

A big balloon carrying a microprocessor and equipment containing close to 400 such RAM chips will be flown to an altitute of 20,000 to 30,000 meters for 20 to 40 hours for that test, the spokesman said. He said the aim is to check how information of such memories will be upset when they are exposed to cosmic rays, especially heavy ion particles, such as the iron group. The extent to which such information will be upset will be recorded on magnetic type on line printer at the ground control center, he said. The memories to be tested will include 1- and 4-kilobit CMOS static RAM, 4-kilobit bipolar static RAM, 16-kilobit NMOS static RAM and 64-kilobit NMOS dynamic RAM, according to the spokesman.

CPRF MARKS ANNIVERSARY OF KIM TAE-CHUNG KIDNAPPING

[Statement by Hong Ki-mun, vice chairman of the DPRK Committee for Peaceful Reunification of the Fatherland -- read by announcer]

[Text] Already 9 years have elapsed since South Korean democratic personage Kim Tae-chung was illegally kidnapped in Japan as a result of a wicked plot of the U.S. imperialists. Abducted back to South Korea, Kim Tae-chung has suffered from all sorts of repression and harsh suppression by the puppet Pak Chong-hui clique and the traitorous Chon Tu-hwan clique. Even today, he remains shackled, languishing in an intolerable jail cell.

According to news reports, Kim Tae-chung is physically unable to move about freely as a result of harsh torture and is in a dangerous situation, not knowing when he will die.

Expressing my deep concern over the fate of Kim Tae-chung, who is facing death, and over the danger approaching him, I strongly condemn the tyrannical, repressive acts of the U.S. imperialists and the Chon Tu-hwan ring directed to Kim Tae-chung, regarding their acts as an intolerable challenge to the South Korean people, who are aspiring for independence, democracy and reunification, and to the fair social opinion of the world demanding the release and acquittal of Kim Tae-chung and restoration of his original status.

The scheme of lawless suppression against Kim Tae-chung, who demanded peaceful reunification, is a clear evidence that the U.S. imperialists do not want democratic development in South Korea or the reunification of Korea. The U.S. imperialists do not care about human rights and democracy. Their only interest is in maintaining their colonial rule based on fascist dictatorship. The U.S. imperialists never hesitate to trample upon the South Korean people's rights and lives, and they commit any kind of ignominious, barbarous acts for their colonial rule.

In fact, the U.S. imperialists have been bent on destroying democratic and patriotic forces aspiring for reunification, which are deemed to be dangerous elements to their colonial rule.

Following national liberation, when Yo Un-yong tried to reunify the fatherland through collaboration with us, the U.S. imperialists assassinated him and fabricated the Syngman Rhee regime, and then they assassinated Kim Ku, who had struggled to establish a unified government on the basis of North-South negotiations and opposed the establishment of a single puppet in South Korea.

In the postwar period, when Cho Pongam was popular among the people for his efforts in line with his slogan of peaceful reunification, the U.S. imperialists arrested and murdered him, resorting to force in order to maintain the Syngman Rhee regime when it was faced with a crisis.

What is more, when the puppet Syngman Rhee regime was toppled by the 19 April popular uprising and as the spirit for democracy and peaceful reunification rapidly grew in South Korea, the U.S. imperialists encouraged Pak Chong-hui, trained by the U.S. CIA, to stage a military coup d'etat and had him eventually establish a fascist military dictatorship.

The kidnapping of Kim Tae-chung was a product of the U.S. imperialists' political plot to maintain their weak colonial rule in South Korea and to fabricate two Koreas.

Ten years ago, when the spirit of reunification grew to unprecedented heights in South Korea following the announcement of the 4 July North-South joint communique, the U.S. imperialists, embarrassed at this, instigated the traitorous Pak Chong-hui clique to fabricate the notorious Yusin system and blocked the road for democracy and reunification. They had the traitorous Pak Chong-hui commit an act of international terrorism against Kim Tae-chung, who had been engaged in just activities for the social democratization of South Korea and the peaceful reunification of the country.

While paying lipservice to human rights in South Korea and expressing concern over the treatment of Kim Tae-chung, the U.S. imperialists actually were making a show to mislead public opinion.

Following the 26 October incident, in which the traitorous Pak Chong-hui was eradicated, the mass struggle to achieve independence, democracy and reunification grew in South Korea. Faced with this, the U.S. imperialists tried to maintain the crumbling colonial ruling system by resorting to a fascist military dictatorship far more tyrannical than the Yusin dictatorship.

On 17 May 1980, martial law was expanded throughout the whole nation of South Korea and fascist attacks against the democratic personages such as Kim Tae-chung and the South Korean people demanding democracy and reunification began. This was in accordance with the U.S. imperialists' scenario.

Instigating their well-trained stooge, the Chon Tu-hwan military hooligan group, they even charged Kim Tae-chung, who was in a prison cell, with responsibility for the Kwangju massacre and tried and punished him on preposterous charges, such as sedition and procommunism, thus unscrupulously committing intolerable acts.

The fact that the U.S. imperialists had the Chon Tu-hwan ring commute Kim Tae-chung's death sentence to life imprisonment and then to 20 years in prison was a deceptive trick designed to appease raging public protest at home and abroad and to mislead public opinion.

All facts show that the U.S. imperialists are the wicked stranglers of the South Korean people's human rights and democracy and that they are the vicious enemies of peaceful reunification. At the same time, these facts clearly show that neither solution to the human rights issue, nor social democratization nor peaceful reunification can be hoped for as long as the U.S. imperialists continue their colonial rule and as long as they continue schemes to intervene in the internal affairs of South Korea. The U.S. imperialists should cease criminal acts making Kim Tae-chung a victim of their colonial rule and abandon their foolish dream of indefinitely continuing their colonial rule in South Korea. They should look squarely at the reality of South Korea where the anti-U.S. struggle for independence is raging and return to their den before meeting stronger protests from the South Korean people.

The Chon Tu-hwan clique should abandon its traitorous acts of prolonging its dirty life in exchange for suppressing democratic personables such as Kim Tae-chung and patriotic people in South Korea and maintaining the U.S. imperialist colonial rule in South Korea. It should immediately step down from the power it usurped at bayonet point.

We are firmly convinced that the South Korean people will stage a more vigorous anti-U.S. struggle for independence to force the U.S. troops of aggression to withdraw from South Korea and to put an end to their colonial rule and maneuvers to interfere in the internal affairs of South Korea and that they will continue a tenacious struggle for the immediate release of all the democratic personages such as Kim Tae-chung and illegally imprisoned political prisoners.

VRPR ASSAILS SENTENCES GIVEN PUSAN ARSONISTS

SK111334 (Clandestine) Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in Korean to South Korea 1000 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Station commentary]

[Text] Amid the strong protest, opposition and denunciation of people at home and abroad demanding a halt to the unjust trial of those involved in the arson at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan and their unconditional and immediate release, the Chon Tu-hwan ring, at the Pusan District Court on 11 August, committed a fascist outrage by handing down capital and severe punishments to 16 of them.

An atrocity was committed by handing down death penalties for Mun Pu-sik and Kim Hyon-chang; life terms for Kim Un-suk and Yi Mi-ok; 15-year prison terms for Yu Sung-yol, Choe In-sun and Kim Chi-hui; 3-year prison term with 3-year suspension of rights for priest Choe Ki-sik, director of the Wonju Diocese of the Catholic Church; and 5 to 7-year prison terms for the others, including Pak Hyon-sik.

This is an undisguised challenge to people at home and abroad calling for the reversal of the unjust sentences of capital and heavy punishment for those involved in the arson at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan and demanding their unconditional and immediate release. This is an intolerable crime running counter to the anti-U.S. and independence struggle.

The 16 persons involved in the arson at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan who were sentenced to capital and heavy punishments by the Chon Tu-hwan group are patriots who, with a firm resolve for the anti-U.S. and national salvation struggle, had engaged in just activities for the dignity and sovereignty of the nation.

Their bold acts reflected the unanimous aspiration and desire of our masses, who do not want to live life under U.S. colonial slavery. Indeed, their acts were an eruption of the accumulated enmity and indignation against the U.S. aggressors, who have continued an illegal occupation of this soil for 37 years and imposed countless misfortunes and disasters on our masses.

Those involved in the arson clearly demonstrated in court the motive for the arson and their anti-U.S. conviction by saying that charges that they were sympathizers with communists clamored about by the authorities were a fraud fabricated through torture. They demonstrated that they set fire to the U.S. cultural center to let people at home and abroad know about their protest against the United States, which has continued its illegal occupation of South Korea and imposed the yoke of colonial slavery on the people there.

It is by all means patriotic and sagacious to rise in the resistance struggle with surging indignation against the U.S. aggressors, who are running amok with plunder and massacre, occupying another's land across the ocean and enforcing the tragedy of national division. They are attempting to make South Korea their permanent colony. Thus, those involved in the arson are not guilty and should not suffer punishment.

Nevertheless, the Chon Tu-hwan clique imprisoned them and handed down death penalties and severe punishments at the murderous trial. This is indeed an intolerable criminal act which could not be perpetrated by anyone but such a filty stooge of the U.S. imperialists and peerless fascist tyrant as the Chon Tu-hwan clique.

The Chon Tu-hwan clique is scheming to threaten our masses who aspire for anti-U.S. independence by handing down death penalties and severe punishments to detainees, charging them with unjust crimes. It is also attempting to justify its bestial repression of the patriotic masses. However, this is a preposterous fantasy. The strength of our masses aspiring independence is stronger than bayonets and guns. The vigorous trend of anti-U.S. independence throughout South Korea cannot be stopped.

The Chon Tu-hwan clique should stop treacherous acts to win the favor of the U.S. masters and maintain its filthy life under their support by betrayong the fellow countrymen and punishing the patriotic masses in collusion with outside forces. The Chon Tu-hwan clique should immediately reverse the unjust court judgment for those involved in the arson at the U.S. cultural center and release all of the detainees immediately and unconditionally.

If the Chon Tu-hwan clique moves ahead, in defiance of protests and denunciation at home and abroad, to punish the patriotic masses who rose in the anti-U.S. struggle, it cannot escape a more miserable fate than previous dictators, who were destroyed after perpetrating treacherous acts and relying on outside forces.

RALLY MARKS CHANGSONG CONFERENCE ANNIVERSARY

Yun Ki-pok Report

SK090451 Pyongyang KCNA in English 0401 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 9 (KCNA) -- A meeting for commemorating the 20th anniversary of the historic Changsong joint conference of local party and economic functionaries guided by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song was held on August 8 at the Changsong County house of culture. A portrait of Comrade Kim Il-song, the great leader of our party and our people, was placed on the platform of the meeting.

The meeting was attended by Comrade Pak Song-chol, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Workers Party of Korea and vice-president of the DPRK; Comrade Yun Ki-pok, alternate member of the Political Bureau and secretary of the Central Committee of the WPK; Comrade Kye Ung-tae, alternate member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the WPK and vice-premier of the Administration Council; and Yim Hyong-ku, Kim Pyong-yol, Yom Chae-man, Pyon Chang-pok, Kim Pong-chu, Choe Tae-pok and other personages concerned, functionaries of local party and power organs, economic bodies and working people's organizations and working people in Changsong County.

Comrade Yun Ki-pok, alternate member of the Political Bureau and secretary of the C.C., WPK, made a report at the meeting.

The reporter said that 20 years ago the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song built Changsong County, one of the most remote mountain areas in our country, into a model for radically improving the livelihood of the farmers in the mountain areas and convened a joint conference of local party and economic functionaries in Changsong to generalize the experiences throughout the county and made there the historic speech "Let Us Radically Improve the People's Living Standards by Strengthening the Role of the County and Further Developing Local Industry and Agriculture."

He said: The Changsong joint conference of local party and economic functionaries was a historic meeting which marked a new milestone in evenly developing at fast pace all the areas and rural villages of our country and rapidly enhancing the living standards of the people including the farmers in the mountainous areas, and thereby removing the difference between towns and countryside and expediting socialist and communist construction.

Giving his repeated on-the-spot guidance to Changsong County from long ago, the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song said that the peasants could be well off in such remote mountain areas as Changsong County, too, and brightly indicated the direction to be followed by Changsong County and energetically led the county to successfully carry it into reality. Under his wise guidance a great change has taken place in Changsong, once known as the most backward and poor out-of-the-way mountain area in the past. All the mountains in Changsong have turned into golden mountains and valleys into valleys of stock breeding teeming with flocks of animals and the grain output rapidly increased to turn the county from a grain-deficit area into an area with surplus grain and, with the appearance of a number of local industrial factories using inexhaustible local raw material resources, and a solid supply base successfully producing various consumer goods for itself has taken shape in the county.

The historic Changsong joint conference was a meeting which marked an occasion of an epochal turn in developing all the areas of the country and expediting socialist and communist construction by generalizing all over the country the shining model for local economic and cultural development set up the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song over a long period in Changsong County.

At the Changsong joint conference the great leader comprehensively analyzed and reviewed the experiences gained in Changsong County and set forth a programmatic task to all the counties of the country to follow this example.

Recalling that at the joint conference he propounded his unique idea of the position and role of the county as the regional unit and base in socialist and communist construction and laid down the tasks to develop the local industry to a higher stage and accelerate the technical revolution and cultural revolution in the countryside, the reporter stressed: The unique idea and policy set forth by the great leader at the joint conference are a bright beacon and a militant banner that opened a braoder road of hastening the complete victory of socialism and advancing to communism at fast pace in our country. The unique idea and policy advanced by him at the historic Changsong joint conference have been brilliantly embodied thanks to the energetic guidance of our glorious party centre.

After the Changsong joint conference our party centre deeply acquainted itself with the successes registered in local industrial factories and rural economy in Changsong, Sakju, Pyokdong and other areas of North Pyongan Province and in the people's life and, on this basis, has further enriched and developed the great leader's idea and theory of the position and role of the county in socialist and communist construction.

The local industry of our country has developed to a very high stage in the vigorous endeavours to implement the idea and policy put forward by the great leader at the Changsong joint conference. Over the past 20 years the number of the local industrial factories in each county have grown from 11 to more than 20 on an average and their production has augmented 14.7 times in our country and today our local industry takes a very great share in the nation's production of mass consumption goods and in the total state budgetary revenue.

The historic turn which has taken place in the efforts to create a model in Changsong and generalize the experiences throughout the country in the past 20 years is entirely a shining fruition of the wise guidance of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and the glorious party centre and a convincing proof of the great vitality of our party's policy of strengthening the role of the county and developing local industry and rural economy and thus enhancing the people's living standards.

Press Editorials

[Text] Pyongyang, August 8 (KCNA) -- Papers here today dedicate editorials to the 20th anniversary of the Changsong joint conference of local party and economic functionaries held in August 1962.

20 years ago the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song splendidly built up Changsong County located in a mountainous area of North Pyongan Province in the northwest of the country and developed the local industry and rural economy in conformity with the geographical features to set an example in radically improving the people's living and convened the Changsong joint conference of local party and economic functionaries to generalise it.

A NODONG SINMUN editorial says: The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song at the conference advanced a unique idea on the position and role of the county in the building of socialism and communism and a revolutionary idea and policies on steadily raising the people's living standard by effectively using all the local reserves and possibilities to the maximum and developing the local industry and rural economy in a comprehensive and diverse way.

These unique idea and policies embody the demand of the chuche idea for solving all the problems by one's own efforts in conformity with the specific conditions of one's country and in the interests of one's people; they are a blueprint carrying a far-reaching plan to turn all the areas of the country into a paradise of abundance through the exploitation of all the resources, large and small, and a programmatic guideline to be held fast to by our party and people.

A great turn has taken place in the work of all our counties and development of local economy and culture along the road brightly indicated by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song at the Changsong joint conference and the local industry in particular has developed by leaps and bounds. Our local industry started from scratch. But each county has now an average of more than 20 modern local industrial factories. They have solid bases of natural resources and industrial raw materials on which they have increased the variety and quantity of products and greatly improved their quality. Today our local industry, therefore, occupies an important place in the production of mass consumption goods and holds a big share in the nation's total industrial output.

Rural economy has rapidly developed in all local areas through the application of the chuche-based farming method and particularly agriculture and stockbreeding have been combined together and mountains have been used in a comprehensive way in in-between and mountainous areas with the result that the material and cultural living standards of the local people have risen to a high level.

The far-reaching plan unfolded by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song at the Changsong joint conference is being brought into full bloom and brilliantly embodied under the revolutionary leadership of our party. Our party has further developed and enriched the idea and theory of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song on the county's position and role and is energetically leading the work for making the ideas and policies put forward at the Changsong joint conference display greater vitality.

Our reality and experiences prove that when the policies of the Changsong joint conference are firmly adhered to under the leadership of the party and the leader, the people in whatever out-of-the-way area can be so well off as in the plain area or town and an epochal turn be effected in the development of local economy and culture, stresses the editorial.

KIM CHONG-IL RECEIVES MESSAGES ON ANTI-U.S. MONTH

From Mali, Austria, Ghana

SK061028 Pyongyang KCNA in English 1007 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 6 (KCNA) -- The dear leader Comrade Kim Chong-il received messages or letters of solidarity from various countries during the month of anti-U.S. joint struggle. On the occasion of this month messages and letters extended most heartfelt greetings to the dear leader Comrade Kim Chong-il and expressed firm solidarity with the Korean people's struggle to achieve the independent and peaceful reunification of the country.

In a letter sent on behalf of the attendants of a meeting of solidarity with the Korean people held in Bamako, Abdul Tierno Diallo, chairman of the Malian Committee for Supporting the Independent and Peaceful Reunification of Korea, said: Considering that to put an end to the interference of outside forces in South Korea and realize genuine democratisation of South Korean society is a pre-requisite to the reunification of Korea, we present at the meeting strongly demanded the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of the U.S. troops from South Korea and an end to the South Korean authorities' brutal suppression of the South Korean youth, students and people who are struggling for freedom, human rights and democracy.

Availing ourselves of this glorious opportunity, we express once again full support and solidarity for the proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo put forward by His Excellency President Kim Il-song, the great leader, at the Sixth Congress of the Workers Party of Korea.

We will make all our efforts in the future to further strengthen the movement of solidarity with the Korean people fighting for the independent and peaceful reunification of the country.

A message from Dr. Friedebert Kollmann, chairman of the Austrian Jurists Union for Defence of Democracy and Human Rights in South Korea, says: We strongly demand the United States to withdraw its aggression forces from South Korea unconditionally and immediately and take its dirty hands of interference off Korea at once. We resolutely hold that the Chon Tu-hwan military fascists of South Korea must step down at once from "power" and South Korean society be democratised. We will make all efforts to make voices demanding the withdrawal of the U.S. troops from South Korea and opposing the United States interference in the internal affairs of Korea ring out loudly as ever from among broad segments of people of Austria.

We are firmly convinced that under Your Excellency's brilliant leadership the heroic Korean people will certainly reunify the divided country independently and successfully build Korea, a powerful country of chuche.

In a letter sent on behalf of the attendants of a Ghana national meeting of solidarity with the Korean people held in Accra during the month of anti-U.S. joint struggle for the withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Korea, chairman of the meeting Dr. M.M. Owusu Ansah said: We believe that under the outstanding and seasoned leadership of Your Excellency Kim Chong-il, the dear leader, the heroic Korean people will surely reunify the country independently and peacefully in the near future, holding the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song in high esteem.

For 40 years of life you, the dear leader Comrade Kim Chong-il, have led the Korean people along the road of victory to accomplish the revolutionary cause of chuche started by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song. A message from Mwerekande Alexandre, chairman of the Rwandan Committee of Support for the Reunification of Korea, says: Our committee believes that the Korean people will surely reunify the country independently and peacefully by means of founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo.

Messages and letters wished the dear leader Comrade Kim Chong-il good health and a long life.

From Guyana, Burma, St Lucia

SK090440 Pyongyang KCNA in English 0352 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 9 (KCNA) -- The dear leader Comrade Kim Chong-il received messages of greetings from various countries on the occasion of the 29th anniversary of the victory of the Korean people in the fatherland liberation war. The messages extend warmest felicitations and militant greetings to the dear leader Comrade Kim Chong-il on this anniversary.

Eduin James, chairman of the Guyana Committee for Support of Korea's Reunification, says in his message: The shining victory won by the Korean people in the fatherland liberation war was a great military miracle previously unknown in the war history and a worldwide event which ushered in a new era in the national liberation struggle in colonies and the anti-imperialist, anti-U.S. struggle.

This shining victory was entirely a result of the outstanding and tested guidance of the great leader, the ever-victorious iron-willed brilliant commander and military strategist. The great exploits and precious experiences achieved by the great leader in the fatherland liberation war inspire to victory the world revolutionary people who are advancing under the banner of anti-imperialism and independence.

U Aung Je, chairman of the Burmese Committee for Supporting Korea's Reunification, says in his message: The U.S. imperialists, failing to draw a lesson from the defeat they sustained in the Korean war and withdraw from South Korea, are persisting in the manoeuvres of aggression and war. All the developments in Korea vividly show that the aggressive nature of the U.S. imperialists never changes. If the danger of war is to be prevented in Korea and peace and security be preserved in Asia and the rest of the world, the occupation of South Korea by the U.S. imperialists must be terminated. I demand that the U.S. authorities discontinue their reckless arms buildup and play with fire and withdraw from South Korea without delay, taking along their troops and means of war. The reunification of Korea must be achieved in accordance with the three principles of national reunification and the proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo put forward by His Excellency President Kim Il-song, the great leader.

The chairman of the St. Lucian Committee for Friendship and Solidarity With the Korean People, notes: The precious feats and experiences achieved by the Korean people in the fatherland liberation war serve as a pabulum of revolution for the world revolutionary people in their struggle to put the final end to imperialism and colonialism and build a new independent and progressive society.

Availing myself of this opportunity, I express full support to the Korean people in their struggle for the independent and peaceful reunification of the country and firmly believe that the friendly Korean people under Your Excellency's wise guidance will achieve national reunification in the near future and the day will surely come when they will lead a happy life.

They wholeheartedly wish good health and a long life to the dear leader Comrade Kim Chong-il.

From South Asia, Latin America

[Text] Pyongyang, August 10 (KCNA) -- The dear leader Comrade Kim Chong-il received solidarity messages and letters from various countries during the month of anti-U.S. joint struggle. The messages and letters extend militant greetings to him and express firm solidarity with the Korean people in their struggle for the independent and peaceful reunification of the country, on the occasion of the month of anti-U.S. joint struggle.

Ashton Phillips, chairman of the Agricultural and Allied Workers Union of Guyana, in his message, says: The Korean people, in the war of three years forced upon them by the U.S. imperialists, defeated the numerical and technical superiority of the enemy with politico-ideological and strategic and tactical superiority, thus showing to the world people that the decisive factor of victory in a war did not lay in the superiority in weapon and technique but in the strength of the popular masses who struggle, united in one body, conscious of the justice of their revolutionary cause.

The Korean people are today showing a world-wide example on the front of anti-imperialist, anti-U.S. struggle under the outstanding leadership of you respected leader.

D.P. Maheshwari, chairman of the Indian Federation for World Cooperation and Cultural Relations, in a letter sent by him on behalf of the attendants of a solidarity meeting organized in New Delhi by the federation, says: The independent and peaceful reunification of Korea is a unanimous desire of the entire Korean people and the world peaceloving people and an urgent task which does not brook a moment's delay.

The U.S. imperialists and the South Korean puppet clique are running wild in the manoeuvres for the provocation of a new war in Korea and creating grave difficulties in the way of the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea.

We strongly demand that the U.S. imperialist aggression troops be withdrawn immediately from South Korea with all their destruction weapons, the freedom of activities be guaranteed to all the political parties and public organisations in South Korea and the democratisation of the South Korean society be realized.

We actively support the proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo put forward by His Excellency President Kim Il-song.

The attendants of a solidarity meeting of Pakistan held in Lahore on the occasion of June 25-July 27 month of anti-U.S. joint struggle say in their letter: We are following with deep concern the current situation of the Korean Peninsula where the U.S. imperialists and the Chon Tu-hwan clique are scheming to provoke another war and seeking to perpetuate the division of Korea.

We denounce the "two Koreas" plot of the U.S. imperialists and the South Korean puppet regime. We condemn their manoeuvres as an act going against the trend of the present era in which whole mankind demands chajusong (independence) and opposes dependence. We demand that the U.S. imperialists withdraw the U.S. troops from South Korea with their all destructive weapons.

Luis Manuel de Araujo, president of the Portuguese Central Committee for the Study of Kimilsongism, in his solidarity message says: The Democratic People's Republic of Korea put forward reasonable proposals for the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea and is struggling for their realisation. The South Korean authorities, however, oppose those reasonable proposals. They submit to the imperialists, serving for their interests, not for the interests of the Korean people desirous of reunification. The Portuguese Central Committee for the Study of Kimilsongism expresses positive support and encouragement to the constructive reunification proposal of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on the occasion of the month of anti-U.S. joint struggle. We decide to devote our all, in the future, too, to the cause of Kimilsongism and the propagation of the immortal chuche idea founded by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song.

The messages and letters wish the dear leader Comrade Kim Chong-il good health and a long life.

KNRC URGES RESUMPTION OF NORTH-SOUTH TALKS

SK120523 Seoul Domestic Service in Korean 0300 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Korean National Red Cross statement issued 12 August and read by KNRC President Yu Chang-sun -- recorded]

Eleven years ago today, the KNRC advocated the search for dispersed families in the North and South from a humanitarian viewpoint and proposed to the North Korean side to hold the North-South Red Cross talks to realize this.

In line with this KNRC proposal, talks were started between the North and South for the first time since the national territory was divided a quarter century before and even a direct telephone line breaking the hard barrier of division was established, thus causing the dispersed families in the North and South to look forward to meeting their separated families again and making the entire nation in the North and South buoyant with expectations for the fatherland's unification. This notwithstanding, the North Korean side ruthlessly frustrated the ardent wishes of the entire nation by unilaterally announcing the suspension of the North-South talks on 28 August 1973.

In spite of the North Korean side's suspension of the talks, the KNRC has constantly urged the North Korean Red Cross Society to unconditionally resume the North-South Red Cross talks in conformity with the ardent wishes of the 10 million dispersed families and the entire nation. Moreover, the KNRC has made a proposal for carrying out as a pilot project a plan to locate aged parents by which the dispersed families would confirm their addresses and whether or not their aged parents are still living. Following this, the KNRC suggested, one after another, exchanges of photos of families, exchanges of visiting groups for paying tribute to ancestral graves, establishment of a meeting place and a place for mail exchanges at Panmunjom. To achieve a breatkthrough for resumption of the suspended talks, the KNRC has several times proposed meetings between the two sides' chief delegates to the North-South Red Cross talks and meetings between the presidents of the two sides' Red Cross societies.

However, none of these efforts by the KNRC has been realized owing to the North Korean side's rejection. If the North Korean side has the slightest intention of solving the problems facing the dispersed families in a humanitarian fashion, the above issues, which our side has persistently cried out for, can surely be resolved.

In this connection, in order to consult and solve the problems facing the 10 million dispersed families, I again urge the North Korean Red Cross Society to agree to the uncondtional resumption of the North-South Red Cross talks.

I think that the direct telephone line, which has already been established in Seoul and Pyongyang in line with the agreement between the two sides' Red Cross societies, should be resumed and that the function of the liaison office for the talks at Panmunjom should be restored to normal. I look forward to affirmative and sincere measures by the North Korean Red Cross Society on these issues.

Along with this, I express deep regret over the fact that although already a full month has passed since a total of 35 fishermen of our side's No 5 Masan-ho were taken to the North by armed North Korean naval craft while engaging in fishing operations on the East Sea on 13 July, the fishermen have not been returned. I once again ask the North Korean Red Cross Society to take the lead in order that all our fishermen can return to the bosom of their families, who have experienced bitter grief, at the earliest possible date in line with the Red Cross' humanitarian spirit and brotherly love.

Along with this, I again urge the North Korean Red Cross Society to positively cooperate so that a total of 406 fishermen of our side, whom the North Korean side has illegally kidnapped and forcibly detained in North Korea since 1954 until today, as well as the fishermen of the No 5 Masan-ho, can be returned as soon as possible.

JAPAN URGED TO RESPOND TO TEXTBOOK DEMAND

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 12 (YONHAP) -- South Korea Thursday urged Japan to promptly respond to its Aug. 3 demand to correct the "distortions" of Korea-related facts in new Japanese history textbooks.

The message was delivered to Toshio Koto, minister and deputy chief of mission at the Japanese Embassy here, by Choe Tong-chin, the Foreign Ministry's director-general for the Asian Affairs Bureau, according to a source who was present at the Choe-Koto meeting.

"We have conveyed our deep regret over the lack of Tokyo's response to our memorandum of Aug. 3 demanding the correction of the distorted facts, and we are urging Japan's prompt response to the request to prevent a deterioration of Korean-Japanese relations," the source quoted Choe as saying.

A Korean Government source said privately that Seoul was expecting a response by Tokyo before Korean President Chon Tu-hwan leaves Monday on a tour of four African countries and Canada.

The source from the Choe-Koto meeting quoted Koto as saying that he understood that a consensus was forming in Japan that the textbook dispute should be resolved at an early date. He said Koto denied published reports that Japan is delaying its action on the matter, and said that he will immediately transmit Seoul's position to his home government.

Koto was also quoted as saying that the Japanese Embassy has not received any notification concerning media reports that the Japanese Government will make public its position on the textbook issue Friday.

Fishing Talks To Be Postponed

[Text] Apparently affected by false descriptions of history in textbooks for Japanese students, an annual meeting of a binational fishing committee will be adjourned sine die, a source at the National Fisheries Administration said yesterday.

The source said that the 17th annual session of the Korea-Japan Joint Fisheries Committee was likely to be put off for the time being, due to the recent hot controversy between the two countries over Japanese "distortion of history" concerning her invasion of the Korean Peninsula early this century.

The joint committee was inaugurated in accordance with the fisheries agreement in 1965, when the two neighboring countries normalized their diplomatic relations.

The annual meeting was due to be held on Aug. 30 in Seoul to discuss ways of scientifically examining fishing resources and of rescuing maritime victims, the source revealed. The committee meeting was to focus its discussions on how to settle disputes among fishermen from the two countries. The Japanese side had initially asked its Korean counterpart to hold the gathering on Aug. 2-3.

Japanese Dietman To Visit

[Text] Tokyo (YONHAP) — Japan plans to send a vice chairman of the Japan-Korea Parliamentarians League to Seoul shortly in its effort to seek a solution to the textbook dispute between Korea and Japan before Korea's independence day which falls on Aug. 15, government sources here said Wednesday.

Saying that the settlement of the dispute has not been realized to date because of Korea's earlier refusal to accept a visit by a high-ranking official of the Japanese Ministry of Education, the sources disclosed that "the Tokyo government is now considering such a visit again." They also said that a vice chairman of the league will visit Seoul this week to explain Japan's position over the dispute to the Korean Government and parliamentary leaders.

Recalling the delivery of a letter from Yi Chae-hyong, the league's Korean-side chairman to his Japanese counterpart Ken Yasui earlier, they said the vice chairman will convey a reply letter from Yasui to Yi during his stay in Seoul. However, the league's secretary-general said nothing is concrete about such a visit.

Meanwhile, Chief Cabinet Secretary Kiichi Miyazawa expressed the hope that the dispute could be settled by Aug. 15 because the day is Korea's independence day, but admitted that "Japan now faces difficulties."

KOREA HERALD PRAISES OUTCOME OF PUSAN ARSON TRIAL

[Editorial: "Judgment on Pusan Arson"]

[Text] The verdict handed down yesterday against the arsonists of the American Cultural Center in Pusan underlies, aside from its legal grounds, the nation's strong censure of terrorism that could affect its sensitive security situation. In effect, the shock of the incident, an unprecedented kind in several respects, has not petered out as yet, some five months after the occurrence.

It was obvious from the beginning that both the motivations and method of violence employed by the convicts could not be tolerated at all. Under no circumstances can the defendants' dissidence against the government as confirmed during the course of the hearing justify the act of terror they resorted to. To make matters worse, the burning of the official establishment of the nation's foremost security partner out of dubious political motivations leaves little room for extenuating consideration.

Terrorism has no place in any civilized society. Today Korea has many acute reasons for disapproving of terrorism insofar as internal stability is vital to national security. Under these circumstances, the arson in question was not only a reckless defiance but also a dangerous one to the nation's current endeavor for survival and progress.

The radicalism of the arsonists as expressed in leaflets scattered around the burned American office is apparent enough to identify them with an ideology this republic can never approve of. The slogans which accused the republic of "preparing for a northward invasion" are of the kind that may originate only in North Korean propaganda.

How to achieve one's worthy end is as important as the end itself. This importance is all the more towering in our circumstances facing a constant security risk. The kind of terrorism that the Pusan arsonists dared is inconceivable, to begin with.

Harsh dealing with terrorism is inevitable if only to discourage recurrence of the cursed practice. Any political belief would be refutable if it were to be forced on by means of terror. As a rule, few devices other than tough countering seem effective in meeting the terrorist challenge. This has been demonstrated in many parts of the world.

An especially regrettable side of the crime is a Catholic priest's involvement. Father Choe Ki-sik of the Catholic Church education center in Wonju, Kangwon-do, was convicted for providing refuge to the arsonists. Inasmuch as giving shelter to criminals violates the law, the priest's case makes no exception under the existing legal system.

The case is not closed yet, since it may be tried again at higher courts. But the recent process of hearing, as well as the horrendous commission of the arson, has underlined the need for us to beware of such misconceived radicalism as led the Pusan convicts to resort to terrorism. Those who may entertain such left-leaning radicalism are believed to be small in number. Still, the surfacing of such elements through the Pusan fire increases the necessity for stepped-up education for youth. The generational transition in progress adds to this necessity.

NO FOREIGN LOANS FOR 'NONESSENTIAL' PROJECTS

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 9 (YONHAP) -- The South Korean Government has decided not to borrow foreign loans to finance non-essential development projects in the government sector next year, it was learned Monday.

A Finance Ministry source said that the decision was made because it would be very difficult to insure domestic funds for some public development projects to be partially financed with foreign loans because of next year's budgetary limitations. The government earlier resolved to pursue a tight-financing policy next year, tentatively estimating the fiscal 1983 budget at 10 trillion won (13.5 billion U.S. dollars), 500 billion won (675.7 million dollars) more than this year's 9.5 trillion won (12.8 billion dollars).

The decision is expected to delay the implementation of many development projects in the public sector envisaged in the 1982-86 fifth five-year economic and social development plan. They include the construction of the country's nuclear power plants Nos. 11 and 12, the third-phase of the Pusan port expansion project, agricultural development and west coast reclamation projects. The construction of the two nuclear plants was to start next year, but it will now begin in 1984 or after 1986, the source said.

Oil Imports Situation

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 11 (YONHAP) -- During the first half of 1982, South Korea's crude oil imports dropped 11.9 percent from the same period last year to 83,725,000 barrels, while imports of oil products increased 148 percent from the corresponding period in 1981 to 12,096,000 barrels, an official survey showed Wednesday.

The survey conducted by the Energy-Resources Ministry also revealed that total Korean production of oil products declined 11.7 percent during the first six months of the year compared to the same period last year. During the cited period, domestic oil consumption drooped six percent from the same period last year to 87,848,000 barrels.

With record-high reserves of 10,722,000 barrels of oil products at the end of June, several domestic oil companies decided to rely on imports of oil products rather than use their own stockpiled supplies.

Canadian Coal Supply 'Assured'

SK050126 Seoul YONHAP in English 0114 GMT 5 Aug 82

[Text] Ottawa, Aug. 4 (YONHAP) -- A senior official of the Canadian Mining, Energy and Resources Ministry said Wednesday that Korea could be assured of a long-term, uninterrupted coal supply from Canada as it is regarded as a major partner in the development of Canada's enormous coal potential.

He said in an interview that Korea is Canada's second biggest coal importer and hence, Canada is anxious to satisfy Korea's current and future coal needs. He added that 11 percent of Canada's total coal exports of 15.7 million tons last year went to Korea, worth 114 million dollars.

The official, who refused to be identified under ministry ground rules for interviews, welcomed further investments from Korea in the field of coal development.

The Pohang steel and iron mill is about to invest 52 million dollars in a joint venture with the British Colombia Coal Ltd. to develop coking coal to use in its mill. This project, dubbed the Green Hills Project, represents the first Korean direct investment in Canada. In addition, a number of Korean enterprises, including Ssangyong, are importing coal under long-term supply contracts with Canadian firms. The Ssangyong contract calls for 350,000 tons annually for the next 10 years.

The official said Canada's coal resources base was large enough to allow increased exports in the future and Korea would have no problem in getting them. Moreover, he added, there are no regulatory impediments to coal exports, although some other energy exports such as gas and electricity must receive approval from Ottawa.

Canada last year produced 40 million tons of various types of coal, an increase of 9 percent over 1980. A ministry spokesman said by 1985, extra production capacity of 15 million tons is expected, bringing the nation's total coal production capacity to 55 million tons.

VODK HAILS BANGKOK CONFERENCE FOR SUPPORT TO DK

[Text] The Asian regional conference for support to the Kampuchean people's struggle was held in Bangkok from 31 July to 1 August 1982.

A Democratic Kampuchean delegation led by Mrs Ieng Thirith, chairman of the Democratic Kampuchean Red Cross Society; more than 250 delegates representing Asian countries such as Thailand, all the other ASEAN member countries, China, Japan, Pakistan and Bangladesh; and a large number of the Thai and Khmer personages met at the conference hall of the Mandarin Restaurant in Bangkok on 31 July and 1 August for this conference hosted by the Thai committee for organizing the conference on Kampuchea. This committee comprises His Excellency General Chana Samutwanit as chairman and many Thai personages as members. This is the first time that the mass organization of a Third World country which shares a border with our Democratic Kampuchea has organized a conference to support our Kampuchean people's just struggle.

During the conference, the excellency and all the delegates discussed the Kampuchean problem in an atmosphere of militant solidarity against the Vietnamese aggressors, expansionists and annexationists. The conference adopted a resolution, demanding that Vietnam withdraw all its troops from Kampuchea in accordance with the UN resolutions and calling for further support for Democratic Kampuchea's seat at the United Nations.

This Asian regional conference to support the Kampuchean people's struggle is of great significance to our Kampuchean people's struggle. This is because, despite the Vietnamese maneuvers to split the ASEAN countries and threats to them, the people in Asia, including the ASEAN countries, have told the Vietnamese enemy that it should withdraw all troops from Kampuchea in accordance with the resolutions of the UN General Assembly and the declaration of the International Conference on Kampuchea dated 17 July 1981. This Bangkok conference also constitutes a great encouragement for our people, national army and guerrillas of Democratic Kampuchea to fight more vigorously in order to advance toward final victory.

On the night of 1 August, our Democratic Kampuchea's Phnum Malai art troupe gave a performance in honor of all the excellencies, ladies and gentlemen. The performance proceeded in a joyous and intimate atmosphere.

The Asian regional conference ended in an atmosphere of militant solidarity against the Vietnamese-Soviet expansionists.

KHIEU SAMPHAN GIVES 'EXCLUSIVE INTERVIEW' TO XINHUA

OW112016 Beijing XINHUA in English 1923 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] Cairo, August 11 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Kampuchean Vice-President Khieu Samphan said here today that the Vietnamese aggressors have strategically lost their war in Kampuchea and the Kampuchean army and people, fighting under hard conditions, are making contributions to the maintenance of peace and stability in Southeast Asia. In an exclusive interview with XINHUA here, Khieu Samphan said that "the over 300,000 Vietnamese aggressor troops (including service units) in Kampuchea are completely bogged down and worn out." He added that the morale of the Vietnamese soldiers "is getting lower and lower as the Vietnamese campaigns to annihilate the Kampuchean people during either dry or rainy seasons have all ended in failure."

The Vietnamese people, he noted, are also opposing the war. However, the Vietnamese leaders are very stubborn. By trumpeting the "partial withdrawal" scheme, he said, they hoped to "mislead the people and world public opinion which demand total Vietnamese withdrawal from Kampuchea and self-determination for the Kampuchean people free from outside interference." They also tried to bury all U.N. resolutions on Kampuchea and lessen international pressure on them. The Vietnamese authorities are in fact increasing their forces in Kampuchea instead of withdrawing any soldiers, he stressed.

Khieu Samphan hailed the recent formation of the coalition government in Kampuchea. This coalition, he said, is based on the declaration of Kuala Lumpur of June 22, 1982 defining Democratic Kampuchea, a member of the United Nations, as the sole state of the Kampuchean people. "We hope that the coalition government will last till the final victory -- the complete withdrawal of the Vietnamese aggressor troops," he added.

Khieu Samphan said that the Kampuchean Government and people are gaining more and more international support. He continued that the peace-loving peoples in the world today are increasingly realizing the true nature of Vietnamese expansion and aggression. He said that "the Vietnamese authorities are serving the expansionist policies of the Soviet Union in Southeast Asia and the whole Pacific region and Vietnam today is serving as a military base of the Soviet Union." To oppose Soviet expansion in the region, more and more people are realizing the need to support the Kampuchean people as well as the people in Afghanistan, he declared.

SITTHI DISCUSSES KAMPUCHEAN ISSUE, ASEAN STAND

["Text" of 11 August speech given by Foreign Minister Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Savetsila to the Foreign Correspondents Club of Thailand in Bangkok]

[Text] Tonight marks another occasion when I appear at this forum to share some thoughts with you, or perhaps more accurately, to be subjected to grilling by a roomful of professionals whose propensity for tough questioning is well-known. Nevertheless, taking part in this seemingly masochistic exercise, I take comfort in the symbiotic arrangement between us, that is, members of the government and the press corps, in our duty to inform and be informed. It is important in a free society that we work together to make the best possible assessment of problems facing us. We in the Foreign Ministry benefit immensely from news and analysis provided by the press. Likewise, we are gratified when our own views and policies are given honest airing by the media.

It is in this spirit that I now turn to the Kampuchean question, to which I have been specifically requested by the Foreign Correspondents Club of Thailand to address this evening. I do not wish to burden you with the familiar background of this problem, but only to underline the following facts.

First, Vietnam has invaded and occupied Kampuchea in contravention of all principles governing the conduct of inter-state relations. Second, the Vietnamese action has seriously destabilised the security situation in Southeast Asia, thus exposing the region to further turmoil and conflict.

Third, the Vietnamese invasion has resulted in untold suffering among the Kampuchean people, while posing a great burden on other states having to care for large numbers of Kampuchean refugees who have fled their ravaged homeland. Fourth, in spite of the deployment of some 200,000 troops in Kampuchea, Vietnam is far from succeeding in her effort to control that country. And, finally, the neighbouring states of ASEAN, having been affected by and being concerned with the Vietnamese action, have proposed a reasonable and practicable alternative which will extricate all concerned parties from the morass created by the Kampuchean problem. Despite continued overwhelming support from the international community, Vietnam is still reluctant to accept what will essentially be compatible with her own genuine interests.

Two weeks ago, Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach visited Singapore, Kuala Lumpur and Bangkok. He came with a professed intention to seek a detente with the ASEAN countries, which, according to him, was vital for the restoration of peace and stability in Southeast Asia. We in ASEAN genuinely welcomed Mr Thach's demonstration of affability, and were anxious to discuss with him the Kampuchean question. While noting that progress was made in Vietnam's conciliatory attitude towards us, we regrettably felt Mr Thach fell short of convincing us that Vietnam had changed its policy and was now willing to discuss and negotiate a settlement of the Kampuchean problem.

Differences in the style and substance of his remarks at various places in ASEAN notwithstanding, Mr Thach's subsequent interview in his own country clearly pointed to the fact that he had primarily been concerned with telling the world Vietnam had scored a "big victory" in getting the ASEAN countries to drop confrontation and adopt a more "pragmatic" policy of starting a dialogue.

Lest Hanoi be given unlimited enjoyment in the exercise of propaganda, it should be pointed out that the recalcitrant or confrontational party has not been ASEAN. One is not certain, particularly after having listened to Mr Thach's attempt to define the all-pervasive "Chinese threat," if the lack of progress in the dialogue for a peaceful settlement cannot indeed be attributed to Vietnam's continual belief that its own solution, that is, to get on with the Vietnamisation of Kampuchea, is ultimately workable.

Be that as it may, I can state with equanimity that ASEAN is for dialogue. We want dialogue with Vietnam if the exercise will lead eventually to a negotiated settlement of the Kampuchean problem which, as we have always maintained, entails the total withdrawal of all foreign forces as well as the implementation of the exercise to restore Kampuchea as an independent, neutral country posing no threats to others. As you are well aware, such are the provisions already contained in the declaration of the ICK [International Conference on Kampuchea] and other relevant UN resolutions. And here, I should like to repeat what I have said many times before: Our door is open, all that the other party need do is to cross the threshold.

You may wish to ask if Vietnam's recent proposals in the so-called "Ho Chi Minh City communique" were indeed not meant as a reflection of Hanoi's readiness to settle the Kampuchean question. Let me dwell on this statement by Vietnam for a few minutes. First of all, Mr Thach, in expressing Vietnam's "understanding" of ASEAN's "legitimate" concern, reiterated the offer contained in the communique of a partial troop withdrawal which, according to him, had been completed in mid-July. While this "unilateral" withdrawal might be regarded a step in the right direction for an eventual total withdrawal, we have little evidence that the offer was sincere and that there was indeed a genuine withdrawal and not just simply another routine rotation of disengaged troops.

On the contrary, we have received information that Vietnamese units near the Thai-Kampuchean border, notably at Siem Reap, had been preparing to receive thousands of new recruits both from the north and south of Vietnam. But it is not my intention here to argue about exact figures in the alleged troop pull-out and how many in replacements, other than to state that we are wary of the sign of "good will" as offered.

Let us take another of these proposals, namely, the offer for a safety zone along the Thai-Kampuchean border, with Thai troops on one side of the zone and only Heng Samrin soldiers on the other. Ever since the Vietnamese invaded Kampuchea Vietnam has tried to shift attention away from the core problem: the presence of 200,000 Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea. The question is therefore not the Vietnamese troops along Thai-Kampuchean border, but their presence anywhere in Kampuchea which the international community objects to. Hanoi knew full well when they proposed such an offer that ASEAN or indeed the world could not possibly accept such an offer.

Now a word about the Vietnamese proposal of an international conference on Southeast Asia. On the surface it had an aura of reasonableness, especially when qualified by Mr Thach subsequently that everything pertaining to such conference was "discussable." Upon careful scrutiny, however, one began to see insurmountable hurdles. The Vietnamese proposal, in other words, was not open-minded, but was with conditions.

First, it did not purport to discuss the Kampuchean question as such, but rather the entire Southeast Asian region. Second, and here is the catch, such a conference would not be held without prior complete agreement between the ASEAN and Indochinese states in all aspects: agenda, venue, composition, etc... According to Mr Thach, this condition was really meant to accommodate ASEAN, to make ASEAN feel more "comfortable" in considering its acceptability. But when you look at it from the other side of the coin, it calls to question the sincerity of Vietnam in wishing to have such a conference, especially when the Ho Chi Minh City communique qualified further that the exercise of the international conference must not interfere in the internal affairs of another state. And one is often reminded by Vietnam that what constitutes the Kampuchean problem is an "internal" affair of its puppet Heng Samrin regime.

In the final analysis, ASEAN welcomes any move towards troop withdrawals from Kampuchea insofar as this is consistent with or is within the framework of the relevant stipulations provided for in the ICK declaration.

I am certain that no patriotic Kampucheans would want to see their great and proud nation relegated to the status of a mere appendage of Vietnam. In this respect, the oft-repeated argument that the Vietnamese have introduced stability and order to Kampuchea as a justification of the continued Vietnamese presence must be rejected. What the Kampuchean people want is self-determination; the right for Kampucheans to manage Kampuchean affairs freely and without any foreign imposition of will.

It is with this awareness that ASEAN has encouraged the formation of a nationalist Kampuchean coalition. We see the coalition effort leading not to prolonged fighting but as a means to a political solution. It is a viable alternative which is consistent with the universally accepted principle stipulating the right of nationalists to defend their homeland from alien occupation and to determine their own future. It is an alternative which offers possibilities that must be explored.

The coalition members have had to resolve sharp differences among themselves. They have had to make sacrifices and compromises to realise their common objective -- the expulsion of foreign forces form their homeland and the return of Kampuchean independence and sovereignty. There is no doubt that the coalition has struck a responsive chord among the Kampuchean people. The warm and dramatic reception of the coalition leader, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, in Kampuchea not so long ago has indicated an upsurge of this sentiment. We believe that the popular enthusiasm generated by the Government of Democratic Kampuchea under the presidency of Prince Sihanouk is not because it represents this or that leader or faction.

There are those who contend that we fail to appreciate Vietnam's legitimate security interests. Others contend that pressures, notably economic pressures, against Vietnam applied by the international community are vengeful efforts to bring Vietnam to its knees. The current efforts to deny economic assistance to Vietnam has one simple rationale: International assistance is invariably used by Hanoi to abet aggression in Kampuchea.

It is in the interests of ASEAN and the region as a whole to work towards an eventual viable Vietnam. We do not seek to bleed Vietnam. Vietnam is bleeding Vietnam with her present policy of the Vietnamisation of Kampuchea. Vietnam's adventure in Kampuchea diverts human, technical and material resources from her own war-shattered economy and inhibits assistance from other quarters which is needed to rebuild Vietnam. Thus goals set down in the latest Vietnamese strategy for national economic reconstruction as recommended in the fifth party congress will never be realisable.

The claimed essence of Vietnam's reluctance to negotiate our differences is the so-called "China threat." Hanoi constantly reminds us that we in Southeast Asia must guard against Chinese hegemonism and expansion. China has affirmed her support for a neutral and nonaligned Kampuchea. China has also stated her complete willingness to sign a non-aggression pact with Vietnam after Hanoi completely withdraws from Kampuchea. Is it not a non-aggression pact with China which Mr Nguyen Co Thach said in ASEAN that Vietnam desires and sets as the condition for her total withdrawal from Kampuchea?

We do not underestimate the difficulties involved in resolving the Kampuchean problem. But I wish to express my gratitude for letting me convey to you some of our views on the complex situation. I, of course, know that all of you share with me the earnest desire to continue to explore avenues to peace in Kampuchea, to peace and prosperity in Southeast Asia.

Further Remarks

[Interview with Foreign Minister Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila at Foreign Correspondents Club of Thailand following speech on 11 August]

[Excerpt] Question: ASEAN has stood firm on the Kampuchean question and left it to Vietnam to make all the moves. Will ASEAN come up with some alternatives to open up new areas that can be subjected to negotiations?

Answer: Nguyen Co Thach is going to Indonesia and the Philippines. We hope that he will change some of his stance. We try in every way to talk to him and I myself have told him that I would like to go to Vietnam too. We welcome other efforts to reach a solution and never closed the door. We have been talking to other concerned parties. Vietnam has raised the question of the "Chinese threats" but China also subscribes to the ICK resolutions and said that Kampuchea will not be used as a springboard to threaten other neighbouring countries.

Question: Does the Vietnamese rejection of the ICK resolutions mean that the dialogue that has recently been established ends here?

Answer: It may take some years before we reach agreement with Vietnam. Nguyen Co Thach and myself are friends -- you know, he called me brother. We will have to keep on talking and I feel that Vietnam wants to find a way out of its quagmire and we will try to accommodate.

Question: Can you make an assessment on Thach's statement that he will allow the Soviets to build bases in Vietnam?

Answer: I believe that he is kidding. Vietnam is a proud nation.

Question: Sihanouk reportedly feels that he lost flexibility in negotiating with the Vietnamese because he joined the coalition. Has he indeed lost flexibility?

Answer: At the beginning I think he did feel that, but after he signed the accord in Singapore he changed his mind. When he came to Bangkok and I asked him about it, he said that I'll never say that again.

Question: Is Vietnam really interested in a political solution? If yes, how would that affect Heng Samrin who said that the present situation in Kampuchea is irreversible?

Answer: Thach said when he was here that everything is negotiable. Your question is a good question; I told Thach that if he was sincere we will even help him to solve his country's problems.

Question: Will our colleague, Barry Wayne (an ASIAN WALL STREET [JOURNAL] correspondent who was expelled because of his article on a refuge camp), whom we miss very much, be allowed to return to Thailand?

Answer: I miss him too! I think we are your friends and I'll try to do my best...and he will return soon.

SAIYUT DISCUSSES MILITARY AID TALKS WITH U.S.

BK111131 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 0000 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] The United States understands Thailand's military plans and that a joint decision is needed under certain circumstances. Supreme Commander Gen Saiyut Koetphon gave an interview to newsmen at Don Muang Airport yesterday upon returning from a visit to the United States:

[Begin recording] We want logistical support in times of need. First of all, we want faster delivery of the weapons, such as antiaircraft guns and cannons, we purchase under the assistance program. The United States assured us of prompt delivery to keep up with our armed forces' expansion plan. Second, since we have a limited amount of weapons in reserve, we therefore want the United States to be able to supply the weapons we need for self-defense quickly in emergencies. The delivery can be made either by air or by sea. We told the United States that with the money we have, we cannot buy weapons for sufficient reserves. We can have only a limited amount of weapons at a time. We therefore need their assistance. It should also be long-term military assistance and not just supplies in response to each request in times of need which is also slow to carry out. The United States acknowledged our need.

It also acknowledged the joint logistics plan between Thailand and the United States. During my visit, I stressed the need to test this plan as scheduled for next year. By the way, I would like to inform the public here that we have reached an agreement with the United States on a joint military plan. It is up to the two governments to decide -- whether the Thai Government wants to receive U.S. assistance and whether the U.S. Government would agree to assist us under certain circumstances. If an agreement is reached, this mutual plan which has been drawn up in detail will be followed up. It concerns purely military matters. [end recording]

Concerning U.S. assistance to Thailand, the supreme commander says: [begin recording] We told U.S. authorities to help push the foreign military sales [FMS] credits estimated at about $91 million for us next year. This still has to go through several stages. We tried to explain the military budget we received this year and the limits to our military budget as a result of the overall economic situation of our country. We told them we have to depend mainly on the FMS credits. They understood our point and assured us that they would fight for us in Congress.

The next issue is something new which I will also tell our unit commanders about later on. We also need to know about U.S. plans for weapons expansion for use in our consideration of weapons purchases for our armed forces. We have to know about U.S. weapons production plans, the types of weapons and the prices. Otherwise, we could again make mistakes as in the past. For example, we once needed 155-mm artillery and antiaircraft missiles but the United States refused to sell them to us. This prompted us to buy elsewhere and it was a waste of our budget money. We should have been able to make use of U.S. credits to purchase U.S. weapons. Besides, this resulted in an undesirable lack of coordination in the weapons systems used by the armed forces. We would have difficulty in planning weapons purchases if the United States does not tell us what weapons will be available.

[Question] Did you negotiate about the purchase of Harpoon missiles?

[Answer] The United States will send a team of experts for discussions with the Royal Thai Navy commander who will decide whether the navy will purchase the missiles.

[Question] Did the United States agree to sell the weapons to us?

[Answer] They have agreed to release the weapons for allied countries, but there are some technical conditions.

That means, to get the weapons those allied countries must have the technical capability to detect targets over the horizon. This is a technical point and I believe there will be no problem for us. Anyway, they want the weapons to be used for self-defense and not to pose a threat to allies. [end recording]

SUPREME COMMAND REPORTS ON ANTI-CPT OPERATIONS

BK100823 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 0530 GMT 8 Aug 82

[Text] The Supreme Command Information Office has announced that the deterioration of the Communist Party of Thailand [CPT] is the result of conflicts which have occurred between the countries of the socialist world since 1979. Moreover, the recent strategic offensive by the government has forced the CPT to abandon its strongholds and permanent military bases in many areas. Due to the helpless failure of the CPT's political operations, at least 1,123 communist terrorists have surrendered to the government during the first half of this year. Of this number, over 500 terrorists have surrendered in the south.

The status of the CPT in each region of the country are as follows:

In the north, government forces have captured the CPT's strongholds in Chiang Rai, Phayao, Nan, Phitsanulok and Loei Provinces, forcing terrorists to flee these areas and leave large quantities of weapons, ammunition and belongings. More than 3,000 Meo supporters and about 100 terrorists have surrendered to government authorities. Military operations launched by the terrorists in this region were mainly aimed at obstructing road construction work.

In the northeast, the CPT's mass-mobilization operations in northern part of this region have usually proved unsuccessful. According to the accounts given by the terrorists at the regional committee level, the CPT is confronting with the Mai [New] Party in certain areas of Nakhon Phanom Province. In the southern part of this region, the communist terrorists are still carrying on their mass-mobilization operations in the common border areas of Prachin Buri, Nakhon Ratchasima and Nakhon Nayok Provinces and remain inactive in the rest of region.

In the central region, the CPT is very weak. It has no mass support and a very small military movement.

In the south, government forces have captured the CPT's military bases in Suart Thai, including its provincial and district command posts, thus weakening the strength of the terrorists in Nakhon Si Thammarat, Phatthalang, Trang, Satun and Songkhla Provinces. During the first half of 1982, more than 500 terrorists surrendered to the government.

NHAN DAN HITS PRC REACTION TO TEXTBOOK REVISION

[NHAN DAN 9 August article by (Phuong Ha): "They Cannot Obliterate a Lesson of History"]

[Text] Public opinion in many countries and among the Chinese people is greatly angered by the Japanese Ministry of Education's revision of history textbooks, especially concerning Japanese militarism's aggression against China. Feeling compelled to react, the Beijing leadership expressed the hope that the revision would not be exaggerated. The Japanese minister of education has suspended his visit to Beijing scheduled for September. Prime Minister Suzuki, however, said this has not affected his coming trip to China.

It is easy to understand the soft attitude shown by the Zhongnanhai leadership. China, according to them and as emphasized by Premier Zhao Ziyang, must accelerate bilateral relations with Japan regardless of ideological differences -- in fact, regardless of the Chinese people's honor and interests. On the night of 7 July 1937, Japanese troops attacked Chinese border defense guards at Lu Gou Qiao, opening their large-scale invasion of China. However, Japanese textbooks -- to be used at schools in the coming academic year -- only say Japanese troops entered China or clashed with Chinese guards and not that they invaded China.

The Japanese Education Ministry's textbook revision has violated the interests and honor of the two countries' peoples. The Chinese people experienced the cruel crime of a war of aggression waged by Japanese militarism. The Japanese people suffered the terror of two atomic bombs dropped by the United States on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. These events cannot be ignored in face of this distortion of history aimed at whitewashing Japanese militarism and removing the inferiority complex of Japanese youths caused by atrocities of their country's militarism.

The bloodthirsty aggressors who invaded China in 1937 cruelly killed and massacred more than 1 million people in Nanking, Shanghai, Shandong, Guangzhou, Wuhan and so forth. During that period, the Chinese people lived among destruction and hundreds of them were arrested, disemboweled, dismemberred and buried alive. The Chinese people have not forgotten this blood debt owed by Japanese militarism. This event is intolerable in the eyes of all men and women of conscience in Japan. The Communist Party of Japan has condemned the Tokyo authorities' attempt to distort history.

The powerholders in Beijing and Tokyo, however, have pursued a path running counter to the interests and aspirations of the two countries' peoples. Militarism is being revived in Japan. The textbook revision is merely designed to serve this revival.

Ironically enough, the reactionary forces in the Beijing leadership, while verbally protesting the revival of Japanese militarism, are actually accelerating the revival of Japanese militarism, the revival of those militarist, bellicose Japanese forces which had trampled Chinese territory.

Pursuing the policy of big-nation expansionism and hegemonism, the Beijing reactionary groups are attempting to flirt with Tokyo and do all they can in exchange for Japan's pledge to participate in the struggle against the Soviet Union and Vietnam and to oppose peace and revolution in Asia and the rest of the world.

Significantly, Beijing has noted Suzuki's assurances that Japan will do its best to cooperate with China in its four modernizations, and that Japan will strengthen relations with ASEAN and support Democratic Kampuchea. Beijing officials have urged Tokyo to strengthen the U.S.-Japan military alliance and increase its military budget in order to turn Japan into a military power.

In reality, the Japanese leadership is satisfying the request of their friends in Zhongnanhai. They are escalating militarily. Tokyo has persistently increased its military budget from more than $10 billion in fiscal year 1982 to $17.4-18.2 billion in FY 83. They have allowed the Pentagon to set up dozens of military bases, including a nuclear weapons base, and to station tens of thousands of military personnel in Japan. They recently signed an agreement on military cooperation with China.

Those who have nurtured the dream of a tripartite military alliance — the United States, Japan and China — are attempting to oppose the peace initiatives of the Soviet Union and other socialist countries. This is an act which runs counter to the trend of the era and the vital interests of the Japanese as well as Chinese peoples.

The Beijing leadership can deceive no one with either their moderate protest or a strong verbal one, if there is any. The question is how to prevent and defeat collusion between Chinese expansionism and Japanese militarism. In their struggle against the common enemies, the Chinese and Japanese peoples enjoy the sympathy and support of the peoples of other ASEAN countries and the whole of progressive mankind.

NHAN DAN VIEWS SECOND PHASE OF DRAFTING YOUTHS

[NHAN DAN 10 August editorial: "Satisfactorily Carry Out the Second Phase of Drafting Youths Into the Army"]

[Text] During these historic days of August, scores of our youths are again eagerly setting out to fulfill their duties of building the armed forces and firmly defending the fatherland. This is the second phase of this year's campaign to draft youths into the army, and it will ensure success for the first year of the military service law.

Since promulgation, this law has been enthusiastically welcomed by youths and the people of various strata because it promotes the collective mastery of everyone in the cause of national defense.

The first phase has ended with fine results. Thirty-seven of 47 provinces and cities are reported to have fulfilled or overfulfilled their quotas. Troop recruitment shortfalls have been reduced sharply. A number of provinces which had failed to meet troop recruitment quotas have now fulfilled them. Youths have been setting out to fulfill their military service with eagerness and pride. Those youths returning home after fulfilling their military service have been given appropriate welcomes.

The drafting of youths during the second phase is actively underway in various localities. Many provinces have completed preparatory steps, such as organizing the registration and physical checkups for military service and preparing the paperwork for those youths who qualify for enlistment during this phase. Public organs, enterprises and factories have made a great deal of progress in complying with the military draft decision.

To ensure good results for the drafting of youths into the army, we must place emphasis on correctly complying with all stipulations of the military service laws, with standards, with the system of military exemption or deferment and with all the established methods.

Provinces and cities must ensure that they can complete the delivery of highly qualified recruits according to the set quotas within the mid-August to 15 September period to ensure that every recruit makes a good soldier, thus reducing cases of disqualification to the minimum. It is important that we properly prepare each recruit prior to his departure.

Chapter III of the military service law provides concrete stipulations for the preparation of youths for enlistment in the army. It also points out the responsibility of every citizen, administrative echelon, sector and mass organization -- especially in city wards, villages, precincts and districts -- to satisfactorily prepare youths in terms of their knowledge, thinking and sentiments. In addition, they must be made fully aware of their duties and honor and their right to participate in building steadfast armed forces so that they can defend the fatherland and the people.

For many decades now, our armed forces have served as a great school for succeeding generations of youths. The armed forces have contributed to turning out numerous outstanding cadres and combatants.

Although military life is full of difficulties and hardships, it is regarded as an ideal environment for the growth of youths and it is where youths are prepared in all respects to advance into the future. Thus, standing under the "Determined to win" military banner and being educated and trained in the armed forces are great joys for youths, as well as for every family which has children in the army.

It is necessary to enhance party leadership and the abilities to direct various administrative echelons, sectors and military draft councils in accordance with the functions and authority entrusted to them by the state. Military, public health, public security, information and cultural agencies must closely coordinate with each other in preparing youths carefully for enlistment into the army in accordance with schedules and the law.

Youths of military age to be drafted into the army during this phase will comprise those born between 1 September 1955 and 31 August 1964. Those who once refused to carry out military draft orders and were punished will also be inducted during this phase, if they are still of draft age. The names of those entitled to military exemption or deferment should be publicly announced in order to ensure fairness and accuracy in accordance with policies. Youths must be given 15 days advance notice of their departure so they can prepare for military induction.

With a fine tradition reflecting the sentiments of the entire party and people toward their sons and brothers taking up arms to defend the fatherland, all sectors and localities must satisfactorily organize the sendoffs for youths enlisting in the army. The festive day of departure must be the merriest day for the youths -- a festive day marking the close army-people love.

All military units, especially training centers for new recruits, must do everything necessary to welcome new recruits satisfactorily.

Satisfactorily preparing and fulfilling the task of drafting youths into the army during the second phase in accordance with stipulations amounts to creating a new step in systematizing the law on military service.

JOINT STATEMENT SIGNED WITH SRV JOURNALISTS

[Text] The Indonesian Journalists Association and the Vietnamese Journalists Association signed a joint statement in Jakarta today concerning cooperation between the two organizations. The joint statement was signed by Harmoko, the chairman of the Indonesian Journalists Association, and Tran Lam, the head of a visiting Vietnamese Journalists Association delegation.

Both organizations have agreed to abide by a joint communique they signed in Hanoi on 5 November 1981. The two organizations have also agreed to take concrete steps toward the creation of a new information and communication order.

SUHARTO RECEIVES IRAQI PRESIDENT HUSAYN'S ENVOY

[Text] Jakarta, Aug 11 (ANTARA) -- President Suharto stresses the importance for maintaining and promoting the unity and consolidation of the Non-Aligned Movement. The head of state made the statement when receiving the personal envoy of Iraqi President Saddam Husayn at the Bina Graha building here Wednesday.

The Iraqi envoy, Hasan 'Ali al-Amiri, conveyed a personal letter of President Saddam Husayn to President Suharto.

President Suharto told the Iraqi envoy that the non-aligned consolidation, when properly preserved, would enable its member countries to achieve their ideal objectives.

Hasan 'Ali al-Amiri, who is also Iraqi trade minister, told the press moments after two-hour meeting that his visit to this country was merely aimed at conveying the Iraqi president's letter to President Suharto about the planned non-aligned summit slated to be held in Baghdad in September this year. He said Iraq had taken all necessary steps and intensive preparations for the forthcoming summit.

During the meeting with President Suharto, visiting Minister Hasan 'Ali al-Amiri was flanked by director general for political affairs of the Foreign Affairs Ministry, Munawir Zadsali, and two Iraqi diplomats.

SUHARTO RECEIVES SOUTH KOREAN ENERGY MINISTER

BK111005 Jakarta ANTARA in English 0850 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] Jakarta, Aug 11 (ANTARA) -- Visiting South Korean Energy and Resources Minister So Sang-chol Wednesday met President Suharto, with whom he discussed possibilities of increased bilateral cooperation in development of energy resources. The South Korean minister also called on the Indonesian chief executive to introduce himself as his country's new energy minister.

Indonesian Mines and Energy Minister Subroto, who accompanied So during the meeting, told newsmen later South Korea wished to import Indonesian LNG (liquefied natural gas) at a rate of 1.6-2 million tons a year. Talks were still underway on the price and transportation, Subroto said.

On another occasion Wednesday Yudo Sumbono, president director of the national oil company Pertamina, said South Korea and Indonesia had reached agreement in principles that the LNG would be sold to South Korea at a CIF (cost insurance and freight) price. But the Indonesian side was stil facing the problem of transportation.

About Indonesian crude petroleum exports to South Korea, Yudo said the 1982-83 volume was down by 20,000 barrels a day compared to the quantities exported in 1981-82. The decline was attributed to a drop in South Korea's needs for LSWR [low sulphuric wax residue] oil.

MOKHTAR SAYS ASEAN STATES AGREE TO ADMIT BRUNEI

[Excerpt] Jakarta, Aug 11 (ANTARA) — All five ASEAN (Association of Southeast Asian Nations) member countries have agreed to admit Brunei into their regional organization's membership when a request to that effect is received. This was disclosed by Foreign Minister Mokhtar Kusumaatmaja after arrival at Halim Perdanakusumah Airport from Bangkok Tuesday evening. The foreign minister had been to Bangkok to attend an ASEAN foreign ministers' extraordinary meeting on Aug 7. He had also made a two-day goodwill visit to Brunei which will proclaim its national independence by the end of 1983.

Mokhtar said Brunei had so far not yet made a representation for admission into ASEAN membership. But it had been showing great interest in ASEAN and twice attended an ASEAN foreign ministers' meeting as observer.

MASSACRES REPORTED IN TWO EAST JAVA DISTRICTS

[By Suharyono]

[Text] Jakarta, Aug. 11 (AFP) -- Armed troops and police have been rushed to two districts in East Java where dozens of people are belived to have been killed in an alleged wave of panic and violence against local witchdoctors. Fuelled by suspicion, deep-seated secular religious teachings and fanaticism, the massacres were carried out mainly last month by relatives of victims of robbers and witchdoctors practising black magic, official reports said today.

Although the situation in the Jember and Bondowoso Districts about 880 km (600 miles) east of here was today reported to be under control, a provincial administration official said police and troops were on the alert for any eventuality. Dozens of bodies were reported to have been found floating in the nearby Sampean River.

Observers recall that the Jember and Bondowoso areas are known as places notorious for thieves and black magicians fond of killing anyone they dislike. However, it appears all is not as it seems, and that some of those killed might not have been sorcerers or thieves.

East Java police chief, Brigadier General Pamudjie claimed that the incidents might have been exaggerated by those who lost relatives to foil the presidential election next March. But observers said his statement could be a sign of blaming those opposing the presidential election in which President Suharto is almost certain to be re-elected for a fourth five-year term of office.

Though East Java used to be the stronghold of supporters of the late President Sukarno, the province is now generally under full control of the military.

A number of military posts have been set up in Jember and Bondowoso, and provincial police say no further killings have been reported this month.

Similar mass killings took place last year when a total of 45 "black magicians and robbers" were murdered by the people, who were said to have taken the law into their own hands in revenge for the deaths of their relatives and parents. Last year's slayings were discovered only a month later when members of parliament visited the area.

Leading parliamentarian Yusuf Hasjim defied official statements that the dead were sorcerers and criminals. "Some of them were Moslem clergymen and the killings must have some political motives," he said.

NEW STRAITS TIMES ON RESULTS OF THACH'S VISIT

SK101653 Kuala Lumpur NEW STRAITS TIMES in English 7 Aug 82 p 12

[Editorial: "New Course?"]

[Text] Is Vietnam changing course on Kampuchea? Or is Mr Co Thach merely striking a flexible pose for the international community even as Hanoi keeps intact the substance of its policy of subjugating Indo-China? There is no doubt that the resumption of dialogue after a two-year break allows ASEAN and Vietnam to understand each other's problems and concerns candidly. The possibility has emerged of evolving shared perceptions about Southeast Asia's long-range security interests. Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie has explained that our insistence on a neutral and independent Kampuchea in no way diminishes our desire for a strong and stable Vietnam, capable of standing up to China. Mr Co Thach has, in return, acknowledged the legitimacy of ASEAN's concern over Vietnam's military occupation of Kampuchea and has softened his earlier stand on the "irreversibility" of Hanoi's military presence in the occupied land. There was also a visible narrowing of difference on the issue of an international conference on Southeast Asia which was proposed by ASEAN last year.

Does all this kindle a glimmer of hope for an end to regional hostility? Or is Hanoi merely seeking to improve its image on the international market where its requests for trade and aid have been spurned by much of the non-communist world? It is significant that Mr Thach did not give much away. He dubbed ASEAN's support for the Kampuchean coalition as an interference in the internal affairs of Phnom Penh. The total withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea was made conditional on ASEAN's ability to underwrite Beijing's good behavior. Even the "gesture of goodwill" of withdrawing some combat units from Kampuchea contained nothing new. The assurance that there was no intention to promote subversion in this part of the world was hedged in by a qualification that Hanoi reserves the right of self-defence.

Many other "concessions" were adroitly meant to work to the advantage of Vietnam. The international conference would bring de facto recognition of the puppet Heng Samrin regime. The proposal to Bangkok to stabilise the situation on the Thai-Kampuchean border seeks to turn the problem into a bilateral one between Bangkok and Phnom Penh and to create divisions amongst the members of ASEAN. There is still some considerable way to go before outstanding differences are settled.

ASEAN MINISTERS MEETING, SRV ACTIONS VIEWED

[Text] The five ASEAN foreign ministers, who met in Bangkok last Sunday to discuss the Kampuchean issue, have reiterated their earlier stand that Vietnam must withdraw all its troops from Kampuchea before a settlement could be found.

During the last few months, the Vietnamese have tried to [word indistinct] the issue of total withdrawal of all Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea by stating that it is prepared to initiate a partial withdrawal of forces. At times, it has even spoken in terms of a substantial withdrawal of forces.

Last month, there were reports that the Vietnamese have in fact initiated the withdrawal by pulling back two divisions and that's the [words indistinct] to the so-called withdrawal. But, at the same time, there were also reports that fresh troops were being sent in to replace those withdrawn. It should, however, be clear to the Vietnamese leadership in Hanoi, now that no one quite believed them in the talks in terms of a troop withdrawal.

The Vietnamese attempt to link troop withdrawal with the reduction of Thai support to the three factions of Kampucheans, while fighting the military occupation of the country, having [words indistinct] unsuccessful. This attempt to create an instance that [words indistinct] has left a predictable failure. What has in fact happened is that Thailand has been forced to beef up its forces at its eastern border because of the actual threat from Vietnam and continued fighting in the border areas.

Thailand has stated repeatedly that it has provided no military support to any of the three resistance groups, but has been forced to provide humanitarian assistance to the nearly 1 million Kampucheans who have sought shelter in the safety of Thailand. This has caused a tremendous burden on Thailand's financial resources and indeed, instead of providing military assistance to the three resistance groups, it is the Thai Government that is in need of financial aid to provide for the refugees.

The Vietnamese Government attempt to link the withdrawal of its troops from Kampuchea to the removal of the so-called threat from China has also convinced no one. To begin with, it was Vietnam which committed an act of military aggression when it sent its troops into Kampuchea in December 1978 on the pretext that it wanted to save the Kampuchean people from the genocidal Pol Pot government. Hanoi also stated at that time that it was attempting to stop the attempt by China to dominate its [words indistinct]. But this attempt has convinced no one as it is difficult to believe that the rabidly nationalistic and extremely narrow-minded Pol Pot group would ever have accepted the [word indistinct] of semipower.

Hanoi has (?nerve) again to talk of a Chinese threat from the north and the need to secure its southern perimeter in order to face this threat from the north. One Vietnamese leader has even stated that Vietnam is prepared to wage two or three major wars with China if need be.

Once again, the vital point that has been sidetracked is that it was the Vietnamese military thrust into Kampuchea that provoked China to launch an invasion of Vietnam's northern provinces.

It is to be hoped that the leadership in Hanoi would view its military adventure in Kampuchea and its host of consequences on Vietnam's economy and national pride in its proper context. There really is no alternative and all sides will benefit if there is a military withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea and the holding of an internationally supervised general election.

SECURITY FENCES ALONG THAI BORDER TO BE BUILT

[Text] The government will start building security fences along the Malaysia-Thai border in Perak next year. They will stretch for 22 km from Bukit Berapit in Kroh to Lepang Menering. The Menteri Besar [chief minister] and state director of operations, Datuk Sri Haji Wan Mohamed Haji Wan Teh, says that survey work on the construction of the fences will be completed by the end of this year.

The security fences will cover all FELDA (Federal Land Development Authority] areas in Lepang Menering near the Perak-Thai border. FELDA [words indistinct] for the fences to be built as they are opening up 405 hectares of land in Lepang Menering for planting rubber.

Referring to the East-West Highway, opened to traffic from the first of last month, he says about 600 vehicles used the highway daily. The security committees of Kelantan and Perak will meet soon to discuss any problem regarding the usage of the highway.

NEW STRAITS TIMES CALLS FRASER VISIT 'SUCCESSFUL'

BK101700 Kuala Lumpur NEW STRAITS TIMES in English 6 Aug 82 p 14

[Editorial: "Fair Dinkum"]

[Text] It has been a successful visit for both the visitor Mr Malcolm Fraser and his host Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir Mohamed. They had two rounds of plain speaking and straight talking in their characteristic manner. Their two countries will benefit from this timely and useful encounter. Of course, Australia has been a good friend of Malaysia. Australians have played a role in goldmining at Raub and combat action during World War II and in the communist insurrection during the emergency period. And there are at present nearly 7,000 Malaysian students -- more than half of the foreign student population down under. "From now on," Dr Mahathir said, "it will be much easier for us to solve any new problems that may crop up..."

However, we support the new Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. Mr Fraser does not. In the economic field, the substantial trade imbalance with Malaysia and other ASEAN countries continues to throw a long shadow over Australian-ASEAN relations. Protectionism is a problem that Mr Fraser also has to live with; he has tried to get the EEC to lower its trade barriers. As such, is he not expected after all to lower the tariff walls in his own country in trading with ASEAN, a so-called priority area in Australia's foreign policy?

He had a point when he called on Malaysians to adopt a more aggressive marketing strategy. Despite high tariff barriers, other countries such as Korea and Taiwan have been able to penetrate the Australian market. How have they done so? Why can't we do the same? Before leaving, Mr Fraser dropped another useful hint. Australians have managed to set up a marketing organisation to help stabilise the prices of wool. We should accept his invitation to see how it works. As for Dr Mahathir's proposal that Australia should relocate low technology and labour intensive industries here, this is actually a ball which both sides will have to keep rolling.

[Text] The visiting Australian defense minister, Mr Ian Sinclair, says any changes to be brought about by the redeployment of the Royal Australian Air Force Mirage squadron in Butterworth will be implemented flexibly and taking full account of Malaysian wishes. One of the two Mirage squadrons will be transfered to Australia next year. Mr Sinclair says no decision has been made on the second mirage squadron. Its future will be reviewed after consultations with the Malaysian Government in 1984 or 1985. The Australian minister was speaking at a news conference in Kuala Lumpur this evening.

He adds that he is really impressed by Malaysia's efforts to develop its own defense capability. Australia will give its cooperation and assistance to Malaysia in this matter.

TIN MINERS CRITICIZE GSA STOCKPILED TIN SALE

BK111427 Kuala Lumpur Domestic Service in English 1330 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] Local tin miners have criticized the U.S. refusal to temporarily suspend sale of its General Services Administration [GSA] stockpile, despite appeals by the International Tin Council.

The president of the All-Malaya Chinese Mining Association, Datuk Hew See Tong, described the U.S. move as being downright irresponsible and extremely discriminatory of the interests of tin-producing countries.

In June and July alone, the GSA disposed of 820 tons of the metal, which was 13 percent of the average monthly permissible export amount for Malaysia. On the 29th of last month the GSA sold 285 tons compared with 245 tons transacted at the Pulau Penang tin market. Datuk Hew stresses that as such, a producers association should be formed to benefit tin-producing countries.

MARCOS SAYS BUSINESSMEN INVOLVED IN 'CONSPIRACY'

OW111431 Quezon City RPN Television Network in English 1100 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] The president has linked some members of the business community to an alleged conspiracy to foment nationwide terror through strikes, bombings and assassinations sometime next month. The president told newsmen that the intelligence community has a watchlist of these business leaders who are reportedly helping finance the entire antigovernment conspiracy movement. The watchlist also includes labor leaders, intellectuals, pseudo-intellectuals, subversives and members of the MNLF.

The president exposed the terrorist plot last Sunday in a speech highlighting the joint PC-INP [Philippine Constabularly-Integrated National Police] anniversary of Camp Bagong Diwa in Bicutan, Taguig. The president then revealed that the targets of the assassination phase of the conspiracy were ranking government officials and military officers. The president said the nationwide strikes and bombings were aimed at centers of civilian authorities.

In today's interview with newsmen, the president again appealed to the leaders of the alleged conspiracy to desist from carrying out their plot. The president likewise assailed some labor leaders identified with the plot for reneging on their promise to abandon their participation in the conspiracy.

ENRILE SAYS CPP, NPA AIM TO ENSLAVE PEOPLE

OW111419 Quezon City RPN Television Network in English 1100 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile bared today that the Communist Party [of the Philippines -- CPP] and the New People's Army [NPA] were using every means to attain its ultimate objective of enslaving the people. Enrile bared this development in a keynote speech at the opening of a 2-day seminar on national security, insurgency and counterinsurgency among governors, mayors and other local leaders of Samar and Leyte at Tacloban.

Enrile said the CPP-NPA will not hesitate to use any means to attain victory, including the killing of anyone who resists the dissident movement. Enrile said many people were being deluded by the Marxists, whose political platform envisions the unattainable goal of complete equality among people, removal of the government and even the laws. Enrile said the seminar should be duplicated elsewhere in the country since it would harness coordination between the military and local political leaders in fighting our common enemy.

BUSINESS LEADER WARNS OF FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES

[Text] Fred Elizalde, president of the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry (PCCI), has warned that 99 percent of business firms in the Philippines are now facing financial difficulties.

In a speech during a dialogue on the Philippine financial situation held at the Philippine International Convention Center, Elizalde reported that "we are passing through one of the most severe economic depressions in the history of mankind," and that the private sector needs government help. The PCCI president called on the government to act now to prevent the collapse of business firms by meeting their urgent needs for refinancing, better interest rates and effective fiscal incentives.

Elizalde expressed the view that the Central Bank's APEX loan program does not answer the immediate needs of the private sector since the scheme is designed more for assisting new projects. "The present urgent need is to strengthen current capabilities, revitalize on-going projects and save the present ventures."

Even those fortunate to have new and attractive projects, he pointed out, are confronted with conditions and collateral requirements that are too stringent for most companies to meet.

Elizalde said the various sectors of business and industry have raised various problems and their common sentiments, in the order of priority, are as follows:

1. The need for refinancing and adequate funding for existing businesses hard hit by recession.

2. Improve short, medium, as well as long-term interest rate structures.

BUSINESS DAY VIEWS ASEAN GROWTH -- PART II

HK120236 Manila BUSINESS DAY in English 11 Aug 82 p 5

[Feature by reporter Abrino Aydinan: "ASEAN'S Growth Reviewed -- Part II"]

[Text] It is more apparent that the individual countries have been charting their national development plans without serious regard to a very fluid regional economic perspective, and some of them do not even hide their preference to go it alone while paying lip service to cooperation.

For all its declaration about its objective being primarily economic cooperation, ASEAN has not moved as fast as the private sector and some government officials would like it to. Impatient Manila businessmen predict that if the review of ASEAN progress directed by the AEM [ASEAN economic ministers] does not result in hoped for measures to make the ASEAN economic community a reality, this dream would never become a reality. And they have reasons for their fears.

The internal tariff cutting exercises in ASEAN have not set off a dramatic increase in intraregional trade; in proportion to their world trade, the turnover among the ASEAN countries is rather small. From 15.5 percent in 1970, it ironically declined to 13.8 percent in 1978, following the signing of the agreement on ASEAN preferential trading arrangements (PTA) in 1977. It is a measure of the futility of the exchange of voluntary tariff concessions, which produced most of the 8,000 items in the PTA list consisting of products not or minimally traded by any of the ASEAN countries, that the economic ministers ended the practice last year. To continue building up the PTA items, ASEAN has been automatically including in the list more and more low trade-value products and is considering to raise to $2.5 million the maximum import-value level of items that would come automatically under the preferential trading system. But critics are quick to point out that these items are about as significant to intra-ASEAN trade as their historically low trade values indicate. Certainly, ASEAN has a long way to go before it can even become a simple free-trade area.

In industrial cooperation, ASEAN has made the most significant strides in setting up big joint projects. Of these ASEAN industrial projects (AIP's), the two urea projects based in Indonesia and Malaysia as well as Thailand's rock-salt soda ash project have taken off the ground, while the Philippines' project has finally been decided to be a copper fabrication center, after changing options twice (first a phosphatic fertilizer, then a pulp and paper project). Meanwhile, Singapore has again made no move to contribute a regional project, after withdrawing its proposal for diesel engine manufacturing; Singapore has put up ludicrously low equity investments in the three proceeding AIP's. This modest progress in building common industrial plants has taken about six years.

The basic agreement on ASEAN industrial complementation (AIC) was approved last year after three years of negotiations, but apart from one finalized project for the five countries to gain exclusive rights to maintain existing facilities for certain automotive components and a yet to be finalized second package of automotive components production in the region, nothing else could be decided upon.

AIJV's: The private sector took the initiative in developing a program for ASEAN industrial joint ventures (AIJV's), which would make industrial cooperation easier by avoiding the tedious process of identifying products that would admit of production complementation among the ASEAN countries. After going through numerous drafts, which sought to do away with the limiting "industrial" qualification of the project and to expand the concept to include agriculture, trade finance, shipping and other services, the proposed AIJV guidelines failed to get final approval from the AEM, to the frustration of the ASEAN Chambers of Commerce and Industry.

After a fairly long period of dialogue with major trading partners and sources of inward investments and aid, ASEAN has realized its expectations are not matched by the quanitity and quality of assistance forthcoming from these quarters. The large amounts of ASEAN's funding for ambitious regional industrial projects have a willing donor only in Japan, and this on controversial terms which have invited charges of slick dealing on the part of the Japanese.

In a set of guidelines formulated last year for the further conduct of dialogues with third countries and organizations, ASEAN set down priority areas where meaningful cooperation with them should be negotiated and could be realistically expected. It has also taken tentative steps to forge formal relations with other Third World regional groupings such as the South Pacific Forum that includes newly independent and emerging island nations which may be culturally closer to the ASEAN countries than any other, and the Arabs' newly founded Gulf Cooperation Council. Realization: If anything, this thrust in foreign relations may indicate a growing realization in ASEAN that the usefulness to each member of traditional ties with the West rooted in its colonial past wanes as their interdependence grows. Consequently, with the frontiers of national interests expanded in a regional community, so is the horizon for cooperation with third parties. In this relation, Filipino private sector figures who perennially prod ASEAN towards its economic-community goal are taking up the Pacific community idea that originated outside ASEAN. This may be looked at as an ASEAN attempt to forstall any rivalries between ASEAN and other Pacific groupings for the attention of the major prowers in the region. One of these ASEAN private sector visionaries, David Sycip (president of Rizal Banking Corp. and a director of ASEAN Finance Corp.), has come out with his proposal for a "Western Pacific initiative."

OGAWA VIEWS UNCHANGED ON TEXTBOOK CONTROVERSY

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 13, KYODO -- Education Minister Heiji Ogawa said Friday his idea against rewriting "distorted" accounts in Japanese textbooks remains unchanged, despite a suggestion by Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi to the contrary.

Sakurauchi said Thursday the Education Ministry should correct misleading descriptions in the textbooks about Japan's military activities in China and Korea before the end of World War II. "I think the foreign minister said so as a man in charge of diplomacy," Ogawa said at a news conference. "What I've said (against suggested textbook correction) remains unchanged," he added.

Ogawa has said correction of the textbooks, already approved by the Education Ministry, will damage the textbook censorship system.

Better Understanding With PRC

OW130114 Tokyo KYODO in English 0007 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Beijing, Aug 13, KYODO -- Japanese officials said here Thursday they and Chinese officials now understand each other better in the dispute over Japan's school textbooks after two rounds of talks on the issue harming relations between Tokyo and Beijing.

But the two officials of Japan's Foreign and Education Ministries quickly added that better understanding does not mean substantial progress in defusing the controversy. They said the Chinese were "very serious" in the talks held Tuesday and Thursday.

Further details of the talks cannot be given at the request of the Chinese, they added.

BANK LOAN TO ROK -- Tokyo, Aug 12, KYODO -- A group of 11 Japanese banks and insurance firms signed a contract Thursday to extend a yen 10 billion ($38 million) loan to Korea Development Bank of South Korea. The Bank of Tokyo, representing the lenders, said the yen-denominated loan will be repaid over a period of 10 years after a 5-year grace. The interest is the equivalent of Japan's long-term prime rate -- 8.4 percent currently -- plus a 0.3 percent commission. [Text] [Tokyo KYODO in English 0855 GMT 12 Aug 82 OW]

POPULATION STATISTICS -- Japan's population at the end of March stood at 117,776,771, up 0.66 percent over a year earlier, according to statistics released by the Home Affairs Ministry Saturday. This meant the rate of the annual population increase went down for the ninth consecutive year. It is likely that Japanese families will be made up of less than three people in 10 years from now. NODONG SINMUN DENOUNCES S. KOREA-JAPAN 'COLLUSION'

[Text] Pyongyang, August 11 (KCNA) -- NODONG SINMUN today prints a signed commentary titled "Military Collusion Which Has Entered Dangerous Stage" in connection with the Japanese reactionaries' further stepping up of military compact with the South Korean puppets at the instigation of the U.S. imperialists. Noting that the intensified military tieup between the Japanese reactionaries and the South Korean puppets finds expression in frequent mutual visits between their military bosses, the commentary says:

In the period from 1971 to 1977 South Korean tours by personnel concerned of the "Self-Defence Forces" of Japan numbered 37, 12 greater than in the preceding like period. In this period the number of visits of South Korean puppet military bosses to Japan was 50.

Noteworthy among mutual visits between military bosses was the South Korean tour of Yamashita, the then director general of the Defense Agency of Japan, in July 1979. He held "South Korea-Japan defence ministers talks" with the puppet defence minister to hatch a plot for intensifying the military compact and inspected the Military Demarcation Line area, whipping up a war hysteria.

The first visit to South Korea by Yamashita as incumbent director general of Japan's Defence Agency, opened up a new phase in further strengthening the military tieup between Japan and the South Korean puppets and in realizing the "U.S.-Japan-South Korea triangular military integration."

The Defence Agency of Japan openly announced that the blockade of three straits surrounding Japan is the basic strategy of the naval "Self-Defence Forces" of Japan and went so far as to rave that "general joint exercises with South Korea are legally possible" for the blockade of the South Sea of our country. It disclosed even the plan to step up in real earnest exercises of the naval "Self-Defence Forces" of Japan and the South Korean puppet army.

In recent years the right-wing hooligans of Japan held military training in South Korea, and in Japan the exercises of airplanes and tanks of the "Self-Defence Forces" were staged to carry out operations in Korea if a war breaks out there.

The Japanese reactionaries intensified military collusion with the South Korean puppets shows that they are stepping up their reinvasion of South Korea and viciously scheming in an undisguised way for their direct military involvement if the U.S. imperialists ignite another war in Korea.

The intensified military collusion between Japan and the South Korean puppets finds expression also in that the Japanese reactionaries are giving military "aid" including weapons to the South Korean puppets and zealously infiltrating into the munitions industry of South Korea.

According to the Japanese paper NIHON KEIZAI SHIMBUN, Japan fully supplies the South Korean munitions factories with special steel raw materials such as molybdenum, vanadium and tungsten needed for the manufacture of weapons and with techniques for the production of war supplies.

In recent years the Japanese reactionaries are directly investing in the munitions industry of South Korea to actively back up the South Korean puppets' production of munitions, to say nothing of supplying them with techniques and materials for the munitions industry.

The monopoly Zaibatsu of Japan has increased "aid" to South Korea's munitions industry and is now exporting various types of military equipment and weapons in large quantities to South Korea.

According to data available from publications, monopoly Zaibatsu of Japan is exporting large quantities of parts of warship, gun, machinegun, military truck and tank, communications apparatus, parts of radar, airplane engine and portable weapons and ammunitions to South Korea.

Facts show that the military tieup between the Japanese militarists and the South Korean puppets has entered a very grave stage and is geared for the provocation of another war in Korea.

If the Japanese reactionaries, oblivious of the lesson of history, partake in the new war provocation manoeuvres of the U.S. imperialists and the South Korean puppets, it will bring nothing good to them.

NODONG SINMUN DENOUNCES JAPAN'S TEXTBOOK REVISION

SK121548 Pyongyang KCNA in English 1512 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 12 (KCNA) -- NODONG SINMUN today in a signed article says that the Japanese reactionaries' revision of textbooks is an ideological offensive to eradicate the deep-rooted anti-war sentiments of the Japanese people and step up militarisation and war preparations.

Dismayed at strong public censure at home and abroad of their revision of textbooks on history, the Japanese Government authorities are hurriedly inventing incoherent pretexts outwardly, prattling about "understanding" and the like. But, in actuality, they are taking an overbearing attitude to ignore the just public demand at home and abroad.

The article titled "Ideological Offensive for Militarisation and War Preparations" says: Minister of Education Ogawa, speaking for the Japanese Government, openly ranted at a recent press conference that he "has no intention to change the description in the revised textbooks." And the director of the National Land Administration Agency claimed that Japan's colonisation of Korea and invasion of the Asian Continent in the past were "inevitable" in an attempt to defend the Japanese imperialists' aggression on Asia. This betrayed the real intention of the reactionary ruling circles of Japan.

What should be pointed out in connection with the revision of textbooks on history is that the reactionary ruling circles of Japan have no regrets at all at the aggressive crimes of the Japanese imperialists in the past. The history of the Japanese imperialists' invasion of Korea, China and Southeast Asian countries in the past was a bloody crime-woven history of wholesale massacre and wholesale destruction, a record of slaughter of millions of, tens of millions of guiltless people and the destruction of priceless cultural wealth and property.

What should be mentioned next in connection with the distortion of history is that the reactionary ruling circles of Japan have an impudent view of the Asian people. This finds graphic expression in the fact that the Japanese Government authorities try to categorically reject the just demand of the peoples of Asian countries for the correction of textbooks distorting history, simply dismissing it as an "interference in their internal affairs."

As for the demand of the Asian people concerning the textbooks distorting history, it is not a problem related to things within Japan but a problem of honestly describing the aggressive acts of the Japanese imperialists outside Japan, that is, in Korea, China and other parts of the Asian and Pacific areas. To claim that this demand is an "interference in the internal affairs" is outrageous, indeed. With such preposterous pretext they cannot justify their distortion of history.

Another thing to be mentioned is that through the distortion of history the Japanese reactionary ruling circles try to justify the Japanese imperialists' wars of aggression in the past and repeat the history of aggression. In embarking upon the road of Asian aggression in the past the Japanese militarists pursued the aim of establishing the "Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere", a colonial sphere of influence with Japan as its leader, on the vast Asian Continent. That today the Japanese reactionary ruling circles distort history to justify their past wars of aggression shows that they are going to take again the road of militarist invasion by inheriting the history of aggression and following in the footsteps of their predecessors.

The revival of militarism and overseas expansion are the state strategy of Japan and part of the ideological preparations to mobilize the people for war of aggression, and the revision of textbooks is a demand of this policy. Herein lies the danger of distortion of history in the textbooks. Today the militarisation of the country and war preparations are rapidly stepped up in Japan. For the establishment of a war system, politics is being rendered reactionary at a rapid tempo.

Along with acceleration of war preparations in political, economic and military domains, the Japanese reactionaries are trying their hardest to imbue the minds of the Japanese people with an aggressive militarist idea.

To revise the textbooks and teach a distorted history to the children and youth is aimed to make them accept as "a good thing" the Japanese imperialists' aggression in the past and thus use them with ease in war of aggression without any psychological resistance.

The article stresses: The Japanese reactionaries' revision of textbooks is an anachronistic act leading to the road of militarisation and war. The Asian people today are not the Asian people of yesterday. If the Japanese reactionaries think that they can invade Asian countries and dominate them again, it is a foolish delusion.

[NODONG SINMUN 13 August commentary: "People Will Take Revenge Many Times Over"]

[Text] The Chon Tu-hwan military fascist clique has again revealed its sordid nature as a pro-U.S., flunkeyist group.

Holding a sentencing trial on 11 August against those involved in the case of arson at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan, the Chon Tu-hwan clique passed death sentences on Mun Pu-sik and Kim Hyon-chang, life sentences on Kum Un-suk and Yi Mi-ok, and prison terms of up to 15 years on 10-odd persons including Choe In-sun, Kim Chi-hui, and Yu Sung-yol.

In spite of strong protests and denunciations at home and abroad, the Chon Tu-hwan clique imposed capital punishment and heavy penalties on numerous patriots on the orders of the U.S. imperialist masters. This is a nation-selling and treacherous act which cannot ever be tolerated.

The fascist hangmen's atrocious, murderous trial against the South Korean patriots has been provoking indignation of all people who cherish human dignity, independence and justice.

The burning of the U.S. cultural center in Pusan was an explosion of the pent-up fury and grudges against the U.S. imperialist aggressors and was an eruption of the unanimous aspirations of the South Korean youths, students and people against the United States and for independence, democracy and the fatherland's reunification.

The U.S. imperialists, who sneaked into South Korea as uninvited guests under the guise of liberators, have not been liberators, nor friends, nor aid-givers at all. The only things which the U.S. imperialists have given to the people while playing masters in South Korea have been subordination, a state devoid of rights, poverty, ruin, and division of the country's territory and of the nation.

It is clear that the South Korean people, who cherish national dignity, independence, freedom and democracy, cannot live forever with all kinds of national disdain and contemptuous treatment under the U.S. imperialists' colonial rule.

It is just for the South Korean patriots to burn a U.S. cultural center, one of the aggressive strongholds of the U.S. imperialists. It is just resistance to the oppressors and is a patriotic act which should be highly esteemed.

Those who should be punished in South Korea are not the patriots but the Chon Tu-hwan nation-selling and treacherous group, which is selling the country and the nation to the outside forces. The very treacherous group is raving at and punishing the patriots. This is a sellout, a challenge to patriotism, and is a vicious attack on the anti-U.S. and pro-independent forces.

It is not worth mentioning further that the trials have been conducted by the U.S. imperialists pulling the strings behind the scenes.

Under the masters' order to ferret out and inflict severe punishment on those involved in the arson case, traitor Chon Tu-hwan, who has not an atom of national conscience in him, expressed his regret over the case and staged a farce of holding a murderous trial by even offering a vast reward and arresting the patriots.

The Chon Tu-hwan ring is the U.S. imperialists' stooge and is the most sordid and contemptible among all successive South Korean puppets.

The Kwangju massacre, which well revealed the atrocious nature of the colonial rule and fascist terrorism in South Korea, and the Kim Tae-chung trial case, which is called the greatest dark trial in the 20th century, were committed by the Chon Tu-hwan military fascist clique under the manipulation of the U.S. imperialists.

This trial against those involved in the case of arson at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan is unprecedented because the trial is offering up the compatriots as sacrifices in order to curry favor with the U.S. masters.

This antinational trial is a fascist, frantic farce fabricated by those who have been seized with fear and have tried to escape the ever-deepening crisis of colonial rule.

Today, the anti-U.S., anti-Chon Tu-hwan sentiment is mounting among the South Korean people with each passing day and the anti-U.S. and pro-independence spirit is growing. Voices crying out "Yankees, go home!" "Overthrow the Chon Tu-hwan clique!" have been vigorously ringing out.

The vicious trial against those involved in the case of arson at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan is a product of the schemes aimed at squashing the people's aspirations against the United States and for independence, democracy and fatherland's reunification, repressing the anti-U.S., anti-Chon Tu-hwan sentiment and maintaining the U.S. imperialists' colonial rule. However, with suppression they cannot reverse the course of their fate, which has already declined.

The more intense the suppression, the more it will only add fuel to the burning flames of struggle.

The unjust trial against those involved in the case of arson at the U.S. cultural center should be immediately cancelled and all patriots should be unconditionally released without delay. People will never tolerate the unjust court decision against the patriots and will by all means revenge themselves on the Chon Tu-hwan clique's criminal acts many times over.

YI POM-SOK PREVIEWS CHON'S TRIP TO AFRICA, CANADA

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 13 (YONHAP) -- South Korean Foreign Minister Yi Pom-sok said Friday the upcoming African tour of President Chon Tu-hwan attests to the expanding scope of Korean diplomacy and bears both political and economic significance.

In an exclusive interview with YONHAP, Yi said: "The president's trip will reaffirm the ties of friendship and cooperation between the Republic of Korea and African nations, and underscore our desire to expand such ties." Noting that African nations constitute 28 percent of the United Nations membership and nearly half of the Nonaligned Movement, the foreign minister said that Seoul will use the presidential journey to achieve a diplomatic advantage over North Korea on the African Continent. The Korean president leaves Monday on a two-week tour of Kenya, Nigeria, Gabon and Senegal, the first African tour by a Korean head of state.

Concerning Seoul's African policy, Yi said: "As a member of the Third World, Seoul hopes to cultivate friendly relations with all African nations, regardless of political ideology. We fully support independence movements being undertaken by some African countries. We condemn apartheid."

The foreign minister noted the economic importance of resource-rich Africa for resource-poor South Korea, and said Africa offers bright long-range prospects as a market for South Korean exports. As Korea seeks expanded cooperation with Africa, Yi cited construction and joint venture operations between private Korean and African firms as the most promising sectors to pursue. "We are still in the stage of exploration in terms of our economic cooperation with African countries. We want to share the experience we have had during the last 20 years of nation-building with our African friends," Yi said.

On the president's trip to Canada on the last leg of his journey, Yi voiced the hope that the Korean president's proposal for a Pacific summit will draw broad support in Canada, which has expressed an interest in the strengthening of relations among Pacific Basin countries.

WORLD BODIES URGED TO HELP RESUME N-S TALKS

[Text] The International Red Cross, the United Nations and two other international bodies were urged by an association of North Korean refugees yesterday to play an appropriate gobetween role in reopening the deadlocked South-North Red Cross Conference (SNRCC).

In the petitions, the international organizations were asked to make every possible effort to relieve divided families in Korea of their long suffering in a humanitarian spirit. The petitions were sent to the heads of the international bodies by the Central Committee of the five provisional northern province headquarters shortly after a ceremony observing the 11th anniversary of the Korea National Red Cross proposal for the SNRCC.

The four are the chairman of the IRC International Committee; the U.N. secretary general; the chairman of the U.N. Committee on Human Rights; and the secretary general of Amnesty International.

The representatives of the five provisional headquarters decided to designate Aug. 12 as "Separated Families Day" with an eye to launching a pan-national move for the reunion of the dispersed family members.

Unification Minister Son Chae-sik said in a speech during the ceremony that the peace-loving people in the South should exert every effort to pursuade the Northerners to cast away their anachronistic illusion of unifying the Korean Peninsula by revolutionary means and by force. The projected pan-national movement by the separated family members would help to achieve peaceful reunification at an early date, earlier than expected depending on "our strenuous efforts," he said.

TONG-A ILBO VIEWS OUTCOME OF PUSAN ARSON TRIAL

[Unsigned article: "Criminal Act Following a Misleading Ideology Cannot Be Forgiven"]

[Excerpts] The court has passed death sentences on defendants Kim Hyon-chang and Mun Pu-sik, the two masterminds of the Pusan arson case, as demanded by the prosecution. The panel of judges also sentenced Catholic Fr Choe Ki-sik to imprisonment and most other defendants to heavy penalties. By doing so, the court has acknowledged the prosecutor's stance that anyone who violates national security should be punished sternly without exception.

By finding Fr Choe Ki-sik guilty of violating the national security law and of sheltering offenders, the judiciary rejected the defense counsel's assertion that he is innocent under canonical law and made it clear that, when one, even a priest, shelters criminals he will be subject to punishment according to the existing legal system.

The court acknowledged the prosecution's charges that the ideology of defendant Kim Hyon-chang and the college students, including Mun Pu-sik and Kim Un-suk, sided with puppet North Korea's views and thus found them guilty of violating the national security law. The court ordered strong punishment against the defendants on the basis of its findings that the details of their indoctrination work and studies as well as the assertion of "complete preparations for northward invasion" and their demand for "the withdrawal of the U.S. troops from Korea" benefited the communist puppet North Korea and directly echoed its assertions.

The court stressed: Although the defendants attempted a sophistry that they had carried out a courageous act for the restoration of freedom, their offences served communist puppet North Korea's objectives by plunging Korea into a diplomatic predicament and degrading its international prestige. The court said: There has been no dispute over the fact that their arson claimed human lives and they committed a reckless crime on the basis of a half-baked ideology. In view of these facts, they, though young students, deserve heavy penalties.

The court's verdict is of great significance in that it warned that no one violating the national security law can be dealt with lightly and that young men should not assume a careless attitude toward the question of national security. Though the defendants termed their indoctrination work for college students as studies to grasp the realities of society, it was radical terrorism following a misleading ideology. For this reason, the court imposed heavy penalties on the defendants.

'SOURCE' CONDEMNS JAPAN'S ATTITUDE ON TEXTBOOKS

SK130717 Seoul CHOSON ILBO in Korean 12 Aug 82 p 2

[From the column: "News Behind the News"]

[Text] Although over a week has passed since the Japanese Government received the ROK Government's memorandum requesting the correction of distorted historical facts in the authorized Japanese textbooks, the Japanese Government has not yet shown a sincere attitude.

On 11 August, one source at the Foreign Ministry made a scathing remark: The Japanese Government seems to be preparing for a protracted battle. However, things will not go as they wish this time.

In analyzing the situation, he said: The Japanese side apparently thinks that if it casually delays, keeping in mind President Chon Tu-hwan's scheduled tour of African nations, then the growing anger in the ROK will subside and they will be able to quietly pass off the history distortions without correcting them. His assessment was: In the past too, at every opportunity Japan has played such an orchestrated strategy.

The official stressed: This notwithsganding, everything will not go smoothly and according to the Japanese strategists this time. If they plan to delay, our government will also take the attitude of casually and pertinaciously clinging to this issue.

SCHOLAR WARNS AGAINST JAPAN'S REMILITARIZATION

SK130322 Seoul CHOSON ILBO in Korean 9 Aug 82 p 5

[From the column "Morning Essay" -- article by Sin Il-chol, professor at Korea University]

[Excerpts] Pretense and real intent harmoniously coexist in the Japanese people's structure of consciousness. The disparity arising from the so-called "tatemae" and "real intention" has remained a constant issue in moral education in Japan. In our language, there is no word which can be equivalent to the Japanese word "tatemae." In a certain dictionary published in our country, I have found the word "tatemae" defined as policy or principle.

Moved by the Japanese people's utter kindness and their proprieties, we sometimes fail to distinguish between their pretense and real intentions.

Some 37 years after the Japanese imperialists withdrew from our country, we find exposed in the revised Japanese textbooks their real intentions which they have concealed behind their pretense, and we are infuriated by this. However, with their repeated hypocritical words, they say they have moderated the ignominious expressions, such as aggression, in their textbooks.

The problem is that most of the distorted portions in their textbooks are directly related with China and Korea, that is, the criminal facts which they should repent as aggressors and wrongdoers.

What they mean is that they want to teach the younger generations an embellished history, covering up their 100-year history since the Meiji dynasty replete with aggression in Asia. What is more, a more ominous, poisonous part of their revision of history in the textbooks is that they have begun to expose the ambition of militarist national evils which they have hidden for the past 30 years and that they, being proud of their economic power, have now exposed their real intention without ever examining the past.

For the past 100 years, whenever the Japanese revised their textbooks, the real problem was not the words or descriptions but a change in their view of history -- a sign of aggression against other countries in Asia.

As far as peace in Asia is concerned, the Japanese militarist wars have always been prepared in their textbooks. This being the case, the Japanese must see to it that they provide a device in the textbooks to prevent wars. This is a declaration from not only the Korean people but from all the Asian people.

With the revision of their history textbooks, the Japanese have once again exposed that they have neither a correct view of history for analyzing their barbarous aggression against Asia -- replete with ignominy and crimes -- nor a world outlook for peace in the world and Japan's role in Asia and that Japan is going back to spiritually immature ultranationalism.

In most cases, the individual Japanese are very pleasant and kind, but they are said to have something ominous in their group consciousness. In the group consciousness of the Japanese who are indoctrinated in the militarist view of the nation lies an astonishing moral numbness; rarely have they guilty consciences toward national crimes. The Japanese deceive themselves with a sickening superiority complex to cover up their guilty consciences, while prevaricating about the disparity arising from their pretense and real intentions. In this regard, Japan is a country lacking any guilty conscience about its most atrocious wars of aggression; it is a country which attributes its guilty acts to the people's loyalty to the emperor, passing the buck to somebody else.

Defeated in war, Japan made its emperor broadcast unconditional surrender to the Allies and signed the document of surrender in San Francisco. Prior to the normalization of Korea-Japan relations, our country received token compensation from Japan. However, Japan should have made a declaration apologizing for its past crimes to all Asian countries.

It is reported that Japan has revised the textbooks in order to eradicate the influence of the Marxist-Leninst view of history and to strengthen anticommunism. However, if the tilt to the right in the textbook revision has produced a distorion of the history of aggression against Asia and if it produces a colonial arrogance towards Korea, this is a more serious question. We agonize over the idea that Japan's tilt to the right and strengthening anticommunism is the same as the Japanese imperialists' daydream. If Japan's rightest anti-communism means beautifying militarism, as shown in the textbook revision, this will serve as a good opportunity for us to reaffirm Japan's real intention in its tilt to the right.

What disappoints us most is that Japanese public opinion supporting the textbooks, which has been leaning toward the right, is mainly backed by those who are said to have a good understanding of Korea or by pro-Korean Japanese. Those Japanese who profess to know Korea best and who have frequently visited out country are in fact not the people deserving our welcome. Those who were once bureaucrats of the colonial system in our country or those who, as policemen during the colonial era, suppressed the Koreans engaged in the independence movement, have claimed that they serve Korea's interests while actually viewing Korea in a negative way. Those who once served as bureaucrats of the colonial ruling system in our country, in particular, must have an incurable prejudice based on the colonial view of history.

Have any of those who claimed to know Korea best indicted the revision of history in the textbooks? We find a troubling dilemna in Korea-Japan relations in the fact that not a few leftist Japanese intellectuals have joined the Japanese intellectuals critical of the Japanese imperialists' aggression against Asia, but that none of those who claimed to be pro-Korean have done so.

Asian countries such as China and Korea, victims of the Japanese imperialists' aggression in the past, while keenly watching the consequences of Japan's tilt to the right -- aimed at pursuing its second attempt to attach more importance to the world outside Asia rather than to Asia itself -- should strengthen solidarity with each other to protect the mainstream of modern Asian history and form an international seminar to prevent Japan from distorting its history of aggression.

The real, wicked nature of Japan heading for remilitarization, which has been hidden behind the peaceful Japan, began to emerge in the textbooks.

ECONOMIC PLANNING MINISTER PREDICTS FUTURE GROWTH

[Text] Deputy Prime Minister Kim Chun-song said yesterday that the Korean economy could grow six to seven percent in the total output of goods and services this year and another seven to eight percent in 1983.

Addressing about 150 graduates of Korea University, he made the prediction on the condition that this year will end up with a normal crop of rice in the fall, while the remote signs of economic upturn, now evident, will continue into next year. Kim, who is also minister of economic planning, was invited as a guest speaker to the gathering of the university graduates who are now in the business world. The meeting was held at the Seoul Sejong Cultural Center early in the morning.

On the monetary side, the deputy prime minister was of the opinion that a 30 percent level of growth in the total money suits the nation as things go now. The total money or M2 is defined as currency in the public's hands and demand deposits at banks (M1) plus time and savings deposits at banks. Roughly within that range, Kim said, the government will properly catch up with other economic variables such as price moves, liquidity flow and international balance of payments.

"Basically," he went on to say, "the difference of perception now causes the difference of judgement on whether the economy is really in trouble or not." In connection with this, the top economic planner recalled that the Korean economy currently experiences a "period of low inflation." The trouble, he further said, is the nation's foreign debts which total about $35 billion at present. This weighs down on the economy somewhat, Kim pointed out, adding that "no big problem will arise, only if the heavy and chemical sector of the economy is to maintain the present pace of export growth." The accumulation of foreign liabilities was largely due to the excessive investments in the heavy and chemical industries in the past, he said.

Referring to the low-inflation trend, the deputy prime minister underlined that the business in general should refresh their perception of the economic phenomena as well as their management style. The same low inflation causes the fiscal revenue to drop, creating much difficulty for the government, he noted. In this respect, the deputy prime minister urged the business to make steady efforts to develop new technology and improve their product quality.

NORTH DEFEATS SOUTH IN YOUTH SOCCER MATCH

[Excerpts] Singapore (Special) -- Republic of Korea was upset by North Korea 3-5 Friday in a semifinal match of the 10-nation Asian Youth Soccer Qualifying Tournament before a crowd of 25,000. The unexpected result brushed away final hope of the ROK, defending champion of the Asian youth soccer, to take a place in the 1983 World Youth Soccer Championship.

The high-spirited ROK players got off to a good start by taking the leading goal just five minutes into the first half, dominating the game. Just one minute later, the North Koreans found a hard-won equalizer before ROK players regained a lead of 2-1 in the 15th minute with a header. The ROK allowed a penalty kick to North Korea three minutes later to end the first half at 2-2 tie.

After resumption, the ROK players, amid cheers from about 2,000 Korean spectators, came brilliantly to keep on pressure on the North Koreans, who looked far older, some of them well beyond the tournament's age limit of 19. They exchanged the lead in the first four minutes of the second half. From 30 minutes into the second half, ROK players visibly slowed down, apparently affected by sweltering heat and slippery ground, to allow two consecutive goals.

KAMPUCHEA REVIEWS INFLUENCE OF PEACE INITIATIVES

[KAMPUCHEA commentary: "The Kampuchea-Vietnam-Laos Peace Initiatives Have Had Widespread Influence on the World"]

[Text] The declaration of the sixth conference of the Kampuchean-Vietnamese-Lao foreign ministers has had widespread influence both in Indochina and on the international scene. In Kampuchea in particular, the people, army, cadres, workers, peasants and intellectuals have organized meetings and sent petitions to the party Central Committee and the government expressing their unanimous support for these proper proposals of peace and good will. This is because since the time they were liberated from the danger of barbarous genocide, our people have had only one sacred wish, that is, to live in peace.

On the international scene, the impetus of this peace offensive also has had great impact and has received praise and support from the world. A number of circles and public opinion in the capitalist countries, particularly in those countries confronting the three Indochinese countries, have had to review their policies.

PRAVDA, organ of the CPSU Central Committee, wrote: The most necessary point is that the ASEAN countries should show their true political attitude, evaluate accordingly the constructive proposals of the three Indochinese countries and respond positively to them in order to contribute to the establishment of peace, stability and good neighborly cooperation in the region.

The spokesman of the French Ministry of External Relations said: The partial withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea is a gesture of political and military characteristics. It will pave the way to finding a broad solution to the impasse which will lead to a permanent solution. The establishment of a safety zone is an initiative which should be considered immediately. This spokesman pointed out that the French Government does not object to attending an international conference on Southeast Asia.

The NATIONAL HERALD of the Indian Government expressed high appreciation for the proposals made by the Kampuchea-Vietnam-Laos foreign ministers' conference. It considered them as a positive step toward a lasting reconciliation in this region.

Progressive opinion in a number of countries has called on their governments to revise their policies on Indochina. The Indonesian paper MERDEKA published an article calling on the ASEAN countries to consider carefully the partial withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea and stressing that they should not mistakenly interpret the good will of the three Indochinese countries.

The official Chinese newspapers have insanely reacted to every point proposed by the conference by slandering the good will of Kampuchea and Vietnam which agreed to step ahead of the ASEAN countries by partially withdrawing Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea. They have tried to block the way to establishing a safety zone on both sides of the Thai-Kampuchean border and to convening an international conference on Southeast Asia.

The recent trip to search for peace by Comrade Nguyen Co Thach, Vietnamese minister for foreign affairs, to Singapore, Burma, Malaysia and Thailand, showed clearly the peace initiatives of the sixth conference of Kampuchean-Vietnam-Laos foreign ministers and constituted a diplomatic activity which dealt a shameful blow on the dark desires of the Beijing authorities who are blocking relations and sabotaging dialogue between the Indochinese and ASEAN countries. Most importantly, this trip has made the ASEAN ruling circles become more aware of the peaceful stand of the Indochinese countries.

Many people with good will the world over have asked themselves why Thailand still objects to the proposal for establishing a safety zone along the Kampuchean-Thai border? Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila has admitted that Vietnam, which represents Indochina, does not want to see hostilities in this region. No one doubts that this kind of safety zone represents an objective factor for ensuring Thailand's security. We stress once again that we reject the claim by the Bangkok ruling circles that the soldiers of the remnant reactionary forces on Thai territory are the ones who guarantee Thailand's security. This is a serious misunderstanding.

In fact, Thailand's assistance to these exiled reactionary Khmers is the source of tension in this area. It should be recalled that progressive opinion in Thailand has also called on the Prem Tinsulanon governemnt to abandon its hostile policy against the Indochinese countries and also strongly condemned the role of Thai leaders, colluding with Beijing, in the formation of the so-called Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea of the three traitorous Khmer groups. But the Thai leaders have carried on their policy of trailing after Beijing toward Kampuchea, cheaply selling out their sovereignty, national independence and territorial integrity and allowing the Pol Pot remnant forces and other reactionary Khmers to use Thai territory as a refuge. This shows that in fact Thailand has already lost a part of its territorial integrity.

The world can see more clearly the reactionary and bellicose face of the Beijing ruling circles in collusion with U.S. imperialists and a number of lackeys in the ASEAN circle, and realize the real face of the so-called Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea in which Pol Pot leads Sihanouk and Son Sann by the nose. At the same time the world has a better understanding of the good will for peace of the three Indochinese countries which have unswervingly and persistently pursued a peaceful policy. This has further enhanced the prestige of the three Indochinese countries in the international arena.

RADIO WELCOMES TERRITORIAL WATERS DECREE

[Station editorial: "The Full and Complete Sovereignty of the PRK"]

[Text] The promulgation of the PRK Council of State decree on the limits of the maritime zones and continental shelf of the PRK dated 31 July 1982 has received a most enthusiastic welcome from our entire army and people. This is a most important legal document. It is designed to enhance the effectiveness of the PRK in defending its sovereignty and other rights with regard to its territorial waters and constitutes a step forward in the gradual expansion of our legal system.

The maritime zones and continental shelf of the PRK are extensive, inviolable areas full of highly valuable natural riches. These zones are of strategic significance in the defense and reconstruction of the fatherland against the sabotage maneuvers and aggressive acts of the imperialist countries and the Beijing hegemonist-expansionists.

This restatement of the decree [ka cheng laeung sa chea thmei] on the limits of all maritime zones and the continental shelf reflects the role and prestige of the PRK which are reaching new heights in the international arena with every passing day.

It also shows that only the PRK Government has the capacity, prestige and right to determine and exercise its legitimate sovereignty. No previous Kampuchean regime could ever exercise such legitimate sovereighty.

According to this decree of the Council of State, Kampuchea's maritime zones and continental shelf are delineated and conformity with international law and the sovereign right and judgement of each state, which vary in meaning and extent, regarding coastal limits. The decree of 31 July 1982 sets forth provisions with regard to five major areas. These are: Internal waters, territorial waters, the contiguous zone, the exclusive economic zone and the continental shelf.

Internal waters are those waters located between the baselines and the coast of Kampuchea and are regarded as part of the land territory of our state. For this reason, all foreign ships and vessels which want to enter or sail through Kampuchea's internal waters must without exception request prior authorization and, as they pass through these waters, must observe all Kampuchean regulations.

The width of the PRK's territorial waters is 12 nautical miles measured from baselines linking the points of the coast and the furthest points of Kampuchea's furthest islands. These baselines are traced along the low-water mark. The PRK exercises full and complete sovereignty over these territorial waters. Which also extends to the airspace above them and to the seabed and subsoil of these waters in conformity with international law and prevailing common practices.

The contiguous zone of the PRK is located beyond and adjacent to its territorial waters, with a width of 12 nautical miles measured from the outer limit of the territorial waters of Kampuchea. In this contiguous zone, the PRK exercises necessary control in order to oversee its security and to prevent and suppress violations of its customs, fiscal, health and emigration and immigration laws. Foreign military vessels wishing to enter this contiguous zone must request permission from the PRK Government. This measure is to ensure the exercise of the right to control, prevent and check at a distance all maneuvers of the enemies who are always seeking to violate the sovereignty of the PRK.

The exclusive economic zone of the PRK is a maritime zone located beyond and adjacent to the territorial waters of Kampuchea. This zone extends 200 nautical miles measured from the baseline. In this exclusive economic zone, the PRK has full sovereign rights over its economic interests and sovereign rights over the exploration, exploitation, preservation and management of all organic or inorganic natural resources of the seabed, subsoil and the waters above the seabed and over all other activities in relation to the exploration and exploitation of the economic zone. The PRK also has exclusive jurisdiction regarding the setting up and use of installations and artifical islands and marine research. It has jurisdiction over the preservation of the marine environment and control of pollution.

All foreign ships are forbidden to fish or exploit any natural resources in any form or to undertake scientific research in the exclusive economic zne of the PRK without prior authorization or agreement of the PRK Government. When they have obtained prior authorization or agreement, they must conform with the laws and regulations of the PRK concerning the exploitation of natural resources and scientific research and with other regulations decreed by the PRK. Likewise, they must strictly carry out all obligations provided in the licenses or the contracts. This measure is aimed at protecting the maritime natural resources of our country and opposing all the designs of the imperialists and international and regional reactionaries to loot this valuable national heritage.

The continental shelf of the PRK comprises the seabed and the subsoil of the submarines areas that extend beyond the territorial waters throughout the natural prolongation of its land territory to a distance of 200 nautical miles.

Though the PRK has not yet exploited them, no country may use the natural resources on Kampuchea's continental shelf. All activities carried out by foreigners on this continental shelf, for whatever end, must be authorized or agreed to by the PRK Government and conform with its laws and regulations.

The PRK will settle, by means of negotiations with interested states, all problems concerning maritime zones and the continental shelf on a fair, appropriate and equal footing and on the basis of mutual respect for sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity.

All of this correctly reflects the principles embodied in the existing laws of the PRK regarding the defense of its sovereignty and rights over all its maritime zones in conformity with the foreign policy of the Kampuchean party and state and with the prevailing trend of the international law of the sea and law on international shipping.

In particular, it has been dictated by the need to safeguard the country's sovereignty and security and fulfill national defense obligations at sea as well as to ensure the proper exploitation of the natural resources in the maritime zones and on the continental shelf in the service of national defense and reconstruction and for the improvement of the people's living standards.

The entire army and people warmly welcome the promulgation of this significant decree on the limits of all maritime zones and the continental shelf of the PRK by the Council of State, proving to national and international public opinion the full sovereignty of the PRK which is the sole legal government of the Kampuchean people. This achievement is attributable to the will to unite as one body displayed by the entire army and people and the close cooperation and militant solidarity between Kampuchea and Vietnam in the cause of defending the national independence and territorial integrity of the PRK.

Our entire army and people are determined to further strengthen and expand these bonds of solidarity so that this glorious gain is preserved forever.

SIANG PASASON SCORES KAMPUCHEAN COALITION PLAN

BK121118 Vientiane KPL in English 0910 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] Vientiane, August 12 (KPL) -- SIANG PASASON, official organ of the party CC, today comments on the efforts of Beijing reactionary circles in close collusion with U.S. imperialism to restore to power the hateful phantom Khmer reactionary groups.

In its commentary, SIANG PASASON notes that having previously produced a comedy scene on the forming of the "coalition government" of the Khmer reactionary in exile, the Beijing ruling circles and their coproducer -- the imperialists -- are putting on a new act in which Sihanouk is the main character to trample upon the Kampuchean people's aspiration.

In putting on the new phase of their comedy, notes the paper, Beijing has successfully rallied certain ASEAN leaders to be their accomplices.

The Beijing reactionaries, furthermore, have tried to win supports both spiritually and materially from various countries which might help to deceive the people.

The recent Bangkok meeting of ASEAN foreign ministers, the commentary ridicules, in particular its joint communique in support of the "coalition government," naively claimed that the Kampuchean problems would be solved if Vietnam withdrew its troops from Kampuchean and let the Kampuchean people determine their own destiny.

All of these clamorous campaign which was timely launched on the eve of the coming summit conference of nonaligned nations and the next 37th U.N. General Assembly, are aimed to maintain the ghost Khmer seat in the world organizations.

The acts carried out by some ASEAN leaders -- under the command of Beijing circles -- represent blatant intervention in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea. These, in fact, will only further the tense situation in Southeast Asia, the paper emphasizes.

Referring to the good will of the Indochinese countries reaffirmed at the 6th conference of the three Indochinese foreign ministers held last month, the paper commends the readiness of the Indochinese countries to sit at the negotiating table in view to realize peace and coexistence among neighbours in Southeast Asia.

The paper further commends the gesture of good will to promote better understanding in which the Vietnamese foreign minister, Nguyen Co Thach, had recently toured some ASEAN countries. This, the paper considers as a step moving toward a peaceful solution over regional problems. This gesture once again was opposed by Beijing and their accomplices.

However, the commentary confirms, the present Kampuchean situation is irreversible. This theatrical act cannot easily deceive the world opinions, and the ghost government as it is will impotently remain so. Moreover, the paper says, the fact is that the Kampuchean people as well as other Indochinese peoples, who had endured and known too well the barbarous experiences under Maoism and the U.S. aggression during which time some ASEAN nations were used as springboard to attack Indochina will not let any enemy to reverse the historical wheel.

The Beijing efforts to render barbarous crimes for other peoples, finally they themselves will harvest the adverse turn, concludes the commentary. [sentence as received]

SK120805 Bangkok Voice of Free Asia in English 1100 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] At a reception for the Thai press held at the Press Center at the Information Department, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, yesterday, Foreign Minister Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila told newsmen that Thailand must continue the political battle against Vietnam, or Vietnam and the Soviet Union may continue to expand their influence in the region.

He disclosed that Vietnam was losing the political battle over Kampuchea. However, the battle should be continued because there could be no guarantee that Vietnam or the Soviet Union would limit their expansion in the area to Kampuchea.

He also said that the fact that Vietnam could not be trusted was illustrated in the way Hanoi Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach had taken contradictory stances on Kampuchea during his recent tour of ASEAN. He said Vietnam Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach would be tough or conciliatory depending on whom he was talking to and this has left ASEAN suspicious and uncertain of his motives. He added that Vietnam has also been very good at exploiting differences of opinion.

SRV ENVOY ASKED TO CANCEL TRIP TO NORTHEAST

[Text] Thailand has asked outgoing Vietnamese Ambassador to Thailand Hoang Bao Son to scrap his plan to visit "Vietnamese Nationals" in the northeast before his departure this month, a spokesman of the Vietnamese Embassy here said yesterday.

The spokesman said that the Vietnamese Embassy was willing to comply with the Thai request to "maintain the good relations" between the two countries.

The Vietnamese ambassador, who is tentatively scheduled to leave here on August 20, had earlier asked for permission from the Foreign Ministry to visit the Vietnamese refugees, who came here during the Dien Bien Phu era, in the northeast. He initially planned to tour most of the northeastern provinces where the Vietnamese illegal immigrants are living, according to another Vietnamese official.

A reliable source told the NATION that the provinces the Vietnamese ambassador had requested to visit included Nakhon Phanom, Ubon Ratchathani, Udon Thani, Nong Khai and Prachin Buri, which borders Kampuchea. He said that government agencies concerned decided to turn down the Vietnamese request as the Thais "were still sceptical about the motive behind the planned visit."

Security officials could not practically provide "100 percent" protection to the Vietnamese diplomat if he was to visit the Vietnamese illegal immigrants, he said. "Just imagine what will happen if something terrible happened during the visits? Some of the Vietnamese people in the provinces are known to be anti-Hanoi," he added.

About 50,000 Vietnamese illegal immigrants who fled to Thailand during the French-Vietnam war about 30 years ago and their descendants are now living in Thailand. Thai officials believe that about 90 percent of them are still loyal to a certain degree to Hanoi.

SIXTY VIETNAMESE SHELLS LAND IN THAILAND

[Excerpts] About 60 Vietnamese rocket and mortar shells landed in Thailand yesterday as Vietnamese forces unleashed a heavy attack on Khmer Rouge guerrillas near the border in western Kampuchea.

The shells, which fell in paddy fields near Ban Nong Ian and Ban Khok Sabaeng, damaged two houses but caused no casualties.

Sources in Aranyaprathet said the Vietnamese attack was in retaliation for an unsuccessful Khmer Rouge assault on two Vietnamese bases in Kampuchea earlier yesterday.

Meanwhile, an unidentified band of Kampucheans yesterday killed two Thai children and an 18-year-old youth who were returning in a pickup truck with other villagers from the black market in Ban Thapsiam. The Kampucheans escaped with about 50,000 baht in cash and valuables from the truck after it careened off the Nong Samet-Thapsiam road.

MILITARY DENIES FORCED REPATRIATION OF KHMERS

[Text] The Supreme Command has denied allegations by United Nations refugee officials that Khmers have been forcibly repatriated from Khao-I-Dang holding centre.

A military source said yesterday that Supreme Command Chief-of-Staff Gen Rian Dithabanchong had conveyed the denial to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). Gen Rian denied that any Khmer refugees had been forced to return to their country, and said that applications for repatriation had been lodged voluntarily by some 15,000 Khmers in the holding centre, and the documents processed in accordance with UNHCR regulations, the source said.

The Khmers applied to return home following the successful formation of the Democratic Kampuchea Coalition Government, and refugees started returning in late June, the source said. Thai military provided the transport to ferry them across the border through safe passes, the source said.

On Monday diplomatic sources reported that the repatriation had been temporarily halted at the request of the president of the Democratic Kampuchea coalition, Prince Norodom Sihanouk. The reason given was that there were inadquate facilities for the returning Khmers on the other side of the border. There are presently said to be 34,027 Khmers in Khao-I-Dang. Military authorities estimate that about 20,000 are waiting to be resettled in third countries after the voluntary repatriation programme is completed. The military source added that two Khmer refugee camps at Sa Kaeo in Prachin Buri and Ban Phya Kamphut in Chanthaburi will be closed by the end of this year, and a small number of the Khmers there will be moved to Khao-I-Dang and Phanat Nikhom processing centre.

GEN ATHIT REVEALS 'RAPID DEPLOYMENT' UNIT

[Text] Assistant Army Commander-in-Chief Gen Athit Kamlang-Ek yesterday revealed the formation of what he described as a special army deployment battalion that can be mobilized to any trouble spots in the country at short notice. He said the unity, known officially as "Rapid Deployment Battalion at Peace Time," is fully equipped with weapons necessary to deal with all kinds of unrests.

The unit, he explained, had no fixed headquarters. He said all army divisions throughout the country will be turned into such unit on a rotation basis. He did not give details of the nature of the operation of the unit which he said was conceived by the government.

Gen Athit yesterday inspected the preparedness of the combined task force of the Bangkok peacekeeping force at its headquarters yesterday. Known as "Norasingh Force," it comprises 153 personnel elected from various military units.

The task force, whose members can handle a wide range of tough military operations, is responsible for areas covering Bangkok and five surrounding provinces. Gen Athit said the task force can be deployed in any of the areas at only short notice because it had been trained for the purpose. The task force, which is equipped with armoured vehicles and rapid moving units, also specializes in sabotage and psychology work.

COMMUNISTS 'COMPLETELY DEFEATED' IN SOUTH

[Text] The government has completely defeated the Communist Party of Thailand's military strategy in the south and the party has no more permanent headquarters here, Maj Gen Panya Singsakda, commander of the Fifth Army Division and Pho To Tho 43, said at the weekend in Hat Yai.

Gen Panya said the government had overcome the CPT militarily after it had adopted "Policy 66" -- Order No. 66/2523 of the prime minister's office which was a significant political and military strategy drawn up to fight the communists. He said that for more than a decade the government's policies had not only failed to defeat the CPT but had instead enhanced its strength as years passed by. Previously the government had never admitted that it was waging war on the CPT but said instead that the CPT had declared war on the government.

He said that previous governments used the term "supress" in dealing with terrorism but after Policy 66 was issued, the strategy had changed. "In past years we knew only that the military dealt with the CPT by supression, but since we made this clear-cut policy, we have had the new term 'national armed forces' which comprise all groups of people subscribing to the democratic ideal, fighting the CPT and successfully defeating them," Gen Panya said.

He said Policy 66 was tantamount to being the first policy in which the government has openly declared war on the CPT, both militarily and politically. He said the policy also emphasised the use of democracy in the fight with the CPT.

"Democracy is our winning card, the one which the CPT has most feared. Communism never fears dictatorship, but rather is fond of it," he said. He gave examples of dictatorial rule in countries like China and the Soviet Union in the past which later fell to communism. But he said that India, which is one of the world's poorest countries, had not become communist because the people there had democratic ideals, he said.

He said that after introducing Policy 66, the government had devised Policy 65, Order No. 65/2525, to deal even more effectively with the CPT. Policy 65 did not revoke Policy 66 but improved its political strategy for the fight with the CPT, Gen Panya said. The new policy mainly focused on developing democracy as well as using the military in fighting communism, he said.

We strongly condemn the blatant aggression of Israel against Lebanon and their genocidal crimes against the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples, especially their atrocities in Beirut capital city in recent days. At the reception, Khalid al-Fahum thanked Chairman Pham Van Dong for his message, and stressed: "If the situation requires that the Palestinian fighting forces withdraw from Beirut, that does not in any way mean the end of our fight. In this struggle, victory belongs to the Palestinian Revolution".

TIBETAN DALAI LAMA WANTS DIALOGUE WITH COMMUNISTS

Speaking in Melbourne during his first visit to Australia, the Dalai Lama says both have a common bond -- they each want to improve living conditions for mankind. He says that with this bond in mind, he will travel to Mongolia and the Soviet Union next month to try to find common ground.

The Dalai Lama points out that a good dialogue between Buddhism and communism will affect several mission people in Asian countries which have adopted communist governments in the last 30 years. He says many of these people still want to be Buddhists because communism has not been a complete answer to their spiritual problems.

[Text] Australia has had informal talks with the United Nations about contributing troops to a peacekeeping force in Namibia. The renewed talks in New York have followed optimism among diplomats that years of negotiations might soon lead to an agreement on a cease-fire and Namibia's independence from South Africa.

A Radio Australia correspondent in New York, (Graham Dobell), says 4 years ago Australia offered to provide about 300 troops to any United Nations force sent to end the fighting between South Africa and the South-West Africa Poeple's Organization. (Graham Dobell) says no formal request to Canberra had been made but diplomats have expressed cautious hopes that the talks between African and Western nations will soon produce an end to the fighting and a timetable for South Africa's withdrawal.

INDONESIA TIMES VIEWS ROLE OF FOREIGN INVESTMENT

BK091603 Jakarta INDONESIA TIMES in English 6 Aug 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Be Critical and Objective on TNC's Impact"]

[Text] The Government of the Republic of Indonesia still deems it necessary to invite more foreign investment into the country (PMA) [penanaman modal asing -- foreign capital investment] to shore up development efforts and boost national economic growth. It may be recalled that President Suharto, while submitting the 1982/1983 draft budget to the plenary session of the DPR [Dewan Perwakian Rakyat] (People's Representative Council), at the beginning of this year, stated that, while remaining a supplement, PMA is still needed, considering the fact that national private investors could not yet be expected to play a role similar to that undertaken by foreign investors both in financial and technological matters.

It must be understood that we neither depend nor intend to depend on foreign investments for development projects. The ability of internal sources to pay for the development budget is increasing. At the beginning of our development drive the major part of the development budget originated from foreign sources; now in the 1982/1983 development budget, development expenditures originating from domestic receipts make out 78.5 percent of the entire development budget, where those originating from foreign sources are a mere 21.5 percent.

Due to our bitter experiences during the colonial period, some of our people distrust foreign investments, a priori particularly transnational companies (TNC's), and fear that they may divert us from achieving a pancasila economy based on Article 33 of our Constitution.

While inaugurating a seminar on the role of investment in national development organised by the KNPI [Komite Nasional Pemuda Indonesia -- Indonesian Youth National Committee] on 3rd July, the coordinating minister for social welfare, Mr Surono, remarked that Indonesians should not a priori distrust foreign investments, but should be critical and objective in considering their impact.

In analysing the impact of foreign investments on our economy, we may say that our economic development has been stimulated and helped by Western capitalists. It does not mean that we are going capitalistic. Of course we must always guard ourselves against any pull towards capitalism, which is against the spirit and letter of our Constitution.

Mr Suhartoyo, the chairman of the Investment Coordinating Board, remarked at the same seminar that although the Indonesian economic system relies on the private sector, there are some differences with that implemented in the West and the USA. The Indonesian economy has three elements, namely, state owned enterprises, private companies and cooperatives which have the same rights and standing.

Regarding the transnational companies in Indonesia, Mr Suhartoyo stressed that we need not worry about them and that they are still needed as supplements to our own abilities in developing our economy. The government will remain in firm control of the operation of the companies and other foreign investments. The government does not give more facilities to foreign investors than to domestic investors. The truth is to the contrary. Not all industrial sectors which are open to domestic investment are also open to foreign investors. State-bank credits and loans are not available to the foreign investors.

In addition, the government also maintains direct control over investment through the DSP (the list of priority scale) [daftar sekala prioritas] whch guides investment. This is with a view to maintaining Indonesia's national interest and Indonesia's sovereignty over its economy and natural resources.

Some time ago, President Suharto stated that Indonesia is a religio-socialistic state based on Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution reads: The economy is organised cooperatively based on principles of the family state. Branches of production which are important for the state and which dominate the life of most people, are regulated by the state. Land and water and natural resources therein are regulated by the state and shall be used for the greatest possible prosperity of the people.

TRADE MINISTER GIVES JAN-APR EXPORT FIGURES

BK050827 Jakarta ANTARA in English 0730 GMT 5 Aug 82

[Text] Jakarta, Aug, 5 (ANTARA) -- Indonesian export performance was not all that bad despite the world is beset by economic problems, Information Minister Ali Murtopo remarked here Wednesday. Ali Murtopo was speaking to the press following a limited Cabinet session on economy, industry and finance headed by President Suharto.

Trade and Cooperatives Minister Radius Prawiro who was present at the press conference announced that Indonesian export of non-industrial products other than logs rose in volume by 127.8 percent during the first 4 months of this year compared with the export figure in the corresponding period of last year. However, the value of the exports fell by 7.2 percent.

Log exports during the 4-month period of 1982 declined both in volume and value respectively by 62.3 percent and 62.5 percent. This, he explained, was to be expected as a result of the government restrictions on the exports of that commodity.

Non-oil/gas exports during the January-April period this year rose in volume by 36.1 percent compared with the same period of last year but the value fell by 19.3 percent.

The minister announced further that Indonesian exports during the 4 four months including oil and gas totalled around 28.7 million tons valued at U.S.$6,853.8 million. Compared with the last year's performance in the same period the export volume rose by 4.5 percent but fell in value by 5.1 percent. The increase in the export volume was partly owing to growing exports of stone and sand. Exports of plywood during the 4 months rose in volume by 59.2 percent and in value by 73.6 percent or from 179,900 tons in the same period of last year to 286,400 tons in volume and from U.S.$47.8 million to U.S.$83 million in value. Exports of non-oil/gas products other than logs rose in volume by 117.8 percent during the period.

Inflation in July, according to Radius, was recorded at 1.11 percent. During the period of January to July this year the inflation rate was recorded at 6.98 percent. From April to July this year the inflation rate was 1.56 percent as against 2.7 percent in the same period in 1981.

At a news conference in Kuala Lumpur at the end of his 5-day visit to Malaysia, Mr Sinclair said he had found special concern among members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations over increasing Soviet involvement in Indochina. He said Australia shared this concern about Vietnam and the movement and capability of Soviet aircraft and ships in the area. Opposition Concurs in Protest

[Text] The Philippines may elevate to the United Nations its protest against the British Broadcasting Corporation documentary as interference in the country's internal affairs. The opposition leadership, led by minority floor leader (Mariano Logata) joined the majority party in denouncing the British Government agency's BBC-TV program, and urged a government protest against the British Government in the United Nations. The move may be initiated by the Philippines national legislature during the current session.

The issue is the filming of a documentary on the Philippine situation by the British Broadcasting Corporation. The BBC utilized radical Filipino oppositionists in making the controversial documentary. Filipino legislators said the BBC documentary is an insult to the dignity and sovereignty of the Philippines.

MRS MARCOS SEEKS INCREASED FUNDS FOR KKK PROGRAM

[Excerpts] The first lady is asking an increased outlay for the KKK livelihood program to generate more jobs and perk up the local market. She also announced plans to convert public markets all over the country into multipurpose people's centers. Madam Marcos wants the KKK budget raised to as much as 4 billion pesos, to create jobs for as many as 700,000 Filipinos. At the same time the first lady urged the development of the local market potential for the products of industry.

Mrs Marcos made these proposals during the Executive Committee meeting which she attended for the first time since her induction, and in her meeting with local media representatives in Malacanang. During her meeting with reporters, the first lady also proposed the development of the Philippines as a trading center, and a research on new uses of Philippine exports suffering from depressed prices on the world market, such as copra and sugar.

During the Executive Committee meeting, the first lady pointed out that with only 1 billion pesos allotted to the Kilusang Kabuhayan at Kaunlaran, the national livelihood program had provided jobs for 180,000 people, and if the amount could be increased to 3 billion or 4 billion pesos, new jobs the KKK can provide will reach 700,000. She explained that once everybody has a job and has increased income, the 50 million people will compose a potentially rich market for the products of industry.

KYODO: ROK POSTPONES SPORTS MEET WITH JAPAN

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 13, KYODO -- The South Korean Amateur Athletic Association Friday informed the Japan Amateur Athletic Association that the Japan-South Korea junior exchange athletic meet, scheduled to be held in Seoul August 21-23, has been postponed.

The postponement of the athletic meet indicates that anti-Japanese sentiment is running high in South Korea in connection with the textbook issue, Japan Amateur Athletic Association officials said.

The meet was originally planned for senior high school students of both Japan and South Korea as a summer vacation event. Therefore, the postponement actually means the event has been canceled, the officials said. Senior high school students up to the age of 19 were scheduled to compete in eight sports, including soccer, basketball, and tennis. Japan was planning to send about 170 athletes.

BANK OFFICIALS ON EFFECT OF U.S. DISCOUNT RATE CUT

OW140201 Tokyo KYODO in English 0147 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 14, KYODO -- Japanese central bank officials said Saturday the latest U.S. discount rate cut can be taken as indicating that U.S. monetary authorities, while maintaining the monetary policy primarily aimed at fighting inflation, are now gradually easing credit to help shore up the flagging American economy.

Bank of Japan officials also said the action appears to be a measure to impress the American public that the U.S. Federal Reserve Board is now determined to continue to lower interest rates in the United States following the failure of the two previous discount rate cuts to push them down.

The officials said they expect the American discount rate cut -- the third in less than a month -- to have the effect of increasing the yen's value against the U.S. dollar. The recent depreciation of the Japanese currency in relation to the U.S. unit cannot be explained away only with the interest gap between the two countries, they said. But if the latest U.S. discount reduction, taking effect Monday, results in a decline in U.S. long-term interest rates, it will have a favorable effect on the yen's value, they added.

CIVILIANS TO HELP UN SUPERVISE NAMIBIA ELECTIONS

[By Masaru Imai]

[Excerpts] Tokyo, Aug 16, KYODO -- Japan is planning to provide civilians for U.N. peace-keeping operations to supervise elections for Namibia's Constituent Assembly scheduled for early next year, Foreign Ministry sources said Monday. This will be Japan's first personnel contribution to the peace-keeping efforts by the United Nations.

The sources said the plan will be conveyed to U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar who is expected to renew a U.N. call for Japan's cooperation in U.N. peace-keeping operations during his visit to Japan August 23-28. Japan has been urged by the United Nations to contribute personnel to international peace-keeping missions for various areas of international conflicts. Sending military personnel, however, would require revision in the current defense laws, which now lack provisions for the dispatch of Self-Defense Forces abroad in any capacity.

According to the plan, some 20 experts for electoral procedures and technical assistants will be sent to help the elections which will be held in March or April under the U.N. supervision.

The total number of the international team supervising the elections will be about 700, the ministry sources said. Additional to the personnel, Japan will also provide vehicles and power generators necessary for the elections. The sources said the U.N. Security Council will formally decide to hold the elections in September and will make official request for Japan's participation in supervising them.

INERTIA GUIDANCE SYSTEM FOR ROCKETS DEVELOPED

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 16 KYODO -- The inertia guidance system developed by Japan using the highest domestic technology is almost as good as the Delta Inertia Guidance Systems (DIGS) developed by the United States, it was revealed Monday.

The superb performance of the Japanese inertia guidance system developed by the National Space Development Agency for the big H1-A rocket was confirmed Monday after comprehensive simular tests conducted since early August at the agency's Tsukuba Space Center in Tsukuba, Ibaraki Prefecture.

The inertia guidance system accurately guides intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBM) and other missiles to their targets. DIGS has been used in the N2 rocket developed by Japan, but its internal merchanism and systems have been kept a close secret.

Japan's success in developing its own highly sophisticated inertia guidance system is expected to create a sensation around the world, technical experts said.

The inertia guidance system developed by the Japanese agency for the H1-A rocket consists of (1) and inertia sensor unit which detects the position, speed and posture of the rocket, (2) an inertia guidance computer that emits signals to fly the rocket along a predetermined course, (3) an electronics control system that sends out navigation signals to the rocket posture control engine, and (4) a data interface unit that regulates mutual transmission of signals sent out by various equipment and apparatuses, the agency officials said.

The agency started developing the inertia guidance system in 1977. With the participation of Nippon Electric Co., Japan Aviation Electronics Co., Mitsubishi Heavy Industries, Ltd, and other top precision instrument makers, the most advanced domestic technology was mobilized to develop this inertia guidance system for the H1-A rocket. The new system is to be used when the H1-A rocket is launched in fiscal 1985.

BRIEFS

STEEL PIPES FOR PRC -- Tokyo, Aug 5, KYODO -- China has ordered 60,000 tons of seamless steel pipes from Japan, bringing to about 160,000 tons its committed purchases in the second half of this year, industry sources said Thursday. The order capped pricing negotiations under way in Beijing over the past week. Officials from four Japanese tubular steel manufacturers -- Sumitomo Metal Industries, Nippon Kokan, Nippon Steel and Kawasaki Steel -- returned home Wednesday and Thursday, saying China is becoming a major export market for Japanese tubular goods again. The Chinese appear building up over-adjusted stockpiles of oil-well and line pipes and other oil country tubular goods to meet rising domestic demand, they said. The Japanese apparently have accepted considerable price cuts as global demand for pipes and tubes remains depressed, forcing them to keep their mills running at only about half the capacity. REAGAN CALLED DUPLICITOUS ON CHINA ISSUE

SK140422 Pyongyang KCNA in English 0410 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 14 (KCNA) -- Speaking at a press conference some time ago, the U.S. President said that the United States hoped for "continued development of relations with the People's Republic of China," while prattling that it would implement the provisions of the "Taiwan Relations Act."

NODONG SINMUN today comments on this double-dealing tactic.

The U.S. President's utterances show the double-faced tactics employed by the United States in its policy toward China and disclose the U.S. intention to regard Taiwan as an "independent state" and invariably pursue the policy of increasing political and military aid to Taiwan. The author of the commentary says:

The U.S. imperialists had concluded a "defence treaty" with Taiwan, under which they rendered military aid to it, but after the "treaty" was abrogated as a result of the establishment of China-U.S. diplomatic relations on January 1, 1979, they adopted the "Taiwan Relations Act" to legalize their aid to Taiwan. Under this "act" the United States tries to justify its illegal sale of weapons to Taiwan and even claims that China's protest against this is an interference in its internal affairs, but this brigandish sophism of the U.S. imperialists reminding one of a thief calling others thief cannot hold water.

Their sale of weapons to Taiwan, a part and parcel of the sacred territory of China, is a crude infringement upon the sovereignty of China and a wanton interference in her domestic affairs.

This is also a violation of the principles of the China-U.S. Shanghai Communique of February 27, 1972, and their joint communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries. In the communiques the United States recognised that there is only one China, Taiwan is part of China and the Government of the People's Republic of China is the only legitimate government of China and declared that the United States would not have state relations with Taiwan. This notwithstanding, the U.S. imperialists are zealously increasing military aid to Taiwan. This is as good as recognizing Taiwan as a "legitimate state."

In words, they say that it is the invariable policy of the United States to let the Chinese people solve the Taiwan problem. But, in actuality, they supply weapons to Taiwan and interfere in the internal affairs of China. This shows that the U.S. imperialists are more interested in making "two Chinas" a fait accompli than in the peaceful reunification of China. This is a vicious challenge to and an unpardonable criminal act against the entire Chinese people who are desirous of the peaceful reunification of the country.

The Chinese Government and people resolutely oppose the unjust acts of the U.S. Government ignoring the sovereignty of China and repeatedly clarified that they would not tolerate the "two Chinas" plot of the U.S. imperialists.

The commentary stresses in conclusion: As demanded by the Chinese people, the U.S. imperialists must give up the "two Chinas" plot, stop selling weapons to Taiwan and refrain from infringing upon the sovereignty of China and meddling in her internal affairs. This will be beneficial to the United States itself.

VRPR ATTACKS REAGAN POSITION ON TEXTBOOK ISSUE

[Text] U.S. President Reagan held an unexpected press conference on 13 August. Touching on the Japanese distorted description of history textbooks, he babbled that he has an interest in the existing friendly relations, rather than in Japan's past history.

This is an intolerable act which openly patronizes and supports the Japanese criminal acts of scheming to imbue the youths and students with militarist ideology and justify their militarization policy and maneuvers to make inroads overseas by beautifying and embellishing their past aggressive policy through the twisted description of history textbooks.

The anti-Japanese sentiment in Asian countries, including our country, has been growing because of the twisted description of their history of aggression by the revived Japanese militarists. Such sentiments go against U.S. implementation of its Asian policy, so the U.S. imperialists are scheming to pacify them and help Japan -- its lackey ally -- escape its isolation in the international arena.

Our masses will never tolerate the criminal acts of the Japanese militarists who are distorting their shameful history of aggression while reviving militarism in every way under the aegis of the U.S. aggressors and conducting large-scale propaganda about it.

VRPR STATEMENT DENOUNCES PUSAN ARSON VERDICTS

SK140657 (Clandestine) Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in Korean to South Korea 0300 GMT 13 Aug 82

["Text" of the 12 August statement by "RPR spokesman"]

[Text] On 11 August, traitor Chon Tu-hwan, the most heinous national butcher, sentenced 16 persons including Kim Hyon-chang and Mun Pu-sik, who were involved in the arson at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan, to death, life imprisonment and other severe punishments under the instigation of the U.S. imperialists, thus committing an intolerable crime.

The fascist violence act perpetrated in defiance of unanimous protest and denunciation at home and abroad is an intolerable crime against ardent youths and patriotic masses who are striving to build an independent, prosperous, new society by putting an end to the U.S. imperialists' colonial rule. It is a vicious challenge to the just and fair public opinion of the world that aspires for justice and truth.

They dealt a hard blow to the Yankee aggressors who impose shame, misfortune and tragedy on our people, having occupied this land for 37 years. Their acts should not be regarded as crimes but should be praised as patriotic deeds. However, traitor Chon Tu-hwan is attempting to punish and massacre the patriots who performed just national salvation acts, charging them with crimes. This is an act of massacring fellow countrymen by the vicious puppets who are sustained by winning the favor of the masters, betraying the nation.

The bloody torture and barbarous punishments against those involved in the struggle of the arson at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan show more clearly that the Chon Tu-hwan clique is a peerlessly filthy and mean group of U.S. stooges and violent murderers. Is there any other traitor in the world like Chon Tu-hwan who is mercilessly punishing and massacring his own fellow countrymen who resolutely rose in the sacred anti-U.S. struggle to save their people from the ruin of having no independence, while actively supporting the brigandish U.S. imperialists who are perpetrating plunders, arsons and violence and while trampling underfoot his own nation and massacring the people?

The Revolutionary Party for Reunification, sternly denouncing and condemning the criminal acts of the U.S. imperialists and the Chon Tu-hwan puppet clique who punish and massacre patriots, declares that the illegal, murderous trial perpetrated by nation-selling traitor Chon Tu-hwan is totally invalid and holds as follows:

1. Those involved in the struggle of the arson at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan, who rose in the sacred anti-U.S. national salvation resistance struggle, should be released immediately and unconditionally.

2. The U.S. imperialist aggressors should retreat to their home country before they face disgraceful defeat amid fierce flames of our grand anti-U.S. national liberation revolution carried out under the banner of the anti-U.S. struggle for independence.

3. The traitorous Chon Tu-hwan clique, realizing the fact that the day when the Yankee aggressors will be driven out from this land is drawing near, should stop acts of national butchery, stabbing the people with the sword, and should step down from power.

4. All patriotic national forces, realizing that the increasing fascist repression of the U.S. imperialists and the treacherous Chon Tu-hwan clique is a vicious plot aimed at oppressing the anti-U.S. flames for independence that are fiercely growing in South Korea, should more actively and more courageously rise in the anti-U.S. national liberation struggle.

NODONG SINMUN ACCUSES SOUTH OF TORTURING PRISONERS

[NODONG SINMUN 14 August commentary: "A Demon in Human Form"]

[Text] We have received a horrible report from South Korea. According to a news report, the fascist hangmen on 22 July gouged out the eyes and kidneys of two condemned criminals awaiting execution of their sentences in Seoul and sold them.

The hangmen's cursed act is arousing the surging indignation of the people. The puppets raved that the condemned criminals donated their eyes and kidneys to repent for their sins. This is a shameless remark mocking public opinion.

The Pak Chong-hui clique sold the internal organs of dead children to the U.S. Biological Weapon Research Institute. However, the Chon Tu-hwan clique is unhesitatingly committing barbarous acts far more cruel than the previous dictator. Isn't this an act of a bloodsucker in human form!

The puppets' atrocity is not isolated. The Chon Tu-hwan clique is a group of human butchers who are professional killers. It opened the abdomen of a pregnant woman in Kwangju and took out and killed the embryo. It cut off the breasts of a girl student, tied her to a tree and killed her. It is not surprising that such a group of demons in human form gouge out the eyes and internal organs of live men and use them to make money.

The puppets recently sentenced to death South Korean patriots who set fire to the U.S. cultural center to win the favor of their U.S. masters and beg for more dollars, victimizing them in service to their masters.

The Chon Tu-hwan clique, obedient to its masters but outrageously cruel to the fellow countrymen, like a wolf is becoming more violent every day. The puppets' cruelty follows the example of the U.S. barbarians, who were fattened through aggression and domination, massacres and atrocities and who made handbags with the skin of the native Indians and decorations with the bones of live men. The unprecedented barbarous military terrorist rule in South Korea today is based on such cruelty. The barbarous act committed recently fully exposed the filthy nature of the so-called moral politics advocated by the puppets.

The puppets sold the nation and people to outside forces, ceaselessly perpetrating frauds by abusing power, and gouged out the eyes and internal organs of the patriots and innocent residents, dragging them to the execution ground. This is the justice and morality they rave about.

The fascist hangmen, unhesitatingly committing various atrocities and massacres, reduced South Korea to a miserable dark land of the Middle Ages.

As long as the Chon Tu-hwan clique remains in South Korea, the South Korean people cannot avoid disaster. Today, the indignation of the South Korean people is directed toward the Chon Tu-hwan clique and the U.S. aggressors, who are causing misfortunes and manipulating the Chon Tu-hwan clique behind the scenes. Only when the colonial terrorist rule of the U.S. imperialists and their stooges' ends can the people escape the pain and misfortune they endure today.

MINJU CHOSON CRITICIZES SOUTH'S AFRICAN POLICY

[Text] Pyongyang, August 15 (KCNA) -- MINJU CHOSON today carries an article exposing the crimes of the South Korean puppet clique against the African and Arab peoples in connection with its desperate attempt to approach their countries, pretending to be their "friend."

The author of the article titled "South Korean Puppet Clique Is Vicious Enemy of African and Arab Peoples" says: The true colours of the South Korean puppets as a vicious enemy of the non-aligned and new-emerging nations find expression first of all in that they have zealously defended the Israeli aggressors. It notes that when the Israeli aggressors provoked the third and fourth Middle East wars the South Korean puppets claimed that the Arab countries were responsible for the wars and sent many airmen of the puppet army.

Saying that the close relations between Israeli aggressors and the South Korean puppets are still maintained, the article goes on: No sooner had he been installed in the puppet presidential chair than the traitor Chon Tu-hwan promised "close cooperation" with the Israeli aggressors. In June when the Israeli aggressors again started an armed invasion of Palestine and Lebanon, he defended the aggressors.

The South Korean puppets actively vindicated the Israeli aggressors, saying that the world people's denunciation of the Israeli aggressors is a "groundless" one.

The South Korean puppets have also established dirty relations with the racists in Africa and are zealous in opposing the struggle of the peoples of this region for national independence and social progress. When the imperialists and colonialists launched an armed intervention against the African peoples, the South Korean puppets praised it as a "humanitarian step" and used vile languages, too dirty to speak, against the just struggle of the African people for freedom and liberation. When African countries achieved national independence and embarked upon the building of a new life under the slogan of "Africanisation", the South Korean puppets went so far as to insult their struggle as "a rash act" rejecting modern technology and civilisation and returning to primitive age.

The South Korean puppets are lackeys of U.S. imperialism who have all along opposed the just struggle of the African and Arab peoples against imperialism and for independence; they are a heinous enemy of the new-emerging nations.

It is foolish of the South Korean puppets to try to make their way into the new-emerging nations, shamelessly pretending to be "friend" of the African and Arab peoples.

The African and Arab peoples who set store by justice clearly see through the sinister attempt of the Chon Tu-hwan puppet clique, the old stooge of U.S. imperialism, and will never be fooled by the deceptive machinations of the puppets.

The Chon Tu-hwan puppet clique is trying to attain its sinister aim by worming itself into the non-aligned and new-emerging nations at the instigation of the U.S. imperialists. But the aim can never be attained and the puppets will never be able to save themselves from the lot of international orphan.

REACTION TO JAPANESE TEXTBOOK REVISION CONTINUES

Japan-Korea Council's Statement

SK160504 Pyongyang KCNA in English 0349 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, August 13 (KNS-KCNA) -- The National Council for Normalisation of Japan-Korea Relations on August 7 issued a statement demanding the correction of the distorted description of the history of the Japanese imperialists' aggression on Korea in Janapese textbooks.

Noting that the distortion of historial facts through the approval of textbooks by the Japanese Government leads to the Japan-U.S.-South Korea military alliance and openly discloses an intention to go farther along the road of militarism, the statement denounces it.

After dwelling on the fact that the Japanese imperialists took away Koreans by force to subject them to all sorts of maltreatment and deprived the Koreans even of their names under the pretext of change of their names to Japanese ones, the statement stresses:

1. The Japanese Government should immediately correct on the basis of facts the distortion of the history of the Japanese imperialists' aggression on and colonial domination over Korea, apologize for its acts so far and stop arms buildup.

2. It should change its hostile policy towards Korea and its policy of freezing the division of Korea into the North and the South.

3. It should discontinue huge military aid to the Chon Tu-hwan "regime."

4. It should guarantee the national rights of Korean citizens in Japan.

NODONG SINMUN Denunciation

SK130556 Pyongyang Domestic Service in Korean 2233 GMT 12 Aug 82

[NODONG SINMUN 13 August special article: "With Fraudulence and Jugglery They Cannot Cover Up Aggressors' Criminal Acts -- in Denunciation of Japanese Authorities' Distortion of History Concerning Their Aggression of Korea"]

[Text] The shamelessness of the Japanese authorities' farce of revising history textbooks has also been revealed in their beautification and embellishment of the history of crimes concerning the Japanese imperialists' colonial rule over Korea.

The respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught as follows: The Japanese imperialists enforced a truculent rule of terrorism in the style of the Middle Ages -- unprecedented in world history. The Japanese imperialists deprived the Korean nation of all rights and freedoms and did not allow at all the freedoms of speech, press, assembly, association and religion.

The Japanese imperialists' colonial rule over Korea was a harsh rule (?of conquest) unprecedented in the history of mankind. From their iron rule in the 1910's to the cultural rule in the 1920's and to the fascist rule beginning in the 1930's, the Japanese were unswerving in the truculent Middle Ages-style rule of terrorism aimed at eradicating the Korean nation and freely plundering our country's resources. This notwithstanding, the Japanese authorities, far from trying to teach to their youths and students the truths of history, are scheming to cover up all kinds of crimes which they committed in Korea for 36 years, while even blaspheming our people.

To cover up the history of crimes concerning the Japanese imperialists' colonial rule over Korea, they, first of all, tried to cover up their criminal acts of plundering the Korean people's land on a large-scale through the decree on land surveying.

To cite an example, the Japanese history textbooks say that land ownership was confirmed through the large-scale land survey and that a vast amount of land was absorbed into government ownership. This description is propaganda, as if at that time in Korea, land ownership was not confirmed, but on the occasion of the arrival of the Japanese, the ownership of land was established for the first time.

At the same time, by distorting and depicting as so-called requisition the plundering of land by means of fraud, jugglery and brute force, they cover up the blood-stained record stained of their having deprived the Korean peasants and feudalistic government of land.

As has been revealed, in our country, land ownership had long been legally established. At the end of the feudalistic system, the land ownership system was in disorder. However, this disorder reflected just the change in the feudalistic system and never meant any disorder in the land ownership itself.

There was land omitted from the state land register because the land owners attempted to gain profits by way of tax evasion but there was no arable land without owners.

Therefore, the so-called confirmation of land ownership was totally unnecessary. The scheme was nothing but a trick aimed at plundering land under various kinds of pretexts.

Speaking of the requisition, it was on the premise of handing over land. Nonetheless, no one handed over their land or land owned by the state at his own will to the Japanese imperialists except for a small number of pro-Japanese elements. This is well revealed by the concrete process of land surveying which was carried out in full-scale fashion right after the occupation. By forcibly demanding that the Koreans report afresh their land ownership under the pretext of a land ownership survey, they disapproved all land ownership and documentary evidence authorized by our country up to then. They approved only the land about which the owners reported to (nishe) -- chief of land surveying bureau of the government-general -- the address, names, or the names and location of owned land, land category, serial numbers, grade and acreage within a time fixed by the governor-general. (Article 4 in the decree of land surveying)

Great restriction was placed on landowners' registration of their land. Registration procedures were very troublesome and complicated. At that time, Japanese documents stipulated that the government required landowners to give notice to the authorities on their ownership of land during a certain period, that, if necessary, the government would participate with the landowners, or those representing them, in sowing the land and that they should claim their ownership of land at the land surveying bureau after obtaining approval from the landowner committee. (page 348, section on policies, the History of Korean Agriculture)

Many farmers lost their land registration right by missing the specified period because of the troublesome and complicated procedures. The Japanese imperialists regarded those farmers who had failed to register as in violation of registration regulations and mercilessly deprived them of their land ownership, a cruel suppression of those who had disobeyed. This shows how piratically they usurped land owned by Korean farmers.

As a result of the Japanese imperialists' piratic survey of land, a declaration was made to turn over 133,000 chongbo of [words indistinct] and plant site and over 900,000 chongbo of farmland, including paddyfield, into state ownersnip by the Japanese imperialists. (page 602, A Survey Report on the Land and Land Tax Systems in Korea)

Also as a result of the survey of land, a feudalistic system for land ownership was maintained and strengthened in rural areas that favored the Japanese imperialists. After usurping over a million chongbo of land, the government-general of Korea became the largest landowner, with colonial firms, including the notorious Oriental Colonization Company, and Japanese landowners ranked after it. In 1918, the year the land survey was completed, the Oriental Colonization Company came to own over 77,000 chongbo of land and Japanese landowners, over 200,000 chongbo. Instead of managing their land in a capitalist manner, these landowners resorted to exploitation with an over 50 to 90 percent tenant rate. (page 370, Colonial History)

The land survey caused over 450,000 farmers to go completely bankrupt while the Japanese Government, firms and individuals came to own large amounts of land. This is the result of the land survey. Concealing an aggressive and piratic nature and saying that land in Korea was taken over in a fair manner and that the ownership of land was confirmed is an outrageous distortion of history and a brazen attempt to beautify and embellish the Japanese imperialists' facist colonial rule.

While concealing colonialists' maneuvers to exterminate the Korean people, the Japanese authorities have distorted a series of coercive measures that were to turn Koreans into the subjects of the empire by trampling underfoot the dignity of the Korean people.

In dealing with modern history in high school textbooks they said that the worship at the Shinto shrine had been encouraged and that the Japense language had been used in Korea as a common language with the Korean language. Historical facts are that the worship at the Shinto shrine had not been encouraged, but forced and that the use of the Korean language had not been permitted, but completely banned.

With the arrival of the 1930's, the Japanese imperialists, in order to meet the requirements for a war of overseas aggression, changed so-called cultural rule into an atrocious, tyrannical fascist one. They carried out a movement to turn the Korean people into subjects of the empire -- a movement to exterminate the Korean people ideologically and culturally. The aim of the rascals' attempt to turn the Korean people into subjects of the empire was not to temporarily cope with the Sino-Japanese war, but to adopt a lasting policy for maintaining their rule in Korea. (page 828, The History of 30-Year Rule)

As reflected in their remarks on the implementation of the policy for rule over Korea, their maneuvers to turn the Korean people into the subject of the empire proceeded from the basic aim of the Japanese imperialists' colonial policy and was the product of their policy for pacifying the Korean people. Proceeding from this aim, the Japanese imperialists forced the Korean people to worship at the Shinto shrine to thwart their independent spirit and instill in them the idea of worshipping the emperor -- an anti-communist consciousness. Saying that the Japanese sun goddess is the creator of the universe, that the Japanese people are the legitimate offspring of this ghost and that the Korean people should believe in this goddess because the Korean and Japanese people are a homogeneous people having the same ancestors, the rascals built Shinto shrines throughout the country and forced everyone to visit these shrines to worship them. Greeting regular annual events, they forced the people to visit these shrines. They forced students to visit them weekly in groups. When some of the students disobeyed, the Japanese, thinking this expressed an impure idea, had the police and military police arrest them.

During World War II, their attempt to force the Korean people to worship this ghost reached its zenith. They forced the family of each household to install on the wall of the living room of their house a household alter -- a ghost house and a miniature Shinto shrine enshrining the Japanese sun goddess -- and worship at this alter morning and night. By organizing neighborhood associations, they had these associations oversee these activities.

In light of history, it is obvious that the claim in the school textbooks that the worship at the Shinto shrine was encouraged is a sheer lie.

The claim that, together with the Korean language, the Japanese language was used as a common language is an outrageous distortion of history. This is an attempt to conceal the Japanese imperialists' maneuvers to exterminate the Korean language. Historic facts show that, in trying to turn the Korean people into subjects of the empire, the Japanese imperialists maneuvered to exterminate the Korean people forever by depriving them of their language.

By depriving our people of their unique language to turn our people into Japanese, the Japanese imperialists maneuvered to enervate the spirit of the Korean people and exterminate them. Thus, in the early 1930's, the Japanese imperialists' governor-general in Korea repeatedly issued coercive directives to local governments, urging Koreans to use the Japanese language. However, our people, who had a strong spirit of independence, did not use the Japanese language. Enraged by this, the colonialists resorted to a fascist method of comprehensively banning the use of the Korean language. After designating the Japanese language as a national language at the beginning of the 1940's, the rascals banned classes on the Korean language and the use of this language at all schools under a slogan for the common use of the national language. Under the slogan "from the national language of the school classroom to that of practical life," they banned the use of the Korean language in family life. Those who spoke the Korean language were treated like criminals. They were pelted by kicks and blows. Even those school children who spoke the Korean language were severely punished. They were not allowed to attend class and ordered to perform loathsome labor.

All agencies refused to give consultation to those who failed to speak the Japanese language. Writers were forced to write their work in the Japanese language. In August 1940, TONG-A ILBO was forced to cease publication because of its use of the Korean language. In the spring of 1944, only those plays written in the Japanese language were allowed to be presented. Those conscientious scholars who studied the national language and history were arrested and imprisoned. These facts show how wickedly the Japanese imperialist colonialists maneuvered to exterminate the Korean language. The imperialists usually cling to a policy of exterminating the language of a people to maintain their colonial rule forever. In the history of colonial rule, however, no people have been so desperate as the Japanese imperialists, who frantically and obstinately ran amok to exterminate the excellent language of our people in a short span of time.

A Japanese writer wrote: The Korean people were not allowed to read, write and learn in their mother tongue. They were forced to receive a Japanese education in Japanese. With the cooperation of the police, the military and the special intelligence agency, the governor-general attempted to deprive the Korean people of their national spirit by exterminating their language and suppressing education in Korean. This was a prerequisite for assimilation and a cruel way of ruling. (pages 20 and 66, The Japan-Residing Koreans as a Nation)

This notwithstanding, the Japanese Ministry of Education brazenly distorted history by forcibly mobilizing scholars.

The Japanese authorities also distorted historical facts, embellishing and fabricating the commandeering of the Korean people and their migration to Japan by force is a legal and voluntary immigration. This is a brazen lie and an intolerable insult to the Korean people.

The forced labor system was a coercive system by which the Korean youths and middle-aged people were commandeered and taken to Japan or other alien lands where they suffered under a slave system and were deprived of their last freedom of pursuing their jobs voluntarily.

According to the decree on drafting the people, proclaimed in October 1939, labor forces were to be drafted on the basis of the drafting order issued by the governor of a province. However, instead of observing this brigandish method, the governor-general indiscriminately took away youths and middle-aged persons from provinces to myons to fill a quota. A policeman always accompanied those who were drafting people. This was effective in preventing horror-stricken draftees from resisting and granted legitimacy to the operation. The commandeering was continuously committed. Sons had to opportunity to say goodbye to their aged mothers. Daughters were not allowed to meet their fiances before leaving. (page 73, The Japan-Residing Koreans as a Nation)

The Japanese imperialists prepared death certificates in advance at labor sites. Countless Korean draftees were victimized at railroad construction sites. There was a saying that each crosstie claimed the life of one Korean. There was no construction site where the bones of Korean workers were not buried. (page 69, The Japan-Residing Koreans as a Nation)

Labor drafting is certainly the most brigandish act of plundering human resources, a truculent way of exploitation unprecedented in history and a tragic bestial act mercilessly depriving the Korean people of their lives.

The Korean people are said to have voluntarily participated in this miserable coercive labor operation. This is nonsense. All sensible men in Japan have unanimously admitted that the labor draft was based on absolute rule. (page 14, The Japan-Residing Koreans as a Nation)

Millions of Korean mothers and wives who had strived not to be deprived of their sons and husbands cursed the Japanese imperialists. Tens of thousands of our youths and middle-aged people breathed their last under the whip of the Japanese imperialists, shedding tears of blood in a foreign land. Those who ignore these facts are the most brazen swindlers. The crimes of the colonial rule of the Japanese imperialists over Korea cannot be concealed. Even though time passes and eras change, the crimes of the colonial rule of the Japanese imperialists in Korea will remain stark historical facts indicting the criminal aggressors.

Our people, together with the Soviet Army, defeated the Japanese imperialist aggressors and achieved the liberation of the country. This marked a historic occasion in opening up a broad avenue for the building of an independent, new Korea and the development along socialist lines and was an epochal event which increased the revolutionary forces and accelerated the fall of the imperialist colonial rule in the east of Asia.

Since then a radical change has taken place in the life of our people. Upholding the programmatic tasks put forward at the Sixth Congress of the Workers Party of Korea, our people are now vigorously struggling to further step up the socialist construction in conformity with the demand of the new stage of the developing revolution, drive the U.S. troops out of South Korea, terminate the colonial rule of U.S. imperialism and realize the independent and peaceful reunification of the country by means of founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo.

The traditional relations of fraternal friendship and cooperation forged between the peoples of Korea and the Soviet Union on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism have been constantly strengthened and developed through the common struggle against imperialism and for the victory of the cause of peace and socialism since the liberation of Korea. The Korean people are rejoiced over this and convinced that the friendly and cooperative relations between the two peoples will continue in the future to expand and develop in various fields.

Availing myself of this opportunity, I heartily wish you and the fraternal Soviet people great success in the work for implementing the decisions of the 26th Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and significantly greeting the 60th anniversary of the formation of the USSR.

NODONG SINMUN Editorial

[NODONG SINMUN 15 August Editorial: "Let Us Expedite the Cause of the Fatherland's Reunification in Firm Unity Under the Slogan of Being Anti-U.S., for Independence"]

[Text] Thirty-seven years have elapsed since our people greeted national liberation by ending the barbarous colonial rule of the Japanese imperialists. Today our people greet the anniversary of the historic national liberation as the struggle for the independent reunification of the fatherland is being vigorously waged in the era of unprecedented national prosperity and development.

The victorious anti-Japanese revolutionary struggle organized and led by the respected leader Comrade Kim Il-song and national liberation attained 37 years ago were historic events which provided the foundation for a new independent Korea and effected a basic turn in pioneering the national destiny. With the liberation of the nation, our people could cherish freedom and hope, ending a life as colonial slaves, and could embark on the road toward a new society and a new fatherland.

The achievement of the cause of national liberation was brought about by the respected leader Comrade Kim Il-song, the sun of the nation and peerless patriot, by victoriously organizing and leading the anti-Japanese armed struggle, upholding the banner of independence.

The respected leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught: The Korean people have long waged a bloody struggle to restore the nation by crushing the Japanese imperialist aggressors and finally achieved the historic cause of national liberation. Thus, our people could vigorously advance toward independence, freed from the yoke of colonial slavery enforced by the vicious Japanese imperialists for nearly half a century.

The Korean people once suffered a shameful and miserable fate as a homeless race due to the occupation of our land by the Japanese imperialists. We experienced many misfortunes and pain, our national sovereignty completely trampled underfoot. It was the ardent desire of the Korean people and the greatest national task to restore national sovereignty by smashing foreign aggressors.

The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song, embarking on the road of revolution at an early date by deeply embracing the people's desire, raised the beacon of chuche on Mt Paektu and victoriously organized and led the heroic anti-Japanese armed struggle. Thus, the Korean revolution, which previously had suffered painful defeats, firmly entered a new road, vigorously advancing to victory. Thus, the ray of hope for national survival illuminated the fatherland.

The anti-Japanese armed struggle was the first national liberation war against colonial rule, organized and carried out by adopting the chuche idea as the guiding line. It was a long, adruous struggle forced to undergo numerous unprecedented difficulties and trials. The respected leader Comrade Kim Il-song achieved the historic cause of national liberation by crushing the Japanese imperialist aggressors with uncommon wisdom, iron-clad will and outstanding tactics. Indeed, the victory of the anti-Japanese armed struggle and the liberation of the fatherland were the cause which could be achieved by our people, who fought by upholding the respected Comrade Kim Il-song as the great leader and under the banner of chuche.

The heroic Soviet Army also participated and scored exploits in the battle to liberate our fatherland by smashing the Japanese imperialists. Our people always remember and are grateful for this.

Thanks to the anti-Japanese armed struggle organized and carried out under the leadership of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song, the glorious revolutionary tradition -- the permanent cornerstone of our revolution -- was established and the miserable history of national ordeal was ended. Thus, the new era of national liberation from colonial rule was opened.

The triumphal return of the respected leader Comrade Kim Il-song after crushing the Japanese imperialists was a great national festival which opened a new history of rewarding struggle and creation in this land.

Since then, our people, under the leadership of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song have vigorously waged the struggle -- a new historic advance movement -- to achieve self-reliance, independence and socialism. The 37 years since liberation have been proud ones during which, our people, under the leadership of the party and the leader, have brought about a great change in this land by brilliantly materializing the chuche idea and basically changing the position of the fatherland. Because the country was divided and because the imperialists continuously maneuvered for aggression, this period was a difficult one during which our people had to pioneer the unfamiliar road of building a country, socialism and communism. However, by strenuously struggling, united firmly around the party and the leader, our people brilliantly carried out the two-stage social revolution and won a great, astounding victory in socialist construction. By repelling the U.S. imperialists' armed aggression, they firmly defended the sovereignty of the people.

Thanks to the wise leadership of the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song, our country, which was once obscure, has been converted to a self-reliant, independent and self-defending powerful socialist country, and our people have come to endlessly demonstrate their dignity.

Under the party leadership and glorified by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song, our fatherland has greeted a period of unprecedented national prosperity, and the position and might of the country have been matchlessly strengthened. A fighting, militant and youthful spirit prevails in our fatherland, and the future path of our revolution holds endless promise. The respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song has regained the lost fatherland, raised the position of the country and the people to the highest level and provided our fatherland with a bright future. Indeed, this is an immortal achievement attained by him. This great achievement will shine resplendently generation after generation in the history of the fatherland.

Thirty seven years have passed since the Japanese imperialist aggressors suffered defeat. Since liberation, contrary to the northern half of the republic, which has advanced along the road of independence and prosperity, South Korea has traversed the road of subjugation by treachery. Despite simultaneous liberation, the tragedy of national division has continued in this land because of the U.S. imperialists' occupation of South Korea. Today, South Korea has been converted into a complete colonial state and a military base under the control of the U.S. imperialists, and the South Korean people have been forced to lead a miserable colonial, slave life under the claws of the U.S. imperialist aggressors.

In occupying South Korea, the U.S. imperialists have maintained colonial rule by replacing their stooges whenever puppet regimes faced crises. Today, by having the fascist Chon Tu-hwan military clique assume the role of stooge, they have executed a most wicked policy for colonial control. The U.S. imperialists have had the political, economic, cultural and military sectors in South Korea serve their aggressive aim. Seizing all power, including the prerogative of supreme military command, they have exercised influence over all sectors in South Korea. Although the U.S. imperialists have used various fraudulent tricks, saying that South Korea is an independent country, the South Korean puppet regime is a completely subservient, treacherous scarecrow regime that has no power whatsoever and is deprived of sovereignty.

Nothing can conceal the fact that the South Korean regime is a dirty tool in executing the U.S. imperialists' policy for colonial control and that the U.S. imperialists have masterminded all the bloody tragedies and disasters in South Korea.

By eliminating the fascist colonial rule of the U.S. imperialists and their stooges in South Korea and by reunifying the fatherland, we could end the misfortune and tragedy suffered by our fellow countrymen, regain the sovereignty of the people and open a bright future path for the people.

Since the division of the country following liberation, our party and the government of the republic, regarding the task of reunifying the fatherland as a most important revolutionary duty, have made every effort to achieve this end. Because of the maneuvers of the U.S. imperialists and their stooges for national division, however, the cause for the fatherland's reunification has not been achieved. Smashing the splittists' maneuvers, reunifying the fatherland and regaining the sovereignty of the people is the supreme task of the people, which should not be delayed.

We cannot tolerate the division of the national territory by foreign imperialists and their violation of the sovereignty of the people. Our Korean people, who value the sovereignty of the country and the people more dearly than their lives, should rise unanimously in the sacred cause for reunifying the fatherland and defending the sovereignty of the people.

The question of the fatherland's reunification is the internal question of the Korean people. This question concerns the right of our people for self-determination. The Korean people have a sacred right for self-determination and are able to readily and independently pioneer their own destiny. Foreign forces have no grounds whatsoever to meddle in the question of the reunification of Korea.

The most important question in independently achieving the fatherland's reunification is to uphold the slogan for opposing the U.S. and for the independence struggle, to force U.S. forces to withdraw from South Korea and to end the U.S. imperialists' interference in the internal Korean affairs. The respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught: Instead of referring to other things, those who sincerely want the fatherland's reunification should above all advocate the slogan for the withdrawal of U.S. forces from South Korea.

Today, the largest obstacle to achieving the country's independent reunification is the U.S. imperialists' occupation of South Korea. The U.S. imperialists have increasingly and obstinately pursued policies for colonial control and war and have clung to a policy favoring two Koreas. By continuously shipping various sophisticated lethal weapons and military hardware to South Korea, the U.S. imperialist war maniacs have increased military capabilities there. While supplying new weapons and equipment to the South Korean puppets and amassing large numbers of aggressive troops around the Korean Peninsula, they have continuously and frantically kicked up the racket of war exercises against us in the sky and on land and sea. As a result, a grave situation has developed in Korea in which the powderkeg of war might explode at any moment. Without removing the U.S. imperialist aggressive troops from South Korea, we can never prevent the danger of war in Korea, nor can we regain the lost sovereignty of the people.

The attitude one takes toward the U.S. imperialist aggressive forces' occupation of South Korea constitutes a basic yardstick measuring one's stand on the question of the fatherland's reunification. The spirit of the anti-U.S. struggle has been promoted today in South Korea. The flames of anti-U.S. struggle, which have prevailed in South Korea since the arson at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan, are the natural outcome of the U.S. imperialists' occupation of South Korea and their colonial rule there and are the eruption of the pent-up resentment of the South Korean people against the U.S. imperialists.

Exploitation and oppression engender struggles. Struggles lead to achieving freedom and liberation. When all the people fan the flames of the anti-U.S. struggle further through a united effort, the U.S. imperialist aggressors will flounder and will be forced to withdraw from South Korea.

No force can thwart the will of the Korean people to end the U.S. imperialists' colonial rule in South Korea and to regain the lost sovereignty of the people. By correctly viewing the desire of all the Korean people for the fatherland's reunification and the flames of the anti-U.S. struggle, which is ablaze in South Korea and which is the unanimous desire of the world's people, the U.S. imperialists should abandon the policy for the occupation of South Korea and for war and immediately withdraw from South Korea, taking along their lethal weapons.

Instead of repenting their past crime of maintaining barbarous colonial rule in Korea for 36 years, the Japanese reactionaries, instigated by the U.S. imperialists, are once again wickedly maneuvering to reinvade South Korea. After extending their tentacles deep into South Korea for economic infiltration and militarily colluding with the U.S. imperialists, the Japanese reactionaries have more brazenly maneuvered to militarily infiltrate South Korea. We should resolutely struggle against the reckless maneuvers of the Japanese reactionaries, who while beautifying and embellishing the history of the blood-stained aggression of the Japanese imperialists and while traversing the road of militarization and overseas expansion, have frantically run amok to fulfill their wild desire for reinvasion of South Korea.

The Japanese militarists should correctly view the lesson of history and the trend of the contemporary era and behave discreetly.

To independently achieve the country's reunification, we should resolutely check the fascist South Korean militarists' treacherous policy of relying on foreign forces. Relying on foreign forces, we cannot avoid the miserable state in which the destiny of the people is mocked by others. While treacherously maneuvering to rely on foreign forces and to provoke a war, the South Korean rulers are bestially suppressing the struggle of the people to achieve the democratization of society and the fatherland's reunification. We cannot tolerate the crimes committed by the Chon Tu-hwan ring -- a group of toadyist traitors and human butchers -- in selling the interests of the people to its U.S. masters.

To check and thwart the U.S. imperialists' meddling maneuvers, we should eliminate the fascist South Korean military clique that has left South Korea as the U.S. imperialists' colonial military base and that has sacrificed the country to foreign forces.

The road toward relying on foreign forces, toward fascism, toward division and toward war, obstinately traversed by traitor Chong Tu-hwan is the way to commit graver crimes before the fatherland and the people and to expedite the rascal's downfall. The Chon Tu-Hwan ring should immediately stop its treacherous maneuvers against the desire of the people, bestial suppression of the people and step down from power without delay.

The most practical and rational way to independently achieve the reunification of our country is to thoroughly implement the proposals for reunifying the fatherland by founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo [DCRK], set forth by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song at the sixth party congress. Today, compatriots in the North and South and overseas are struggling more vigorously with each passing day to implement this proposal. Firmly uniting around a united national front for reunification and under an anti-U.S. banner for independence, all the people should rise as one in the struggle to force the U.S. imperialist aggressive forces to withdraw from South Korea and to implement the proposal for founding the DCRK.

To expedite the fatherland's independent reunification, we should follow the leadership of our party and vigorously forge ahead with socialist construction in the northern half of the republic. Today, our party has victoriously led the struggle to implement the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song's plan for expediting the fatherland's reunification. Following the leadership of the KWP, which has been trusted by all the Korean people and which has always led our revolution along a single, victorious road, is the factor that firmly guarantees the country's reunification without fail, overcoming all difficulties and obstacles.

Firmly uniting around the party and the leader, all functionaries and workers should vigorously accelerate the cause for imbuing society with the chuche idea and firmly organize our revolutionary ranks politically and ideologically. At the same time, they should enact a new, great upsurge in socialist construction by accelerating the advance movement to create the speed of the 1980's so they can firmly consolidate our revolutionary base.

We should not forget even for a moment the history of the crimes committed against the Korean people by the U.S. and Japanese imperialists. With firm class awareness and vigilance, we should smash at every step the enemy's aggressive maneuvers. The people of the northern half of the republic will positively support the righteous, patriotic struggle of the South Korean people with the affection of blood kin.

Many obstacles lie on the future path of the struggle to achieve the fatherland's reunification; however, the historic cause for the fatherland's reunification will surely be achieved in our generation. No force can block the future path of our people strenuously struggling to expedite the cause for the fatherland's reunification under an anti-U.S. banner of independence.

15 AUG RALLIES PROTEST JAPANESE TEXTBOOK REVISION

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 16 (YONHAP) -- Many private South Korean social and cultural organizations, including the Korea Liberation Association (KLA), held rallies attacking Japan for distorted accounts of past Korea-Japan relations in recently revised textbooks Sunday across the country.

On the occasion of the 37th liberation day which commemorates Korea's freedom from the 36-year Japanese colonial rule before and during the Second World War, the demonstrators called for immediate corrections of the books. At total of 800 KLA members, consisting of freedom fighters under the Japanese rule of the country and their family members met in Pagoda Park in downtown Seoul to note that more than 600,000 Korean patriots were killed by Japanese authorities during the colonial period. The KLA members advised Japan to write history correctly, and adopted a message to the Japanese prime minister protesting his government's insincere attitude about the textbook issue.

The Korean Language Research Society had a meeting in its auditorium here to denounce the Japanese textbook perversion, and demanded that Japan admit its errors by rectifying the mistakes immediately. About 300 people from a Korean national Buddhist youth association assembled in another place here to criticize Japan for the textbook issue, and insisted that if any misfortune between Korea and Japan occurs in connection with the problem, Japan will be entirely to blame. More than 3,000 members of the Korea Senior Citizens Association met for the same purpose before the statue of a Korean patriot fighting against Japan in Namsan (South Mountain) in Seoul. In addition, many other South Koreans expressed their indignation about the Japanese Government's treatment of the textbook issue in Seoul, Pusan, Taegu, Kwangju, Chunchon and Taejon. They included 5,000 Christians from South Korea's National Church Council based in Seoul.

PAPERS MARK 37TH LIBERATION DAY ANNIVERSARY

Kim Il-song's Role 'Distorted'

SK150155 Seoul THE KOREA HERALD in English 15 Aug 82 p 4

[Text] Who won World War II and brought national liberation to the Koreans? One is tempted to raise this naive -- if not silly -- question when he is encountered by defiant North Koreans indoctrinated to blindly follow what the communist regime in the northern half of the Korean Peninsula taught them.

Korea was liberated from the Japanese colonial rule on Aug. 15, 1945, as a result of the war won by the United States and other allied nations, although there was a steady independence movement by Koreans at home and abroad. The world knows this stark fact, except for the North Koreans who have been taught that Korea gained liberation thanks to the "anti-Japanese struggle" by Kim Il-song, according to the NAEWOE PRESS yesterday.

The NAEWOE story came out on the occasion of the 37th anniversary of the national liberation today. The following is the summary of the NAEWOE article that exposes how fabulously the communist regime has distorted and fabricated historical facts involving the liberation. The distortion of historical facts are contained in the articles, so-called "The History of Struggle By Kim Il-song," "History of Struggle for National Liberation By Koreans" and "The Legend of Kim Il-song." An example of distortion is shown below:

"When Russia declared war against Japan on Aug. 8, 1945, Kim Il-song, who had already drafted combat strategies for a final decisive battle against the Japanese imperialists, lost no time in issuing a combat order to all the units of the Korean People's Liberation Army.

"The liberation army, together with the Russian troops, fought brave battles in the area encompassing from northern Manchuria to southern Manchuria before they stormed toward the northern coastal areas of Korea. They later liberated Pyongyang and other key areas. Thus, Korea was liberated from the 36 years of dark age."

The distortion of history by North Korea, in a word, is aimed at promoting the campaign to idolize Kim and create a Kim Il-song mythology. As part of this scheme, North Korea revised modern Korean history as the "history of struggle by communists" in the 1950's and further amended it toward fabricating the "revolutionary stories" of Kim in the 1960's. The distortion of historical facts is obvious if the earlier historical descriptions of North Korea are taken into account.

North Korean history books said, until around 1956, that Korea owes its liberation to the "Red Army of the Soviet Union and we cannot forget the merits of Stalin." By this time, there was no mention about the "Korean People's Liberation Army."

Kim said in a speech at a Communist Party rally in Pyongyang, Dec. 17, 1945, that "the heroic Russian Red Army drove out Japanese imperialists from this land and brought us freedom and independence. We will never forget the brotherly cooperation shown to us by our Comrade Stalin, the great Russian people and the Red Army." Kim added: "The Japanese plunderers had to unconditionally surrender in the face of lightning attacks by the Russian Army."

Kim Il-song made it clear again that North Korea was indebted to the Soviet Union for its liberation when he chanted slogans at a public rally on March 1, 1946. The slogans said: "Long live the Russian Army which brought us liberation" or "Long live Stalin, our benefactor and great leader."

As reviewed above, North Korea fabricated or distorted historical facts to strengthen the campaign to beautify Kim's past and to justify the plot to hand Kim's power over to his son. North Koreans never mention the American role in World War II without which Korea's liberation would have been impossible.

KOREA TIMES Editorial

[Editorial: "37 Years After"]

[Text] Koreans today observe a double anniversary -- the 37th of their liberation from Japanese colonial rule and the 34th of the establishment of the Republic of Korea. The one that apparently counts more of the two, at least in designating the day, is the former -- thus the day is generally called "Liberation Day." This shows how the people cherish emancipation from alien rule and at the same time bemoan the yoke of brutal Japanese militarism, which lasted for three and a half decades. And this year's anniversary has come under a particular spotlight as an occasion to renew our determination for national development as well as to reproach Japan for her past and question her future -- and that ironically at Japanese incitment.

On the eve of the anniversary which internationally commemorates the end of World War II, Koreans and their Asian neighbors having bitter experiences of Japanese encroachments have been enraged for weeks by the Tokyo government's attempts to gloss over, if not justify, Japan's pre-war militarism by rewriting high-school history textbooks. The attempt appears to be tenacious as the Japanese, while using diplomatic niceties, have been adamant against and even challenging the harsh protests mounting across Asia, giving rise to apprehensions and fears about a revival of Japanese militarism.

Conversely, it is an irony that none other than the Japanese provided an acute opportunity to remind ourselves, both adult eyewitnesses and the younger generation without personal experience, of the past cruelty of Japan and the pressing need to stand guard against her future behaviour by consolidating our own national strength. In fact, concern has been expressed by many knowledgeable Koreans about a trend toward "diluting" accounts in our school textbooks of Japanese atrocities committed in Korea, a trend that has been noticeable since the normalization of Korea-Japan diplomatic ties in 1965 in an obvious move to foster goodneighborly relations.

What is to be stressed on this occasion, Liberation Day, is that we are obliged -- as having been so -- to assume a positive, forward-looking posture for progress to live in a world in which national strength inevitably counts along with internationalism and interdependence. The textbook issue, for one thing, might be seen in this context because a proper rectification demanded, while straightening out contemporary history, could be taken as a Japanese commitment to the promotion of genuine peace and common prosperity in both regional and global dimensions.

Furthermore, we are committed to carry out the gigantic tasks of expediting a renewed nation-building process to bring about an industrialized democracy with advanced social welfare and justice and also to facilitate territorial unification by way of resolving inter-Korean questions.

There indeed are a number of hitches and challenges in attaining these goals -- problems ranging from prolonged recession, both domestic and global, to the unmitigated security threat from the North Korean communists.

Yet, Korean dynamism is aglow as ever, which has transformed the nation into a newly industrializing country during the past two decades and is now geared to make a "second takeoff."

Vitality is also conspicuous in the nation's external affairs, as underlined by the winning of the right to host the Olympic Games in a few years and by President Chon Tu-hwan's extensive tour through four African nations and Canada, due to begin tomorrow.

For the on-going development process to build national prosperity and glory for tomorrow, a greater sense of commitment and doubled endeavors by all walks of life are indeed in demand. Also in order in this connection is environmental improvement which will provide greater motivation for concerted national efforts and the pooling of wisdom.

SK160836 Seoul YONHAP in English 0815 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Pusan, Korea, Aug. 16 (YONHAP) -- Kim Hyon-chang, 32, and Mun Pu-sik, 23, the two alleged masterminds in the arson attack on the American Cultural Center here in March, filed an appeal Monday through their defense attorneys.

The two defendants were sentenced to death Aug. 11, for violating the national security law and for committing homicide by arson. The March 18 arson attack on the U.S. facility claimed the life of one Korean student and injured three others. Anti-government and anti-American leaflets were found in the neighborhood of the center at the time.

All but two of the 14 defendants sentenced Aug. 11 to terms ranging from two years in jail to life imprisonment have now appealed their cases to the Appellate Court.

The 12 appealers included Rev. Choe Ki-sik, 40, a priest of the Wonju Diocese, 89 km southeast of Seoul, who had drawn three years in prison for providing shelter and money to Kim and Mun following the arson.

Mun Kil-hwan, 36, an employee of the Catholic Education Center in Wonju headed by Rev. Choe, and Yi Chang-pok, 43, a staff member of the Korea Christian Action Organization, did not appeal. Mun and Yi both were given suspended sentences.

Chea Sim Address

BK151000 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0421 GMT 15 Aug 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 15 Aug (SPK) -- The third session of the First National Assembly began its work in Phnom Penh this morning with a speech by Chairman Chea Sim, who reviewed the country's achievements since the beginning of the year.

On the rostrum were, among others, Chea Sim, chairman of the National Assembly; Heng Samrin, chairman of the Council of State; Chan Si, chairman of the Council of Ministers, Say Phuthang, vice chairman of the Council of State; Bou Thang, vice chairman of the Council of Ministers and minister of national defense; Hun Sen, vice chairman of the Council of Ministers and minister of foreign affairs; and Chea Soth, vice chairman of the Council of Ministers and minister of planning.

Also present were the members of the diplomatic corps accredited to Kampuchea.

Chairman Chea Sim opened the session with a speech. He said:

The third session of our National Assembly is being held today in an atmosphere of great enthusiasm and close solidarity which permeates our party, people and armed forces following the considerable successes that we have achieved during the first 7 months of 1982 in all fields: military, economic, cultural, social, political and diplomatic.

In the military and security field, during the last dry season we took the initative in attacking the enemy, thus upsetting his initial plans, pushing him into a defensive position throughout the season, inflicting heavy losses on him and foiling his intention to spread guerrilla warfare throughout the country.

In the economic field, dry season agriculture produced a high yield and our people are beginning to practice intensive cultivation with a new high-yield rice strain. In conjunction with dry season production, our people increased the amount of paddy sold to the state by 50 percent.

In addition to dry-season production, our people increased to the state, our workers have made great efforts in the areas of fishing, rubber exploitation, transportation and communications, trade activities, industrial restoration and the development of handicrafts and small industries.

In the areas of culture, education and health services, we have also made further progress.

In many localities mass movements -- such as dry season agricultural production; the sale of paddy to the state; struggle against the enemy; works in the service of combat; repair, construction and the clearing of routes; protection of communications lines ; and services for combat and production -- are gaining momentum.

The buildup of our revolutionary forces has also produced encouraging results: The training and reorientation of cadres is being carried out on a large scale. The consolidation of district-level power and the consolidation of bases has provided useful experience. The Revolutionary Armed Forces and the people's security forces have gained a certain degree of maturity in their armed struggle waged simultaneously with building work.

Diplomatic efforts have also been intensified. The odious maneuvers of the Beijing expansionist hegemonists in collusion with the U.S. imperialists and the reactionaries in the Thai ruling circles to sabotage our revolution have been foiled one by one. The strategic alliance among Kampuchea, Vietnam and Laos and the special alliance between Kampuchea and Vietnam have been strengthened further.

The decree on the sovereignty of the PRK over Kampuchea's territorial waters, maritime zones and continental shelf and the agreement on the historical waters signed between Kampuchea and Vietnam reaffirm the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the PRK while further consolidating the militant solidarity between Kampuchea and Vietnam.

In particular, the sixth conference of the foreign ministers of Kampuchea, Vietnam and Laos issued a number of logical, reasonable and very important proposals in conformity with the consistent goodwill policy of peace, friendship and cooperation of the three Indochinese countries. These proposals have received warm support throughout the world.

In brief, during the past 7 months we have scored considerable successes, particularly in the military and economic sectors, with the military successes having a direct influence on the economic, political and diplomatic fields. And conversely, the successes obtained in other areas have make a positive contribution to the struggle against the enemy.

Chairman Chea Sim proposed that the National Assembly warmly congratulate the Revolutionary Armed Forces, the people's security forces, the various strata of the population, the various ethnic groups of the country, Kampucheans living abroad and the cadres of all services and at all levels for waging a courageous struggle and achieving glorious victories. He proposed that the National Assembly sincerely thank the parties, governments and peoples of Vietnam, Laos, the Soviet Union and the other fraternal countries of the socialist community, the peoples and governments of progressive countries, and our friends on all five continents for the considerable support they have given to the revolutionary cause of the Kampuchean people.

Chea Sim went on to say: At a time when the reactionary forces are experiencing a series of defeats and are sinking into decay; when our country is becoming increasingly stable with each passing day, when the alliance of the three Indochinese countries, their multifaceted cooperation and their solidarity with the Soviet Union and other socialist countries is steadily growing; when the attempts of the Chinese expansionists to incite the ASEAN countries into confronting the Indochinese countries has been exposed: when a trend toward dialogue is developing between the Indochinese and ASEAN countries; and when international support for Pol Pot is waning -- at this time the Chinese expansionists in collusion with U.S. imperialism and the reactionaries in the Thai ruling circles, out of fear of defeat, have put pressure on the reactionaries in their pay to set up the so-called tripartite Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea in order to regild the coat of arms of the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan criminals in order to maintain their presence at the 37th UN General Assembly and return them to the Nonaligned Movement.

Taking advantage of this occasion, they are working to increase their military activities and intensify their psychological warfare, their acts of economic sabotage and their diplomatic steps for the purpose of blunting the people's confidence in the revolution and enhancing the influence of the so-called tripartite Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

The enemy nurtures great ambitions. We have to correct our shortcomings and overcome many difficulties. However, the Kampuchean revolution is irreversible!

Despite their collusion with Sihanouk and Son Sann, the Pol Pot gang will not succeed in concealing the ugly face of their criminal genocide. By associating themselves with the genocide of Pol Pot, Ieng Sary and Khieu Samphan, Sihanouk and Son Sann have dropped their masks and revealed their true nature as traitors to the nation and people and as the cat's paws of Beijing and the imperialists. This coalition, which is full of contradictions, was conceived at a time when the three groups of reactionary Khmers and their masters were in a position of defeat and this move will not save them from total defeat.

We vehemently condemn the establishment of the so-called tripartite Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, which is nothing but a farce. We demand that the United Nations, faithful to its Charter, expel the Pol Pot gang, no matter what disguise it may use. The PRK is the sole authentic and legal representative of the Kampuchean people.

By strengthening national unity and international solidarity, particularly by consolidating the militart alliance among Kampuchea, Vietnam and Laos; by remaining on the alert; by fighting the enemy ceaselessly; and putting our shortcomings right we will surely win the final victory.

This morning, the representatives listened to the report of the Council of State presented by Chairman Heng Samrin and the report of the National Assembly made by Chairman Chea Sim on the activities of these two organs since the last session of the National Assembly.

The Council of State has, among other things, promulgated laws on the organization of the National Assembly and Council of State, on the organization and the activities of the Council of Ministers and on the organization of the jurisdictions and the courts. It has also issued a decreee on the powers and legislative clauses on the preparation of laws and regulations. All of these laws and decrees, Chairman Heng Samrin stated, are legislative documents necessary for the implementation of the Constitution and to ensure the proper application of the political line of the KPRP as well as to bring order in the application of the lettre normative to ensure legality.

The chairman of the Council of State also described the activities of the legal corps and personnel movements in the superior organs of state.

Chairman Chea Sim's report dealt essentially with the activities of the representatives in their constituencies and the suggestions they collected during their meetings with the population.

RADIO SCORES THAILAND'S POLICY ON CGDK ISSUE

BK141340 Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian 1300 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Station commentary: "The Thai Power Holders Should Listen to the Reasonable Opinions of Their People"]

[Text] The peaceful initiatives and proposals put forward by the three Indochinese countries clearly show their stand in favor of and their desire to promote peace, stability and cooperation in Southeast Asia. These initiatives and proposals have been enthusiastically welcomed and supported by progressive public opinion. But these constructive ideas have been opposed by a number of ASEAN power holders who what to complicate the search for solutions to a number of issues and to create more tension in this region.

The three Indochinese countries have always sought to normalize relations and promote cooperation between the different countries in the region in order to serve the vital interests of their peoples. The recent official visit by Comrade Nguyen Co Thach, the Vietnamese foreign minister, to Singapore, Burma, Malaysia and Thailand was a step toward attaining this important goal. The correct proposal of the PRK, issued in the communique of the sixth conference of the foreign ministers of Kampuchea, Vietnam and Laos on the creation of a safety zone along the Kampuchean-Thai border, is a most reasonable way to ease the tension along the border of the two countries.

Vietnamese troops have been in Kampuchea in response to the sacred wish of the Kampuchean people to defend the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the PRK, which has been threatened by the Beijing Chinese expansionists. The presence of Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea does not threaten Thai sovereignty nor is it a danger for any country in this region.

Thus we have clearly adopted a correct stand toward Thailand, a neighboring country. Progressive Thai opinion also agrees with us. But the Thai power holders are stubborn and refuse to recognize reality. Instead, they are continuing to implement a poisonous policy of flagrantly interfering in the internal affairs of the PRK. They are pursuing this policy in conformity with and at the instigation of the Beijing Chinese expansionists and the U.S. imperialists. They have forgotten about the interests of their own people and are pushing the situation deep into a dark and dangerous hole.

The Thai paper MATUPHUM, in an editorial published on 8 July, stated that the Royal Thai Government had made a serious error in its policy about the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. This act is not unlike setting a fire near one's own house, and a house that is surrounded by highly combustible materials! This paper continued: The fact that Thailand is actively involved in the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea is a naive act. The Thai foreign minister paid a visit to China and came back imbued with Chinese ideas. The paper stressed that previous Thai positions and statements on this issue clearly show that the Thai authorities are not their own masters.

A Thai weekly, PATTAYA, on 12 July published an open letter written by its reporters and writers to Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon. This open letter said: The Royal Thai Government stands accused of interfering in the internal affairs of other countries, something that threatens to bring the fire of war into our own house. Although Thailand is not at war, it has become a refuge and supply base for the three groups of Khmer reactionaries. Every day, these three reactionary Khmer groups use Thai territory as a base from which to wage their war against the Kampuchean people.

It is editorial on 8 July, SIAM RAT appealed to the Royal Thai Government to give priority to the national interest. Thailand should not become deeply involved in the Kampuchean issue, as public opinion believes that Thailand has facilitated the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

MATICHON reported on 17 July that Thailand should be neutral on the Kampuchean problem because the U.S. imperialists and the Beijing Chinese will benefit if Thailand continues to support these reactionary Khmer groups. There is a fear that the tense situation on the border could lead to war and that Thailand might then become a delicious meal for the Beijing Chinese and their lackeys -- the Communist Party of Thailand, which is Maoist -- who are pushing Thailand and Vietnam toward a war.

The BANGKOK POST reported on 3 August that about 50 Thai students gathered in front of the prime minister's office to appeal to the Royal Thai Government to reconsider its policy on the Kampuchean problem. This group of students expressed their regret that the Thai Government was involved in the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. It suggested that the Royal Thai Government remain neutral on the Kampuchean issue.

In an open letter to Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon, these students stated that Thailand is in danger because the Royal Thai Government has interfered in the internal affairs of Kampuchea. This group of students gave the Royal Thai Government 15 days to reply to their appeal. If there is no answer from the government, the number of protesters will increase.

MATUPHUM, on 5 August, said in an editorial that the Royal Thai Government and the Foreign Ministry should accept the opinion of this group of students because the ideas they expressed are reasonable.

If they evaluate this progressive opinion, the Thai power holders will be obliged by the force of reason to reconsider the policy that they have stupidly carried out. If they do not change their policy on this issue, the Thai power holders will in effect set fire to their own house. Up to now, they have cared for and provided refuge to the Pol Pot remnants and other Khmer reactionaries -- acts that are the underlying cause of the permanent tension in this region. Concurrently, they have sacrificed Thai sovereignty by allowing the Beijing Chinese to use Thai territory as a base from which to supply foodstuffs, medicines and ammunition to the Khmer reactionaries.

The Beijing Chinese expansionists, on their part, have continued to feed and take care of the Maoists in Thailand and to incite them to obstruct the development of Thailand at every step. In fact, during a sweep operation in the south, the Thai army encountered more than 5,000 Maoists in this region. According to various observers, this number is double that of last year. Therefore, the Thai authorities must reexamine their policy and study the problem from all angles. Otherwise, they will undoubtedly be taken over by the dark scheme of the Beijing Chinese expansionists. They do not have much time in which to redress this situation.

Again we remind the Thai power holders that they must listen to and thoroughly reexamine the correct and progressive opinions of their people. They must not support the three reactionary Khmer groups led by Sihanouk, Son Sann and Khieu Samphan. They have to strengthen and develop friendly relations with the Indochinese peoples. All of this is important for the Thai people and for the maintenance of peace, stability and cooperation in Southeast Asia.

VODK REJECTS PRK TERRITORIAL WATERS AGREEMENT

[Unattributed article: "The Kampuchean People and Democratic Kampuchea Refuse To Recognize, and Regard As Null and Void, All Agreements and Prolamations by the Aggressor Vietnamese Regime in Phnom Penh Regarding the Limits of Kampuchea's Territorial Waters"]

[Text] It was learned that last July the Vietnamese running-dog puppets in Phnom Penh signed an agreement with the Hanoi Vietnamese aggressors demarcating sea boundaries between Kampuchea and Vietnam, and proclaimed the limits of Kampuchea's territorial waters and exclusive economic zone.

The Vietnamese running-dog Heng Samrin regime in Phnom Penh is a Vietnamese aggressor regime installed at bayonet point by the Vietnamese Le Duan aggressors. These Phnom Penh puppets are completely ignorant; all affairs of the country are managed by the Vietnamese. Moreover, this Vietnamese running-dog puppet regime has been spat at and rejected by the Kampuchean people since it was first conceived and established.

Therefore, both legally and in practice, the Vietnamese running-dog regime in Phnom Penh is simply and merely an administration of the Vietnamese aggressors and does not represent the Kampuchean nation and people in the least. It is only a shield to cover up Vietnam's invasion and occupation of Kampuchean territory and slaughter of the Kampuchean people in its attempt to exterminate the Kampuchea race.

In the international arena, at the United Nations as well as in all international forums, no one recognizes this Vietnamese aggressor regime in Phnom Penh as the representative of Kampuchea.

In other words, both the Kampuchean nation and the international community, including the United Nations and other international organizations, have rejected this Vietnamese administration in Phnom Penh. This Phnom Penh administration has no right to represent the Kampuchean nation and people. For this reason, it does not have any right to sign international agreements or other documents between Kampuchea and other countries. Hence, all agreements that the puppet Heng Samrin gang has signed with Vietnam to limit the Kampuchea-Vietnam sea boundaries as well as the other agreements and treaties already signed by the puppet Heng Samrin gang are of no value whatsoever. Its proclamation on the demarcation of Kampuchea's territorial waters and maritime exclusive economic zone is also of no value.

All of this is a device to allow Vietnam to occupy Kampuchea's territorial waters and plunder Kampuchea's natural resources in the sea and on the seabed, such as petroleum. It is also part of the maneuver to force Kampuchea's neighbors, particularly Thailand, to accept the Vietnamese running-dog puppets and Vietnamese administration in Phnom Penh as a negotiating partner.

The Kampuchean people and Democratic Kampuchea, which is the sole legal and legitimate government of Kampuchea representing Kampuchea both at home and in the international arena, have repeatedly rejected and regarded as null and void all these agreements and proclamations of the Vietnamese administration in Phnom Penh. They appeal to all countries and all foreign companies and enterprises to refrain from making any deals with the Vietnamese running-dog puppets in Phnom Penh, for the Kampuchean people refuse to recognize them and regard them as null and void now and in the future.

VODK: VIETNAM SENDS REINFORCEMENTS TO KRATIE

BK141224 (Clandestine) Voice of Democratic Kampuchea in Cambodian to Kampuchea 2330 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] On 28 July, the Vietnamese enemy aggressors sent 400 reinforcements from Vietnam to Kratie town. This clearly shows to the world that what the Hanoi Vietnamese enemy claimed was a partial troop withdrawal is only a propaganda trick. The reality on the Kampuchean battlefield is that the Vietnamese have not withdrawn a single soldier. On the contrary, they are sending fresh troops to Kampuchea. They have sent reinforcements to Kampuchea both before and after their declaration of a troop withdrawal.

This clearly indicates that the Vietnamese are not ready to withdraw their troops but are seeking to strengthen their position in Kampuchea in order to further their goal of southward expansion, thereby achieving their expansionist strategy and that of their Soviet masters.

GRENADE THROWN AT PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE

BK160602 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 0530 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] At about 2215 last night an M-26 grenade was thrown onto the lawn of Prime Minister Gen Prem Tinsulanon's residence at Thewet, uprooting a palm tree and damaging some windows and the residence's ceiling. The crater caused by the explosion can be seen clearly. There were no casualties in the incident.

Police Department Director General Police Gen Suraphon Chunlaphram convened a meeting of police and military officials at the Police Department this morning to discuss the incident. The meeting ended at about 1030. Speaking to newsmen later, Suraphon said the Police Department has formed a joint committee of police, military and civilian officials to investigate the incident. The committee is headed by Police Lt Gen Narong Mamahon, deputy director general of the Police Department.

Suraphon said the audacious incident is regarded as serious because it was an attempt against the country's leader. The grenade -- its safety pin removed and left in a drinking glass -- was lobbed into the prime minister's residence over the wall separating the residence from the Army Club. The prime minister was at the residence during the incident but was not injured by the blast. A wedding reception was held at the Army Club before the incident took place. According to Suraphon, security officials are normally posted inside the prime minister's residence but none are posted outside in the compound. Meanwhile, Interior Minister Gen Sitthi Chirarot told newsmen that security for the prime minister must be improved. He said although the grenade used during the incident was designed for battlefield use, it was not necessarily thrown by soldiers.

AFP Report

[Excerpts] Bangkok, Aug. 16 (AFP) -- One or more unidentified assailants tossed an M-26 grenade into the compound of Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon last night, injuring one staff member and causing some property damage, police said.

General Prem told a news conference this morning that the motive behind the attack was not yet clear, but that he had ordered stepped-up personal security measures. Asked whether it was a political attack, Gen. Prem said: "The ones who threw this must be my enemy."

An official of the Interior Ministry said the attack appeared to have been designed to "create instability and stir up problems for the government."

Gen. Prem, a retired army commander, was recently reported to have been the target of another attack while traveling in northern Lop Buri Province. According to an account in the Thai weekly MATICHON, one or more would-be assassins attacked the prime minister's motorcade on July 16 with a grenade fired from an M-72 launcher. Although the account was never officially confirmed, observers had noticed a tightening of security around Gen. Prem, who has lately resumed riding in a bullet-proof Cadillac accompanied by crack troops whose loyalty is considered beyond doubt.

At his brief news conference, Gen. Prem said he did not know whether the attack was tied to the possibility that he might be a candidate in the coming elections. It was necessary to await results of the police investigation, he said, speaking in Thai. In the meantime, the prime minister said his bodyguards had requested him to keep reporters and others at a distance, ending the give and take of impromptu statements to the press. Henceforth, he would only answer questions at formal news conferences, Gen. Prem said.

FOREIGN MINISTRY PERMITS RICE SALE TO VIETNAM

[Text] Thailand has reversed a two-year-old ban on food sales to Vietnam to allow Thai merchants to make a sale of 48,000 tons of rice, paid for in cash by the Soviet Union, sources in the government said yesterday.

Foreign Ministry officials said they had carefully considered the sale and had given the green light mainly because Singapore businessmen continued to sell Thai rice to the Hanoi regime despite the Thai ban on similar deals by local businessmen. A Commerce Ministry source told the BANGKOK POST that the first of four shipments of 12,000 tons each would be on its way to Vietnam from Thailand within two weeks at most.

The 200 million baht sale is the first from Thailand to Vietnam since the June 23, 1980 invasion of eastern Thailand by Vietnamese troops. Immediately after that attack, the government ordered 16,400 tons of rice unloaded from two Russian ships which were due to depart for Vietnamese ports within hours. Thailand auctioned off that rice and Vietnam was enraged.

Government sources said Hanoi and Moscow have spent the past two years attempting to get around the ban, diverting Thai rice meant for other markets to Vietnam at a profit for outside businessmen. Last year, for example, officials believe much of the 277,000 tons of rice purchased from Thailand by the Soviet Union was diverted directly to Vietnam. During the first seven months of this year, officials have estimated that at least 50,000 tons of Thai rice shipped to Singapore was transshipped to Vietnam to the profit of brokers in the island republic. In addition, Thai sources believe much rice supposedly bound for Africa through Singapore was also diverted to Vietnam, earning more profit for businessmen outside Thailand.

Thai agreement to the sale to Vietnam, made through a local broker whom officials have refused to identify, came only after high-ranking officials were convinced that an embargo on Thai rice going to Hanoi was impossible to enforce. The Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) has called for economic pressure on Vietnam to try to help force Hanoi to get its troops out of Kampuchea, but officials said the call was mainly aimed at stopping foreign aid to the communist regime. Thai officials agreed to the rice sale after serious consideration because of the leaky embargo and the resultant harm to Thai businessmen, while foreigners, mainly Singaporeans, reaped a profit.

"Selling to them, even through the Russians, is in fact one form of economic pressure, since it forces Hanoi or Moscow to use what little foreign exchange they have," said a diplomatic source. (A recent report by the International Monetary Fund said that Vietnam had foreign exchange reserves of some US$16 million, and would be unable to pay interest on outstanding loans this year.)

In addition to Singaporeans, a Thai go-ahead on rice sales directly from this country to Vietnam is expected to cut out a number of European commodity speculators who were trying to buy Thai broken rice for sale to Hanoi at a profit. "Some of them have already purchased the Thai rice for Vietnam while some are seeking credits from Europeans banks for financing the Thai rice purchase," a Commerce Ministry source said. Cash payment by the Soviet Union is helpful to the Thai exporters, who would find it difficult or impossible to obtain credit to finance the Vietnamese purchases because of Hanoi's foreign exchange problem.

PRASONG SAYS USSR INCREASING ARMS TO PRK, SRV

[Text] The Soviet Union stepped up shipments of tanks and a new, improved AK automatic rifle to Vietnamese treoops in Kampuchea, even while Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach was in Thailand ballyhooing a "withdrawal" of Hanoi forces, the head of the National Security Council said last night. Sqn Ldr Prasong Sunsiri also told Thai newsmen that Soviet forces were firmly established at Vietnam's Cam Ranh Bay base, and using it as a spy station covering much of Asia.

The NSC secretary-general said the Soviets had moved new T-54 battle tanks and armoured personnel carriers into Kampuchea last month. He described the new combat assault rifle as the AKM-47, which has a plastic stock and fires faster and more powerfully than the traditional AK-47, in use with dozens of armies throughout the world.

These new weapons arrived at the time Thach was travelling around Southeast Asia recently to help publicise what Hanoi said was a partial withdrawal of its estimated 200,000 troops in Kampuchea. The arrival of the tanks, APCs and rifles, Prasong said, "indicates that Hanoi has no intention of pulling its troops out of Kampuchea."

Many Soviet advisers, weapons and tanks had been shipped into Kampuchea as recently as the last several weeks, Prasong said. In addition, Soviet advisers also were serving in Laos. He also said that Thach "lied" in claiming that Vietnam might in the future invite the Soviet Union to set up military bases in his country. The Soviet Union already had such a base, at Cam Ranh Bay, about 240 kilometres northeast of Ho Chi Minh City, Prasong said. Cam Ranh houses a major Soviet electronic intelligence station and a unit of TU-95 Bear reconnaissance aircraft, which overfly Asian territory and waters as far away as Japan and China, he said.

Vietnam, the NSC chief said, currently has between 50,000 and 60,000 troops in Laos, and up to 200,000 in Kampuchea. He said Soviet aid to Vietnam was "incomparable" to Chinese aid to the Democratic Kampuchea forces. "The Chinese give only a fraction of what the Russians give," he said. In addition, the Vietnamese had more and better weapons than the resistance forces. He added that China had no troops in Vietnam, no ships in Southeast Asian waters and no foreign bases. The resistance, however, had far better morale and will to fight than the Vietnamese, Prasong said.

Vietnam has tried to "Kampucheanise" the war by building the strength of Heng Samrin armed forces, but so far had had no success with this programme. Phnom Penh, he said, would become a province of Vietnam in short order if Hanoi continued its present colonisation policy. Schools in Phnom Penh already teach the Vietnamese language and use a Vietnamese curriculum. For the moment, Prasong said he saw no end in sight to the Kampuchean conflict, and he expected fighting to continue into the foreseeable future.

Touching on the question of foreign correspondents, Prasong said their reports must be more fair in the future, giving both sides of a story, because "we will not allow them to hurt us without giving us justice." Thai authorities have taken action against Thai newspapers which misreport the situation, he said, and the same would happen to foreign journalists. He said it was difficult to apply Thai law to foreign journalists, however.

SRV FORCES SHELL BORDER AREAS 10-11 AUGUST

BK141448 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 0530 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] The Supreme Command Information Office has reported the following:

On 10 August at 0400 a group of about 200 Vietnamese-Heng Samrin forces attacked a jungle base of the Kampuchean resistance forces near the Thai border, south of Ban Nong Wa, Tambon Bang Malu, Kantharalak District, Sisaket Province. As a result of a 2-hour clash, 54 Kampucheans -- 32 men, 15 women and 7 children -- fled into Thailand at Ban Sao Thongchai, Tambon Bang Malu, Kantharalak District, Sisaket Province. Vietnamese forces fired mortar shells into the area south of Ban Sao Thongchai, damaging the village school.

On 11 August, between 1410 and 1855, Vietnamese forces sporadically fired heavy weapons at Thai territory in Prachin Buri Province. Ban Khlong Nam Sai, Ban Khok Sabaeng, Ban Saen Suk and the border area from Ban Wangmon to Ban Poipet were hit by about 60 rounds fired from 152-mm mortars. Three houses and a school dormitory were damaged.

The continued fighting along the Thai-Kampuchean border indicates that Vietnam still maintains fighting forces and heavy weapons along the border. This is what many people realize. The fact also shows that Vietnam's claim about a recent troop withdrawal from the Thai-Kampuchean border area is nothing but a farce.

LAOS REQUESTS BAN ON EXPORTS BE RELAXED

BK151121 Bangkok Domestic Service in English 0000 GMT 15 Aug 82

[Text] Thailand will consider a Lao request to reduce a number of Thai goods banned for export to Laos. The deputy director general of the Foreign Trade Department, Oranut Osathanon, says that the request was submitted to a Thai delegation led by Commerce Minister Punmi Punnasi during their recent visit to Laos. She says that Laos wants the number of the banned items to be reduced from 287 to 173 and these include medicine, motorcycles, tyres, batteries and seasoning powder.

Meanwhile, the Lao news agency, KPL, says that Lao officials will soon pay a return visit to Bangkok at the invitation of the Thai commerce minister.

PRASONG SAYS CPT'S ARMED FORCES REDUCED BY HALF

[Text] The Communist Party of Thailand has lost more than half its armed supporters in the last three years, the secretary-general of the National Security Council, Squadron-Leader Prasong Sunsiri said on Saturday. He said the CPT's armed forces were now believed to number between 6,000 and 7,000 men -- less than half the 14,000 guerrillas the party boasted of in 1979.

Speaking to the Foreign Correspondents Club of Thailand at a dinner at the Oriental Hotel, Sqn-Ldr Prasong attributed the CPT's decline to three main factors:

-- The government's successful suppression campaign which has destroyed most of the communists' major strongholds;

-- Changes in international politics; and

-- Internal rifts within the party.

Predicting that the CPT would lose even more of its supporters in the future, the National Security Council chief said that the communists would probably now concentrate on hit-and-run attacks against government forces because they were unable to rely on the people's support and had fewer bases in which to hide. He also dismissed reports that the CPT had held its fourth party congress this year. The party, he claimed, had organised regional meetings which in turn had submitted resolutions to the party's Central Committee based in northern Thailand. The party's third congress was held in Thon Buri in 1961, he added.

Sqn-Ldr Prasong said that many former student activists who had taken refuge in China had constantly sought permission to return home. He said the government would welcome their return but those who had lived in China for many years would be subject to an intensive investigation.

The squadron leader urged the government to take advantage of the CPT's current weakness and improve people's rights and freedoms. Promoting the democratic system throughout the country could completely wipe out communism in Thailand, he stated.

However, Sqn-Ldr Prasong rejected calls for the repeal of the anti-communist laws despite the government's success in wiping out most communist bases. He said the government could not abolish these laws as long as the CPT was committed to a policy of armed struggle.

RANGERS KILL 10 'INSURGENTS' IN 13 AUG CLASHES

[Text] Rangers killed an estimated 10 communist insurgents and wounded 20 during a fierce battle on Friday, field military sources said. One Ranger was killed and six were wounded when they triggered a land mine while pursuing the insurgents.

The battle broke out at around 1:00 p.m. when some 22 Rangers from Regiment 251 of the Second Army Region who were patrolling the Ban Nong Samet mountain range in Lahan Sai District, District, Buriram Province, were ambushed by a group of about 50 communist insurgents.

Seven Rangers were wounded by a mine as they were pursuing the insurgents into the mountain range. Three seriously wounded men were taken by helicopter to the Suranari Military Hospital in Nakhon Ratchasima, where one of them, identified only as La-Iat, 22, later died. The other four were taken to the Buriram Provincial Hospital.

REFUGEE CENTERS ALONG BURMESE BORDER PLANNED

BK151131 Bangkok Domestic Service in English 0000 GMT 15 Aug 82

[Text] The Interior Ministry is planning to set up refugee centers along the Thai-Burmese border to tighten control on about 30,000 Burmese minority tribesmen and some 20,000 Kuomintang remnants. Deputy Under Secretary of State for Interior Loet Hongphakdi says that the plan has already been approved by the Interior Ministry. He says that the ministry's Information and Foreign Affairs Division is now conducting a feasibility study of the plan before submitting it to the ministry for final approval. Mr Loet adds that according to the proposed plan, refugee centers would be set up in 10 provinces along the Thai-Burmese border. Refugee officials from camps which have been closed down would be transferred to work in the newly built centers.

BRIEFS

NORTHERN OIL DEPOSITS -- Thailand's hopes of a sizeable crude oil supply from Lan Krabue in the north have dimmed now that Thai Shell Exploration and Production Co Ltd has informed Minister in Charge of Petroleum Affairs Suli Mahasanthana that the company might be able to tap only 10 to 30 percent of the field reserves due to unfavourable geological features in its wells in Kamphaeng Phet Province in the north. A team of Thai Shell executives also informed the minister during a meeting last week that the company still could not exactly determine the field reserves but early estimates showed that "recoverable reserves" would be about 10-30 percent. They told the minister that the company had already drilled six wells and three more would be completed by October this year, according to well-informed sources. Thai Shell spokesman Pricha Phonprasoet told the NATION yesterday that the structure of the company's concession at Lan Krabue has many "faults" which rendered the crude oil exploration very difficult. He said the situation is quite "worrisome" and the difficulties prevent the company from reporting the exact field reserves to the government. 12 PRC PRISONERS TO BE RELEASED 28 AUGUST

PRC REACTION TO 'PEACE INITIATIVES' SCORED

BK131210 Hanoi International Service in Thai 1130 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Commentary by station commentator]

[Text] Only China and some of its followers have to date expressed concern about or criticized the peace initiatives of the three Indochinese countries and Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach's tour of certain ASEAN countries. China has vehemently denied that it has any wish to intimidate the Indochinese countries, but if this is so, then why has it continued to disregard the proposal of the Indochinese countries for an agreement for peaceful coexistence? It has charged that our proposal is insincere and was made to conceal hegemonist desires. By making such an allegation, Beijing is being hypocritical, because it is a fact known the world over that China and the Indochinese countries are engaged in a conflict. A dialogue must be pursued to resolve a conflict. We proposed that Vietnam and China hold the third round of talks, but Beijing said the proposal was unreasonable. What then is reasonable? Should the confrontation be allowed to continue?

Opinion in India, France and many other countries believes that we took a step forward by undertaking a partial withdrawal from Kampuchea and that the move was a good gesture on our part. The Indonesian foreign minister said it was an interesting move, while the Malaysian foreign minister said Vietnam has a sincere desire for friendship with ASEAN. However, the Chinese administration and some foreign parties, including certain newspapers and the Yugoslav news agency TANJUG, have made unfounded accusations that our gesture was untrustworthy, just a bait, a trap and so forth. Acutally, they are afraid that our proposal will help turn Southeast Asia into a zone of peace and they fear that its immediate result would be reduced tension and would induce a trend toward dialogue in the region -- conditions which China definitely does not want.

As for the collusion by the Chinese and U.S. administrations and certain reactionary powers to establish the so-called coalition government of the three exiled Kampuchean factions, even those who agreed with the idea have said that the establishment was a farce and thus meaningless. The fact that China has vigorously supported the coalition is not surprising because it was China which masterminded its formation, but the Yugoslav press' propaganda on the coalition's behalf is puzzling. Let us ask if any sane people support the criminals who killed 3 million Kampucheans and are seeking to kill more? Can anyone visualize what the situation in Southeast Asia would be like if the genocide in Kampuchea had not been halted and the invasion of Vietnam by the Chinese expansionists in February 1979 had not been repulsed?

Would there have been any Kampuchean soil and nation left for the sinners -- who see themselves as saints -- to claim for the continuation and peaceful development for the Kampuchean nation?

We feel that the reaction from China and some powers to date does not benefit them in any way. Such reaction only enables the general public to realize that our proposal is just, reasonable and generous. It could be that the reaction was made before thorough consideration. We hope that the Chinese administration will seriously study our peace initiatives and respond favorably, because there is nothing threatening about our proposal and it endangers no one. It only benefits peace and stability in Southeast Asia. Reactions made without careful consideration, such as those in the past, will only bring further isolation and further bare your true image to the world.

RADIO DISCUSSES CHINA'S 'EXPANSIONIST AMBITIONS'

[Article by station editor Duong Quang Ninh: "Southeast Asia in the Eyes of Beijing"]

[Text] As early as 1936, Mao Zedong exposed the ambitions of the Chinese ruling circles when he said: Our duty is to recover all the lost parts of Chinese territory rather than confining ourselves to protecting sovereignty within the Great Wall. What are the lost parts of Chinese territory to which Mao Zedong was referring? In 1965 he openly stated that they are the Southeast Asian region encompassing Vietnam, Laos, Kampuchea, Thailand, Burma, Malaysia, Singapore and so forth where minerals are abundant.

In order to be more aware of Beijing's expansionist ambitions, let us review some features of the Southeast Asian region. This region holds a key position on the vital communications route linking Europe with Asia, the Americas and Oceania. Southeast Asian countries have huge deposits of precious raw materials and abundant tropical products. These countries supply 64 percent of the world's tin, 29 percent of its gold, 88 percent of its rubber, 65 percent of its coconut, 35 percent of its rice, 70 percent of its tropical hardwood, 40 percent of its fragrances and 84 percent of its palm oil.

Countries in this region have also become more attractive since it was discovered that the continental shelf in the Eastern Sea contains many huge oil and natural gas deposits. It has been almost 5 centuries sincethe Portuguese colonialists fired the first shots to capture Malaysia in 1511, and since then this region has been frequented by colonialists and foreign capitalists who came here to dominate and exploit. After the Portuguese came the Dutch, the British, the French, the Spanish, the Japanese and then the Americans. Naturally, Beijing is now very keen on the idea of sending 500 million Chinese peasants to occupy Southeast Asia, as advocated by Mao Zedong. They think that only by capturing Southeast Asia and building up their forces in the region will they be able to cope with the Soviet-West European bloc and expand their global strategy for world domination in accordance with the policy of the east wind prevailing over the west wind.

Although still unable to gain the upper hand over the Western capitalists, who with an abundance of money and weapons regard Southeast Asia as their vital interest, Beijing is trying to exploit its two advantages in Southeast Asia in order to gain control over the region. These advantages are: First, the Chinese bourgeoisie and the reactionaries among the 15-20 million Chinese residents in Southeast Asian countries. Second, various Maoist political organizations affiliated with or under Beijing's influence. It is reported that there are 3.7 million Chinese residents in Malaysia out of a total population of 12.5 million; 6 million Chinese in Thailand, around 4 million in Indonesia, and particularly, as many as 1.7 million in Singapore out of a total population of 2.3 million.

The Chinese comprador bourgeoisie -- an important prop for Beijing -- controls almost all of these countries' vital economic levers. They control up to $50 billion in capital and monopolize up to 80 percent of trade in the region. In Thailand, they control 90 percent of rice exports. In Indonesia, they control 60 percent of the total market capital. In Malaysia, Chinese residents own 350 out of the top 400 large enterprises.

Not only are these countries being manipulated economically by the Chinese residents, but they are also under the latter's heavy political influence. Public opinion in Thailand unanimously agrees that Chinese residents in Thailand can fix the price for a kilo of rice and decide on the premier they want in power.

Beijing has taken great pains to set up in the Southeast Asian countries many reactionary political organizations and has exerted great influence on them, using them as a tool for rebellion and subversion. It is not surprising to see that many Maoist organizations, officially tagged as Marxist-Leninist parties, are in fact Beijing's political tools. Many radio stations said to belong to one party or another and which have been set up inside China are in fact a component of Beijing's propaganda machinery. In addition, Beijing has also nurtured many reactionary groups and gathered exiled groups from various countries in order to set up organizations designed to oppose the existing governments in many countries. For instance, they have set up the Kachin tribal group against the Burmese Government and helped the Vang Pao bandit group against the Lao Government. At present, Beijing is rallying the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary clique and other henchmen into the so-called Coalition Government of Kampuchea in order to oppose and sabotage the Kampuchean revolution.

To sum up, Beijing has used all manner of reactionary groups and opportunist elements, regardless of their political and social leanings, to sow division, obstruct progress and create rebellion in the Southeast Asian countries.

The defeat of the U.S. aggressors in Indochina, the present stability of the SRV, the victory of the Lao revolution and the liberation of Kampuchea from the yoke of the Pol Pot clique are factors that have foiled Beijing's expansionist ambitions to advance toward the Southeast Asian region.

A new Beijing scheme -- assisted by the United States -- is to weaken Southeast Asia in order to dominate this region in the long run. This scheme is designed to obstruct revolutionary developments in the three Indochinese countries and at the same time create confrontation between the Indochinese and ASEAN countries. They have cut aid to Vietnam, incited rebellion in the SRV and waged a cruel war of aggression against Vietnam's six northern border provinces. They have, moreover, persistently threatened to teach Vietnam a second lesson.

The Chinese leaders nurture the hope that by concentrating their troops along the China-Vietnam and China-Laos borders, and by assisting the Kampuchean genocidal clique to fight against the Kampuchean revolution, they will be able to push the three Indochinese countries to a state of war and thereby prevent these countries from concentrating their efforts on their nation-building tasks. They also hope that by creating confrontation between ASEAN and the Indochinese countries and by pushing Southeast Asia toward constant instability and threat of war, the ASEAN countries will be forced to accept China's control.

It is essential to point out here, however, that while Beijing nurtures ambitions to dominate Southeast Asia, this region absolutely refuses to allow Beijing to fulfill its frantic ambitions. The strengthening of solidarity among the peoples of the three Indochinese countries to oppose all Beijing's cruel acts of aggression is welcomed by progressive opinion in ASEAN countries which contends it is an essential way of effectively repulsing Beijing's expansionist drive into the Southeast Asia.

Despite differences in their political and social systems, the Southeast Asian countries unanimously agree that the threat to the independence and sovereignty of this region's countries in the long run comes solely from Beijing. This clearly shows our unswerving and absolutely correct position of standing ready, together with the ASEAN countries, to build Southeast Asia into a zone of peace, stability, friendship and cooperation. Only in this way can the peoples of Southeast Asia triumphantly oppose all the sinister schemes of Beijing expansionism.

Interviewed by Iraqi Paper

OW131734 Hanoi VNA in English 1505 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, August 13 -- Deputy Foreign Minister Vo Dong Giang, special envoy of President of the Council of State Truong Chinh, recently granted an interview to the Iraqi paper ATH-THAWRAH during his visit to Iraq.

He said: The friendship and cooperation between Vietnam and Iraq is developing satisfactorily. Iraq supported and assisted Vietnam in its past anti-U.S. struggle for national salvation, and continues supporting and assisting its present national construction and defence. These relations were further enhanced by the recent Vietnam visits of Vice President Taha Muhyi ad-Din Ma'ruf and of a delegation of the Joint Iraqi-Vietnamese Commission for Economic Cooperation.

He said that Iraq and Vietnam had agreed that the coming summit of the Non-Aligned Movement should centre its efforts on the struggle for world peace and security and national independence and sovereignty, against imperialism, colonialism and neo-colonialism, Zionism, apartheid and other hegemonistic forces. In this spirit, he added, the two sides held that in the present situation the Non-Aligned Movement should give the Palestinian people's just struggle a place of particular importance. He recalled that Iraq fully supported Vietnam's efforts to make Southeast Asia a zone of peace, stability and cooperation so that the peoples in the region might be able to build a prosperous and happy life for themselves.

Vo Dong Giang expressed high appreciation of Iraq's attitude regarding the venue of the coming non-aligned summit. He said that though having made every possible preparation in both material and content for the summit, Iraq had declared that it would not prevent the shifting of the venue if decided by a meeting fully accredited by the heads of states. He said he rejoiced at the declaration of the vice chairman of the Iraqi Revolutionary Command Council, 'Izzat Ibrahim, during his reception that whether the summit is to be convened in Baghdad or elsewhere, his country would fully support and closely cooperate with Vietnam's efforts in all the common questions of the movement and in the issues regarding Southeast Asia.

Dealing with the Iranian-Iraqi conflict, Vo Dong Giang reiterated Vietnam's stand regarding the conflicts between member countries of the Non-Aligned movement as follows: All conflicts between member countries should be solved in the spirit of reconciliation and by peaceful means. Reconciliation should be achieved on the principles of equality and respect for each other's independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and genuine interests, without imposition of one party's will on the other, and without outside interference. The Non-Aligned Movement should help the two parties with the reconciliation and should not support one party against the other. No measure should be taken that harms the movement's common efforts in the struggle against imperialism, colonialism and other reactionary forces. In this spirit, he went on, Vietnam welcomed all efforts towards reconciliation and wished for the positive results of these efforts.

He described the present Israeli aggression as an impudent challenge to the Palestinian and other Arab peoples and to the peace-loving and progressive people all over the world. He said: Vietnam most strongly condemns Israel for its acts of massive destruction and aggression against the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples. Israel would not have been able to be so unbridled in its acts in spite of worldwide condemnation if it had not been aided and abetted by the U.S. imperialists. The Non-Aligned Movement and other progressive forces in the world should do their best to rally forces as large as possible to back the Palestinian people in overcoming the current trails in their struggle. Vietnam would do its utmost to be worthy of the Palestinian people, its comrade-in-arms, he reaffirmed.

Vo Dong Giang welcomed all efforts aimed at bringing about prosperity and happiness for the Iraqi people thus contributing to the Arab people's struggle and to the world people's struggle for peace, national independence and social progress. He said he believed that by pursuing this policy the Iraqi Arab Ba'th Socialist Party would give Iraq a worthy role in the Non-Aligned Movement and in the international arena.

LEADERS' MESSAGE GREETS INDIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, August 14 -- President Truong Chinh and Premier Pham Van Dong have sent a joint message to President Ghani Zail Singh and Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of the Republic of India, in connection with India's independence day tomorrow.

The message says: "The birth of an independent India 35 years ago constituted not only a glorious victory for the Indian people, but also an event of great significance in the struggle of oppressed nations in Asia and throughout the world against imperialism, colonialism and for national independence. The tremendous achievements which the great Indian people, by their industrious and creative labour, have scored in all fields of national construction over past 35 years have made India more prosperous and have continously enhanced the prestige of the Republic of India in the Non-Aligned Movement and in the struggle for peace, national independence, democracy and social progress in Asia and in the world as a whole.

"We are very glad to note that the friendly relations and multi-sided cooperation between the Socialist Republic of Vietnam and the Republic of India have been increasingly consolidated and developed. We take this opportunity to express our sincere thanks to Your Excellencies and to the Indian people for having consistently expressed your sympathy with and support for the Vietnamese people's struggle to preserve our independence and to rebuild our country.

"We wish the fraternal Indian people, under your leadership, still greater successes in building a prosperous country and a happy life.

"May the friendly relations and multi-sided cooperation between our two countries further consolidate and develop".

Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach has also sent greetings to his Indian counterpart, P.V. Narasimha Rao.

PHAM VAN DONG GREETS ASIAN BUDDHIST CONGRESS

OW131732 Hanoi VNA in English 1452 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, August 13 -- Chairman of the Council of Ministers Pham Van Dong today sent his warmest greetings to the 6th Asian Buddhist Congress for Peace (A.B.C.P.), which will be held in Ulaanbaatar on August 14-16.

The message said: At present, the U.S.-led warlike imperialist forces are feverishly stepping up the arms race in nuclear and other weapons of mass annihilation, seriously threatening peace and the survival of other nations. In Asia, especially in Southeast Asia, with U.S. complicity and backing, the Beijing authorities are accelerating their expansionist and hegemonist policy against the three Indochinese countries and undermining peace and stability in this region.

Since its founding, the A.B.C.P. has constantly striven for peace, national independence, democracy and social progress in Asia and the rest of the world. The convening of the 6th A.B.C.P. at this moment is of great significance. It will strongly encourage Buddhists in various countries to participate in the common struggle for peace and security in Asia and the world, and foil the bellicose and aggressive policy of the imperialist forces and other international reactionaries.

Being victims of the aggressions by colonialism, imperialism and Chinese expansionism and hegemonism, during the past 35 years our people have put up an arduous fight and won glorious victories. More than anybody else, the Vietnamese people ardently cherish peace, peace in independence and freedom. The more they cherish their independence, freedom and peace, the more the Vietnamese people respect and strive to make modest contributions to the common struggle for the independence, freedom and peace of other nations. This is consistent policy of the Vietnamese Government and people.

On this occasion, on behalf of the entire Vietnamese people and the Government of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam, we wish to express our sincere gratitude to the A.B.C.P. and its members for having reserved their precious support to our just cause.

LABOR LEADERS APPREHENDED ON CHARGES OF SEDITION

Olalia, Others Arrested

HK150049 Manila Far East Broadcasting Company in English 2330 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] President Marcos yesterday assured that the rights of apprehended labor leaders will be fully protected. He assured them that they will be released immediately if evidence against them is not substantiated. The chief executive assured the labor ranks, including labor leaders and union members, that he has always been a friend of labor and that it is his intention to continue to protect the interests of labor with the power entrusted to him as president. With respect to labor leaders who may have been apprehended by the Metrocom, the police or by other intelligence agents, the president said he will order their release immediately if there is no evidence of commission of crimes of sedition, rebellion or subversion, or inciting to commission of these crimes; but those persons who by the commission of these crimes continue to be a danger to society have to be neutralized in the meantime.

A military offiers said yesterday that there is strong evidence that the group of Felixberto Olalia, chairman of the Kilusang Mayom-uno [1 May movement], is out to wreck the country's economy and not merely to get better wages. PC [Philippine Constabulary] intelligence chief Brig Gen Baltazar Aguirre Jr said that Olalia, who was arrested Friday night, has been inciting and engaged in conspiring to commit rebellion. He said the massive strikes Olalia and his men are planning to execute are part of the plot. Olalia was confronted with a pile of evidence gathered by the military, including a documented revelation by a top labor leader who exposed the existence of a plot. So far, he said, the military has proven that more than 20 big companies have been forced to close because of his plot, resulting in many workers losing their jobs.

The president and national secretary of the Trade Union Congress of the Philippines (TUCP) yesterday said the arrest of certain labor leaders should be taken as a necessary step to safeguard the national welfare and the democratic way of life of the Filipino people. TUCP President Democrito Mendoza and National Secretary (Andres Dinglasan) said the TUPC has been concerned for some time over the seemingly open intrusion, in defiance of existing laws, by the subversive elements in the labor movement. They added that the principal aim of the subversive elements in the labor movement is not really to improve the workers' economic existence but rather to sow mass discontent, to encourage the people to revolt against the democratic and duly constituted government, and also to use the labor movement to further their political ideology.

Mendoza and (Dinglasan) said the TUCP viewed the arrest of certain labor leaders as a legitimate exercise of government, under the leadership of President Marcos, to protect the Filipino society against the continuing and alarming infiltration of the labor movement by subversive elements.

Charges Against Olalia

HK160018 Manila Domestic Service in English 2300 GMT 15 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Military authorities have filed charges of inciting sedition and rebellion against labor union leader Felixberto Olalia Sr. The judge advocate-general's office filed the charges with the Quizon City fiscal's office. Olalia was charged on three counts of inciting to rebellion, which is punishable by up to 14 years in jail. He was also charged with at least one count of inciting to sedition, which carries a penalty of up to 8 years in jail.

Olalia is the chairman of the Kilusang Mayo Uno and president of the National Federation of Labor Unions. He was arrested Friday along with 13 other labor leaders for allegedly fomenting unrest in the labor sector to try to paralyze the economy. Olalia is now under detention in the PC [Philippine Constabulary] stockade in Quezon City.

Meantime fiscal (Josimo Arminez) has postponed Olalia's inquest for tomorrow, after Olalia's lawyer said they have yet to examine the charges against the client. Olalia however has signed a waiver of [words indistinct] continued detention.

Olalia was arrested and detained on the basis of a presidential commitment order recommended by PC Chief Fidel Ramos. General Ramos said it was necessary to detain Olalia because he was inciting other labor leaders to paralyze the economy and to undermine the national security. He asked that the military has the evidence to prove its case.

[Begin Ramos recording] We in the PC-INP [Integrated National Police] and the rest of the armed forces are ready to prove this. We have carried out, therefore, our constitutional duty to inform the president and accordinly have requested from him a presidential commitment order, because to have allowed Mr Olalia to go his merry way would have led to the disruption of our national economy, the deterioration of our national stability and [words indistinct]. [end recording]

For his part Judge Advocate-General Hamilton Dimaya has cited Olalia's [words indistinct] and activities to stir unrest in the labor sector. [passage indistinct]

As reported earlier, the 13 other labor leaders arrested with Olalia have been released. Metrocom Chief Prospero Olivas who conducted the arrests said proper care was taken to [words indistinct].

Documents seized in Olalia's home showed that the subversives were planning to bomb five-star hotels and water dams in Metropolitan Manila. There were also plans to set fire to the export processing zones in [word indistinct], Cebu, Zamboanga and Baguio. Also [words indistinct] bombings, assassinations and a nationwide strike.

Marcos Comments on Arrests

OW141345 Quezon City RPN Television Network in English 1100 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] The president has assured the rights of arrested labor leaders will be fully protected. The president, in a statement released this afternoon by Malacanang, also said those arrested will be released immediately if evidence against them is not substantiated. But the president stressed those persons who by the reported commission of such crimes as sedition, rebellion or subversion or inciting to commit these crimes, continue to be a danger to society and thus have to be neutralized in the meantime [as heard].

The president's statement followed the arrest of Felixberto Olalia, leader of the Kilosang Mayo Uno [May first movement; KMU] and the (Kilosang Mangagawang Pilipino) with offices at the UCI Building on Espana. Also picked up with Olalia were 13 labor unionists belonging to the Olalia Group.

Padlocked and guarded by Metrocom troups after last night's raids and searches were the Panalo [Philippine Alliance of National Labor Organization] offices at (URC), the KMU office at (Shaw) Boulevard, and PAFLU [Philippine Association of Free Labor Unions] headquarters. After routine questioning, the 13 unionists picked up with Olalia were subsequently released.

Metrocom Chief Gen Prospero Olivas, in a statement, said a presidential commitment order against Olalia was issued upon request of the PC-INP [Philippine Constabulary-Integrated National Police] under Lt Gen Fidel Ramos and by the Metrocom on the basis of alleged evidence showing there have been continued preparations for subversive activities. Such activities included terrorism, arson, assassination, coercion and nationwide strikes to paralyze the national economy, according to the Metrocom statement.

Camp Crame reports say insiders within the Kilosang Mayo Uno group confirmed the so-called earlier signs that leaders of Panalo-KMU were out to sow dissension, mass discontent and hatred. Brig Gen (Balthazar Agile), PC intelligence chief, also said they have evidence to show that Olalia and his group were planning to wreck the economy and have been inciting others to sedition and rebellion.

Meanwhile, the army has placed its units nationwide on alert against terror plotters. Army Chief Maj Gen Josephus Ramos took the move following revelations earlier made by the president that terror plotters were planning to carry out bombings, assassinations and other disturbances next month, especially when the president goes on his visit to the United States.

Ramos Comments on Arrests

HK140044 Manila Far East Broadcasting Company in English 2330 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Persons identified as plotters of the nationwide terrorism and assassination plot next month will be arrested. Army Commander Maj Gen Josephus Ramos said special military teams will be sent out in the next few days to make the arrests.

However, General Ramos denied reports that the projected roundup of the plotters will be a prelude to the reimposition of martial law. He said the order is to get the conspirators before they could do any harm.

In a related development, military authorities in Cotabato City have discovered a terrorist plot to sow fear and havoc in the city and its environs. The plot was unfolded following the arrest of two suspects in Monday's grenade-bombing incident at the Family Savings Bank branch in Cotabato City. (Jerry Ricardo Trinidad), chief of the Cotabato Metropolican District Command, said the incident was perpetrated by urban terrorists to discredit the military.

Investigation of Foreign Unions

HK140222 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 13 Aug 82 p 10

[Text] The Labor Ministry is now investigating reports that Australian and Japanese trade unions are behind local labor strikes for higher wages.

Labor Minister Blas F. Ople directed Deputy Labor Minister Carmelo Noriel to check the reports which indicated that foreign trade unions have infiltrated local labor unions and are agitating them to demand higher wages.

A recent report published in the US NEWS AND WORLD REPORT has confirmed the intervention of Australian and Japanese trade unions in the agitation of Southeast Asian labor unions for better working terms and conditions. According to reports reaching Noriel, foreign meddling in labor strikes in the Philippines aimed at discouraging the establishment of production plants here by Japanese and Australian investors.

Among the Australian labor groups reported to be helping local trade unions are the Storemen and Packers Union, Vehicle Builders Employees Federation, Textile Workers Union and the Amalgamated Metal Workers and Shipwrights Union.

Noriel said the inquiry into the activities of foreign trade unions may include labor strikes in a dairy firm and two automotive factories.

He said that while the concern of these foreign trade unions for the welfare of local laborers may be genuine, their meddling could produce adverse effects on the economy, especially if the firms involved are export-oriented.

Labor Strike Potential Viewed

[Article by reporter Rigoberto D. Tiglao: "Is the Labor Sector Capable of Holding Nationwide Strikes?"]

[Text] No group in the local labor movement seems to be capable of launching a nationwide strike, contrary to intelligence reports received by President Marcos of a subversive plot to launch such a general strike sometime in September. This is because the labor movement has been so fragmented and divided -- to such an extent that a number of major labor disputes have actually been caused by trade union rivalry -- that no single federation or labor center holds sway over any significant section of the movement.

The Trade Union Congress of the Philippines (TUCP), while the biggest labor confederation, is certainly not capable nor willing to launch a nationwide strike. Aside from being an officially government-recognized labor center -- with many of its top leaders holding positions in government bodies such as the social security system and the national wages council -- the TUCP has never been able to conduct a single mass demonstration at all, except for the government-sponsored Labor Day celebrations.

Squabbles: worse, the TUCP federations themselves have squabbles that have nearly split its ranks. Two of its largest federations, the Philippine Transport and General Workers' Organization and Philippine Association of Free Labor Unions (PAFLU), are each split into two factions with each of these factions claiming to be the legitimate representative of each of the two federations.

The Federation of Free Workers (FFW), one of the bigger (TUCP) federations, have even deviated from major TUCP policies. For example, it was the FFW which filed a case with the Supreme Court questioning the legality of the one-union, one-industry concept advocated by the TUCP and the Ministry of Labor and Employment.

The major federations of the TUCP have even recently lost the allegiance of big local unions. The Associated Labor Union (ALU) for example, headed by Democrito Mendoza, TUCP president, last year lost its Cebu-based Atlas Consolidated Mining Corp. local to the small Manila-based Philippine Social Security Union. The ALU also nearly lost its Bank of the Philippine Islands Metro Manila local if not for a last-minute agreement that the Metro Manila local would be practically an autonomous union although officially affiliated with the ALU.

TUCP's leadership of the labor movement has been so seriously doubted that as one top military official had noted that in the last Labor Day celebrations, intelligence reports showed that more workers attended the rival Pagkakaisa ng Manggagawang Pilipino-Kilusang Mayo Uno's (PMP-KMU) celebration at the Araneta Coliseum than the government-sponsored TUCP celebration at the Philippine International Convention Center.

In doubt: However, the actual mobilizing power of the PMP-KMU, which is known for its leftwing rhetoric, is seriously doubted by top Labor Ministry officials. They noted that PMP-KMU's ability to conduct demonstrations especially this year owes more to the fact that it was supporting strikes which no other labor group would support because of their legally weak positions. The workers idled by these strikes were mostly its manpower in demonstrations, they noted.

Recently, even the PMP-KMU's capability to conduct demonstrations appears to have weakened mainly because of the defeat of major strikes which it has supported. Observers noted that the PMP-KMU prestige has been seriously damaged because of the defeat of its strike at Solid Mills, Inc., especially since the union's former mother federation FFW had advised the union not to push through with their strike. Another blow to PPM-KMU prestige has been the defeat of the central Azucarera de la Carlota strike, which it reportedly supported. What was damaging to the PMP-KMU's prestige was that the union was not even advised to wait for the end of the mandatory seven-day period after a strike vote has been submitted. Because of this legal detail, the entire strike was declared illegal and the union's officers and a number of workers dismissed. Even if the Supreme Court had ruled against their favor on the 13th month issue, which was the strike issue, the PUM-KMU-supported union at La Carlota would have been intact if not for its legal blunder.

MARCO URGES COUNTERACTING SUBVERSIVE EFFORTS

HK160042 Manila Far East Broadcasting Company in English 2330 GMT 15 Aug 82

[Text] President Marcos has urged local government officials to go to their barangays and counteract antigovernment efforts by the subversives. Mr Marcos made the call in a meeting Friday with top officials and local executives of region 2 in Malacanang. He also told the local officials to reach out to their constituents as part of their fight against antigovernment activities. The president reiterated that public officials have the duty [words indistinct]. Reaching out, according to Mr Marcos, is the only way to find out the people's problems and how local executives can help solve them. He stressed that if reports are true that subversives conduct their activities in remote barangays, it is all the more reason for public officials to reach out. The president further stressed that some of the countryside barangays are not fully aware of the government's development efforts. He added that media alone cannot be expected to be adequately informing the public.

Mr Marcos also revealed that he will soon institute on all-out campaign against loose firearms in the fight against lawlessness and subversion. He said people will be asked to first register their firearms and be trained how to use them properly.

OPLE STRESSES JOB PRESERVATION OVER WAGE HIKES

HK150128 Manila Domestic Service in English 0400 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Labor Minister Blas Ople says the government is more concerned now with the creation of more jobs and the preservation of present ones than a nationwide across-the-board wage adjustment. In a television interview, Minister Ople said this is the position taken by President Marcos in reaction to labor demands for a 3 peso across-the-board wage hike. Due to world recession, Ople said, some 100,000 jobs were lost last year. He said that the government would rather attend to this problem, induce foreign investment and provide more employment than work out a higher minimum wage for labor.

OFFICIALS SEEKING WAYS TO SOLVE TEXTBOOK ISSUE

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 17, KYODO -- Japanese officials Monday continued discussions to seek ways for early settlement of diplomatic rows with China and South Korea over the textbook issue but no clear-cut answer was reported.

Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki met a leading figure in the ruling Liberal-Democratic Party for Educational Affairs [as received], while the Foreign and Education Ministries examined possible steps to cool the anger of the neighboring nations. Political sources said the Education Ministry remained adamant on any revision of textbooks, while the Foreign Ministry wanted to leave open the possibility that they might be revised in future editions.

China and South Korea are demanding correction of historical accounts in Japanese high school textbooks due for use from next year. They charge that the Japanese Education Ministry has distorted historical facts on Japanese actions in Asia before and during World War II.

In talks with Suzuki, Takeo Nishioka, vice chairman of the LDP Policy Affairs Research Council, said screenings conducted by the Education Ministry's advisory body are authoritative. Therefore, the revised accounts can hardly be corrected promptly through attaching errata, meeting sources quoted Nishioka as telling the prime minister. Nishioka also said LDP committees on education whose members are endorsing the Education Ministry's screenings will hold a joint meeting Tuesday to discuss the matter.

The meeting between Suzuki and Nishioka which lasted about an hour was the first effort by Suzuki to sound out opinions within the party. The government is expected to issue a statement later this month to announce its stand on the textbook issue.

Ranking officials of the Foreign Ministry agreed to incorporate three points into the statement:

-- Japan's repentance for past actions which injured neighboring countries.

-- Japan's unchanged diplomatic policy as a peace-loving country and

-- The acknowledgement of responsibility and repentance for the war through education.

Meanwhile, a top-ranking Foreign Ministry official said he was deeply shaken by South Korean President Chon Tu-hwan's remarks made on the occasion of South Korea's National Liberation Day Sunday. Recalling the 1910-45 colonial rule by Japan, Chon said, "We were even deprived of the last symbols of national identity and pride -- our own names and language."

JAPANESE IN ROK ADVISED TO KEEP LOW PROFILE

OW170351 Tokyo KYODO in English 0312 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] Seoul, Aug 17, KYODO -- The Japanese school in Seoul has canceled its annual summer camp for students amid increasing anti-Japanese sentiment in this country, school officials said Monday. They said the decision was made on advice from the Japanese Embassy in Seoul.

Some 200 students of fifth and sixth grades were scheduled to go to a campsite near Seoul for a two-day camp from Tuesday. Embassy officials said they advised against the excursion to avoid a possible incident.

Anti-Japanese feelings are mounting among the Koreans over Japanese school textbooks which they said distorted the history of Japan's colonial rule of Korea.

Several Japanese companies in Seoul instructed their Japanese employees to stay home on Liberation Day Sunday.

But some Japanese here say it is an overreaction. "There has been no direct violence against us or insults by Koreans even though anti-Japanese sentiment is rising," a Japanese said.

SPACE ALLOY EXPERIMENT CALLED SUCCESSFUL

OW160419 Tokyo KYODO in English 0357 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Kagoshima, Aug 16,KYODO -- The state-run National Space Development Agency announced Monday a success in producing and recovering amorphous and nickel alloys in space with a rocket designed specifically for the purpose.

The 10.5 meter-long, two-stage rocket was launched from the agency's Tanegashima Space Center Monday at 8:15 A.M., and its payload of two furnances dropped into the Pacific some 470 kilometers from the center about 15 minutes later, it said. The amorphous alloy produced in space is a noncrystalline substance considered to be a "breakthrough" material for solar cells.

The agency succeeded in alloy production and recovery with the eighth rocket of the series launched in September 1980. The previous two launches succeeded in the production stage, but the electric furnaces sank in the sea due to mechanical trouble and could not be recovered, the agency officials said. The agency plans to launch seven more tests by September 24.

AUTOMATED ION INJECTION DEVICE DEVELOPED

OW140417 Tokyo KYODO in English 0406 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 14, KYODO -- The Nippon Telegraph and Telephone Public Corporation (NTT) said it has developed a fully automated ion injection device to be used in producing very large-scale integration (VLSI).

NTT officials claimed the device to be the world's first full automation of ionizing process and a big step toward realizing totally unmanned LSI production. The new system is fully computerized to automatically handle ionizing process which was previously done by skilled workers.

The purpose is to ionize impurities, like boron, phosphor and arsenic, and accelerate them by high voltage to shoot on silicon wafer, a substrate of LSI. The automation of ionizing process has been long overdue for high random noise created in acceleration and electric discharges, the officials said.

Workers are only required to input classification of ion, voltage level and quantity of ion injection when using the new system. A worker would be able to handle five to six devices at the same time, the officials said. The number of personnel in clean rooms for LSI production would be drastically reduced by using this device to raise the yielding rate of LSI production, they said.

The NTT will use it in developing VLSI but is also expected to provide technical know-how to domestic semiconductor makers for producing the new device, the officials added.

FORMER SOUTH POLITICIANS HIT U.S. 'COLONIALISM'

SK160445 Pyongyang KCNA in English 0354 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 16 (KCNA) -- The Consultative Council of Former South Korean Politicians in the North for the Promotion of Peaceful Reunification issued a white paper on August 15 indicting the U.S. imperialists to the whole world for their unpardonable crime in converting South Korea into their colony after making their way into it under the guise of "liberator," on the occasion of the 37th anniversary of the August 15 liberation.

The Consultative Council is an organisation of former South Korean political figures who came over to the DPRK in the period of the Korean war in search of the road of alliance with communism and patriotism.

In the white paper former South Korean politicians, citing facts which they had experienced, exposed in full how the U.S. imperialists acted to keep hold on South Korea as their colony and military base.

The white paper notes that the U.S. imperialists who occupied South Korea after August 15, 1945, trumped up a puppet National Assembly with Syngman Rhee who had been brought up for 40 odd years in the United States to be a pro-U.S. lackey as its "chairman" on May 31, 1948, instituted a "constitution" providing for the "president responsibility system" in July and cooked up the socalled "Government of the Republic of Korea" with him as "president" on the occasion of the August 15 "liberation day." It says:

The South Korean puppet regime is nothing but a tool for executing the U.S. imperialists' aggressive policy and a fig leaf for covering up their colonial rule.

The actual ruling machine in South Korea is the U.S. Embassy in Seoul. Having seized domination over South Korea, the U.S. Embassy indicates the orientation of the home and foreign policies of the puppet government, supervises and controls their execution, seizes the right of personnel management of legislative, administrative and judicial organs and political parties, organises the political forces in favour of the U.S. colonial rule and dictates them.

The white paper points to the fact that when the Syngman Rhee puppet regime was overthrown and desires for democracy and peaceful national reunification grew high rapidly in South Korea after the April 19 popular uprising in 1960, the U.S. imperialists instigated Pak Chong-hui to stage the "May 16 military coup" and set up an ill-famed fascist dictatorship and picked up the special class pro-U.S. lackey and military hooligan, Chon Tu-hwan, toward the close of 1979 to establish a military fascist dictatorship, more truculent than the former one.

The "election" in South Korea is no more than a formal one for advertisement of democracy and the right to appoint puppet president is held entirely in the hands of the U.S. imperialists, it notes.

It says that the U.S. imperialists have thoroughly subjugated South Korea militarily and the South Korean puppet army cannot use even a drop of gasoline, to say nothing of weapons and ammunitions, without the consent of the U.S. imperialists and that the U.S. imperialists have completely seized the artery of the South Korean economy and subordinated it to their military purposes, totally blocking the road of the independent development of the national economy in South Korea.

The white paper points out that in the cultural sphere, too, South Korea has turned into a complete colony of U.S. imperialism.

REACTION TO PUSAN ARSON VERDICTS CONTINUES

Pyongyang Student Rally

SK131214 Pyongyang Domestic Service in Korean 2300 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] A rally of Pyongyang college students denouncing the U.S. imperialists and their stooges for the criminal suppression of the anti-U.S. and independence struggle of the South Korean people, youths and students was held on 12 August. Responsible functionaries of the Central Committee of the League of Socialist Working Youth of Korea [LSWYK] and the LSWYK Pyongyang Committee and college deans were present at the rally along with college students of the city.

At the rally site, various slogans were continuously shouted saying: "We denounce the fascist suppression of the South Korean people, youths and students by the U.S. imperialists and the South Korean puppet clique; Immediately release the South Korean youths and students and the patriotic people who were unjustly arrested and imprisoned and void the sentences handed down on them; U.S. imperialists, immediately withdraw from South Korea; Overthrow the murderer and rascal Chon Tu-hwan; We actively support and encourage the anti-U.S. and anti-fascist struggle of the South Korean youths, students and people!"

At the rally, Hyon Sok, vice chairman of the LSWYK Central Committee, spoke first. He pointed out the fact that puppet rascal Chon Tu-hwan -- the dirty stooge of the U.S. imperialists -- at the homicidal trials of those involved in the act of arson at the Pusan U.S. cultural center, commited a fascist outrage by passing death penalties for student Mun Pu-sik and youth Kim Hyon-chang, life terms for students Kim Un-suk and Yi Mi-ok, and up to 15-year prison terms for the remaining 13 of them including priest Choe Ki-sik.

He also pointed out the fact that, at the earlier trials of Chong Sun-chol and other patriotic youths and students who set fire to the Kwangju U.S. cultural center -- a tool of the U.S. imperialists' wicked ideological and cultural invasion -- and of Kangwon University students who burned the cursed U.S. Stars and Stripes, the Chon Tu-hwan clique committed the outrageous fascist atrocity of penalizing them in a package deal.

He said that the penalties the fascist hangmen carried out under the abetment of the U.S. imperialists are an intolerable challenge to the South Korean people and the patriotic youths and students seeking a new world of independence and a new society of democracy without foreign forces and fascism, and are desperate last-ditch efforts aimed at repressing the daily growing anti-U.S. and independence sentiment in South Korea and at shoring up the shaking fascist colonial rule.

He said that the daring act of the South Korean youths and students who disseminated anti-U.S. leaflets in many places in Pusan and burned the U.S. cultural center -- one of the U.S. imperialists organizations of aggression in South Korea -- was an eruption of the accumulated and cherished enmity and indignation against the U.S. imperialist aggressors who have continued the occupation of South Korea for as long as 37 years and have imposed the atrocious fascist colonial rule, and was a demonstration of their firm resolve to recover the sovereignty and dignity of the nation that they have been deprived of by the aggressors and to achieve a self-reliant independence.

Noting in detail with historical facts that the U.S. imperialists, who have relentlessly infringed upon the sovereignty of our people and the dignity of the nation for a century, still remain in the southern part of the fatherland, behaving as masters and imposing all kinds of misfortune and disaster on the South Korean people, Hyon Sok went on to say:

As proven by the facts, as long as the U.S. imperialist aggressors remain in South Korea and as long as their colonial rule continues, the South Korean people, youths and students are unable to be freed from their miserable situation, and the democratization of the South Korean society and the independent and peaceful reunification of the country cannot be expected. Out of the experiences in their lives, the South Korean youths, students and people have too clearly realized this, so they denounce the colonial rule of the U.S. imperialists and raise high the torch of anti-U.S. struggle.

The burning of the Pusan U.S. cultural center by the South Korean youths and students was a manifestation of their burning patriotism and sense of independence and a proud patriotic feat that has reflected the unanimous desire of the South Korean people who oppose the domination and subjugation of the foreign force and yearn for an independent and democratic new life and world. Nevertheless, traitor Chon Tu-hwan -- the stooge tamed by the U.S. imperialists -- described the just struggle of the South Korean youths, students and people as nation-ruining violence, a rash act and so on and commited a shameful act by calling on his master in a base manner to say that he was sorry and so on. At the same time, he carried out frantic manhunts and staged lunatic commotions of indiscriminately detaining and torturing youths, students and people everywhere in South Korea.

The speaker said: The crimes of the U.S. imperialist aggressors illegally occupying South Korea, committing all kinds of undescribable offenses such as murder, robbery, plunder and rape, and indiscriminately infringing upon lives and properties of the South Korean people, are covered up. But the patriotic youths and students opposing the aggression of the foreign force and struggling to recover the sovereignty of the nation are branded as criminals, suppressed with guns and swords and treated with capital penalties. This is an act of treason against the compatriots that can be commited only by the Chon Tu-hwan ring -- the faithful dogs of the U.S. imperialists and the nation-selling traitors of the [word indistinct] -- and, thus, is unpardonable forever.

Hyon Sok said that he firmly denounces the criminal maneuvers of the U.S. imperialists and their stooges, the traitorous Chon Tu-hwan clique, running amok to obliterate the anti-U.S. and independence spirit growing in South Korea.

He went on to say: The conscientious religionists and democratic personages of South Korea are turning out to actively support the just struggle of the patriotic youths and students and strongly calling for expulsion of the wretched commander of the U.S. imperialist aggressive forces and the wretched U.S. ambassador who recklessly insulted our nation. This vividly shows that, today, in South Korea, the spear of the struggle is pointed at the U.S. imperialists and the colonial rule of the U.S. imperialists is shaking at its root. Hyon Sok sent in the name of all the youths and students of the northern half of the republic, warm compatriotic support and encouragement to the South Korean youths, students and people waging, under the banner of anti-U.S. national salvation struggle and amid the fascist suppression of the U.S. imperialists and the Chon Tu-hwan ring, an unyielding struggle for independence, democracy and reunification.

Saying that with the U.S. imperialist aggressors in the southern part of our fatherland, the agony and misfortune that the South Korean people are suffering cannot be eliminated and the true sovereignty of the nation and the reunification of the country cannot be achieved, the speaker went on to say: The South Korean youths, students and people must raise even higher the anti-U.S. independence banner that they have already raised and stage an even bolder struggle to repel the U.S. imperialists' aggressive forces from South Korea and to end the colonial rule. With guns and swords and relentless punishments, the U.S. imperialists cannot quench the will of the people seeking an independent living. They must immediately withdraw, along with their aggressive forces and lethal weapons.

The Chon Tu-hwan ring -- the executor of the policy of colonial subjugation of the U.S. imperialists and their cat's-paw -- must make an apology to the country and nation for its crimes and murders and step down from power without delay. At the same time, it must nullify the capital and heavy penalties unjustly imposed on the patriotic youths and students at the illegal trails and release them immediately.

The speaker stressed that, to achieve the reunification of the fatherland, the proposal for the establishment of the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo advanced by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song -- the sun of the nation -- must be implemented.

The speaker said: The youths and students in the northern half of the republic must firmly arm themselves with the chuche idea -- the revolutionary ideology of the great leader -- and, under the guidance of the great leader and the glorious party center, firmly prepare themselves as trustworthy inheritor of the chuche cause and vigorously carry out the movement to create the speed of the 1980's with the same energy and spirit as that in the time of the great Chollima upsurge. By doing so, they must bring about upturns and innovations on every battlefield of socialist construction, further displaying the honor of the loyal youth file of the KWP.

He said that students and youths must uphold the party's study-first policy and study in the same manner as they wage battle in conformity with the magnificent situation of new revolutionary upsurge to prepare themselves as able men with knowledge, virtue and physical strength for the socialist and communist construction.

In conclusion, he appealed that everyone rally around the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song -- the genius of the revolution and the sun of the nation -- the glorious party center and vigorously struggle for the independent and peaceful reunification of the fatherland and for the final consummation of the chuche revolutionary cause.

Chongnyon Official's Remarks

SK170515 Pyongyang KCNA in English 0338 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, August 14 (KNS-KCNA) -- Yi Chin-kyu, vice-chairman of the Central Standing Committee of the General Association of Korean Residents in Japan (Chongnyon), issued a talk on August 13 denouncing the Chon Tu-hwan fascist clique for passing capital punishment and heavy penalties upon persons involved in the arson at the "American Cultural Centre" in Pusan.

In his talk he said that the fascist outrage is a desperate attempt of the U.S. imperialists and the Chon Tu-hwan clique to suppress and stamp out the ever mounting sentiments of the South Korean people against U.S. imperialism and for independence and a vicious challenge to the entire Korean people and the fair public opinion of the world.

The arson at the "American Cultural Centre" in Pusan was an eruption of wrath and indignation pent up in the hearts of the South Korean people under the 37 years old colonial rule of U.S. imperialism and a righteous action of national salvation for driving out the U.S. imperialists and restoring the sovereignty of the nation, he noted.

No matter how desperately the Chon Tu-hwan gang may brandish the bayonet and intensify the fascist suppression, it cannot break the staunch fighting spirit of the South Korean people against U.S. imperialism and for independence, democracy and national reunification or save itself from the doom, he stressed, and said: The Chon Tu-hwan fascist clique must revoke at once the unjust sentences passed upon those involved in the arson at the "American Cultural Centre" in Pusan and unconditionally set them free and immediately release all the political prisoners in South Korea.

The U.S. imperialists must get out of South Korea, taking along all their destructive weapons including nuclear weapons.

The Japanese authorities must break off political, economic and military tieup with the Chon Tu-hwan clique.

Christian Group's Statement

SK140944 Pyongyang Domestic Service in Korean 2200 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Statement of the Central Committee of the Korean Christian Federation issued on 13 August]

[Text] Together with all compatriots at home and abroad, our Christians are enraged at hearing the news that the treacherous bunch in South Korea has committed against God and man barbarous, atrocious crimes of sentencing capital punishment and heavy penalties on 11 August on the patriotic youths and students who set fire at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan and to the righteous churchmen who protected them. Regarding as antinational, impure forces and as violent left-leaning criminals the patriotic students, who, with enmity against the U.S. imperialist aggressors occupying South Korea with arms and forcing the South Korean people to suffer the destiny of colonial slaves, have set fire at these rascals' local aggressive agency and the conscientious religious figures, who protected them, the treacherous bunch has severly punished them. This is an intolerable, treacherous crime that could only be committed by traitors like Chon Tu-hwan.

On behalf of all Christians, the Central Committee of the Korean Christian Federation bitterly denounces the Chon Tu-hwan ring for illegally, outrageously and barbarously punishing the patriotic South Korean youths and students and religious figures. We regard this act as a desperate, treacherous one designed to thwart an anti-U.S. spirit of independence and to leave South Korean forever a colony of the U.S. imperialists.

The arson at the U.S. cultural center in Pusan is a natural outcome of the protracted rule by the U.S. imperialists, reflecting the unanimous desire of the South Korean people to free themselves from control by foreign forces and to lead an independent life.

Occupying South Korea, wearing the mask of a liberator and maintaining a most atrocious, fascist colonial rule for 37 years, the U.S. imperialists have imposed immeasurable hardships and disasters on the South Korean people. Proceeding from their dirty, wild desire, the U.S. imperialists have completely trampled underfoot all democratic things, cruelly violated democracy and civil rights and converted South Korea into a prison without barred windows, into a powder-reeking military exercise ground and into a living hell in the latter part of the 20th century. We can see everywhere in South Korea vestiges of blood shed by the people who have falled with rancor under the iron shackles of the U.S. imperialist aggressors' colonial rule. Kwangju -- a city of blood where scores of thousands of fellow countrymen were murdered -- is protesting today to all the world the bestial nature of the U.S. imperialist aggressors.

Every fact shows that the U.S. imperialists are our people's arch enemy with whom we cannot live under the same sky and are rascals without whose removal we cannot restore the sovereignty of the people and achieve democracy and the country's peaceful reunification.

Without fearing death, the South Korean patriotic youths and students set fire to the cursed local aggressive agency of the U.S. imperialists. Righteous and conscientious churchmen assisted them. This reflects the people's independent consciousness toward defending their dignity and leading a worthwhile life as an independent people.

As for Father Choe Ki-sik, our fellow Christian, his assistance to those involved in the arson at the U.S. cultural center constitutes an act he committed as a Korean Christian for justice and patriotism. In light of Christian and national ideals, this act too is natural and just.

Those who have a national conscience will praise and bless these passionate and patriotic youths and the churchmen who courageously and righteously assisted them. Nevertheless, traitor Chon Tu-hwan has imposed heavy penalties and capital punishment on them. He is a devil that is more vicious than Satan and a murderer who would make even Nero -- who became notorious for suppressing religion -- blush for shame.

Who should be tried by the people in South Korea? Needless to say, those who should be tried are the U.S. imperialist aggressors, who, crawling into another's country, have committed various crimes of aggression, plunder, murder and arson; and traitor Chon Tu-hwan, who has achieved his dirty aim by selling the country and the people.

Wielding bayonets, these criminals are trying to strengle justice and patriotism. No force in the world, hwoever, can thwart the will of thepeole struggling to defend their dignity and sovereignty. The present South Korean situation, in which there is a surging trend for opposition to the U.S. independence, antifascism and democratization, eloquently proves this.

The U.S. imperialists must not miscalculate that the South Korean people will tolerate others' rule and colonial slavery indefinitely. The U.S. imperialists should correctly view the situation, stop trying to maintain their colonial rule by encouraging such human trash as Chon Tu-hwan and immediately withdraw fron South Korea, taking along their nuclear weapons and aggressive forces.

The treacherous Chon Tu-hwan clique, which is running wild to prolong its remaining dirty life as colonial puppets by sacrificing its fellow countrymen at the altar, must step down from power without delay before it meets the same doom as that met by its predecessors.

There should be no difference in political views and religious beliefs in the struggle for the country and the people. Availing ourselves of this opportunity, we firmly believe that Christians, our fellow Christians, and all religious figures in South Korea will firmly unite with people of all walks of life, including workers, peasants, youths and students, under an anti-U.S. banner of independence and will surely win final victory in the sacred struggle to achieve independence, democracy and reunification.

VRPR SEES SOUTH KOREA'S AMNESTY AS FARCE

SK141143 (Clandestine) Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in Korean to South Korea 1000 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] Today on the 37th anniversary of the liberation, the Chon Tu-hwan ring announced that it has decided to release a total of 35 prisoners, including a total of 28 prisoners who have been detained on charges of violating the so-called martial law with remainder of sentences suspended, and to release on special parole a total of 1,043 ordinary criminal offenders and 208 juvenile offenders in the juvenile reformatory.

This is another farce aimed at winning the people's favor. This is well revealed by the fact that while excluding most democratic figures, including Mr Kim Tae-Chung, conscientious offenders and political prisoners who should be released the ring has included in this measure those whose prison terms have already expired or have been almost finished, or the good-for-nothing ordinary criminal offenders.

The so-called violators of martial law whom the Chon Tu-hwan ring has granted a great grace are conscientious people who rose up against the fascist dictatorship and for democratization of the society. They are innocent. Therefore, they had, no reason to be penalized with prison terms in the first place. This notwithstanding, the ring has granted a great grace for them after illegally punishing them on charges of violating evil fascist laws, thereby cheating and ridiculing public opinion at home and abroad.

Instead of staging a clumsy farce of cheating the people, the Chon Tu-hwan ring should unconditionally and immediately release all political prisoners, conscientious prisoners and all patriotic masses whom the ring has illegally arrested and imprisoned and should step down from power without delay.

CPRF STATEMENT CONDEMNS TORTURE IN SOUTH KOREA

SK132246 Pyongyang KCNA in English 2201 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 14 (KCNA) -- The Secretariat of the Committee for the Peaceful Reunification of the Fatherland on August 13 issued its Information No. 226 in connection with the atrocity of the Chon Tu-hwan thugs who gouged out eyeballs and kidneys from two prisoners under death sentence recently at the Seoul prison and sold them to rich men. The information brands this shocking bestiality as the worst barbarity in history putting into the shade the brutality of the cannibals and a vicious challenge to human cilization and human conscience. It further says:

They illegally arrest patriots and guiltless people and impose death penalties upon them and, as if this fascist outrage is not enough, commit such beastly crimes as gouging out eyeballs and kidneys from them. This is a thrice-cursed barbarity which can be committed only by Chon Tu-hwan the gangster, the rare murderer who thinks it a sport to slaughter fellow countrymen.

The Chon Tu-hwan group is the butcher of the nation and a pro-U.S. treacherous group which plunged Kwangju into a sea of blood and has turned the whole land of South Korea into a desolate graveyard of democracy at the instigation of the U.S. imperialists.

History and people will never tolerate human butchery of the fascist thugs and never let go scotfree those who committed indelible crimes to the nation and mankind.

NODONG SINMUN ARTICLE FLAYS JAPANESE WAR MOVIES

SK161540 Pyongyang KCNA in English 1516 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 16 (KCNA) -- NODONG SINMUN today notes that the Japanese reactionaries seek to inculcate national chauvinism, misanthropy and militarist aggressive idea in the minds of the Japanese people and lead the younger generation in particular again along the road of a reckless war through the show of many militarist films. In its article, headlined "Fervor of Militarism Spreading in Japanese Moviedom" the paper says:

The Japanese reactionaries are massively producing and distributing films beautifying the criminal wars of aggression of the Japanese imperialists and notorious militarists, fascists, and chieftains of aggression of the past days to extensively use them in propagandizing militarist idea.

Its typical example is the film "The Greater Empire of Japan." It praises up to the skies as a "pacifist" and a "patriot" Tojo Hideki, the fascist boss who was sentenced to death at the Far East military tribunal and executed after the Second World War as the top-class war criminal who provoked and commanded the Pacific war and describes the Japanese imperialists' bloody war of aggression that spelled immeasurable calamities and sufferings to the Korean, Chinese and Southeast Asian peoples as an operation for "the liberation of Asia."

It is an intolerable insult to the Asian people and a challenge to human conscience to distort as "a liberation war" the barbaric war of aggression of the Japanese imperialist robbers who massacred tens of millions of people and destroyed valuable cultural wealth and properties in Asian countries and describe as "a patriot" Tojo, the truculent chieftain of aggression who stained his hands with the blood of defenceless people.

For the Japanese reactionaries to praise the "exploits" of Tojo who lived a crime-woven life in fascism and war and favorably assess the Japanese imperialists' war of aggression is a dangerous act for hastening militarisation by calling the spectre of Tojo and leading the Japanese people again along the road of a war of aggression.

It must be noted that the massive distribution of militarist war films in Japan is timed to coincide with the malrevision of textbooks.

The distorted history in textbooks for cramming the militarist aggressive ideas into the heads of the youth and children are chosen as the themes of the films. This indicates that the Japanese reactionary ruling circles take much pains to incite the fervor of militarism in a premeditated way among the people through school education and films.

Noting that "Hill 203," "The Wind Rages," "Disturbance" and other films embellish the war of aggression provoked by the Japanese imperialists in the past to establish their control over Korea and northeast China, the paper continues: In "The Wind Rages" the criminal aggressive activity of Hirobumi Ito, the chieftain of the Japanese imperialists' Korean aggression, in paving the way for their colonial domination over Korea is extolled as a great feat and he is praised as the top "patriot" of Japan.

In the film "Disturbance," the road of fascistisation and continental aggression covered by the Japanese imperialists is described as a way for delivering the people's life from distress and saving the country from a crisis and the members of the "border garrison" who ran about like headless chickens in an attempt to crush the operation of the Korean People's Revolutionary Army as "patriots."

The hurricane of militarisation sweeping Japan is a dangerous development. It is a foolish act going against the current of the time for the Japanese reactionaries to hasten militarisation and war preparations. Those who are trying to lead Japan again along the road of aggression and war will be unable to escape the same doom as Tojo who fell on that very road. This will never bring anything good to Japan herself.

[Text] Pyongyang, August 17 (KCNA) -- A Sariwon city meeting commemorating the 38th anniversary of the victory in the social-national liberation revolution against imperialism and fascism in Romania was held on August 16.

Speaking first at the meeting, Yi Chol-sun, vice-chairman of the Sariwon City, North Hwanghae Province, People's Committee, said that the victory won by the patriotic people of Romania in the revolution for social-national liberation against imperialism and fascism was an epochal event which opened up a broad avenue for the Romanian people to build a new life.

Today the Romanian people under the leadership of the Romanian Communist Party headed by respected Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu have achieved big successes in the struggle for implementing the decisions of the 12th congress of the party and building a multilaterally developed socialist society, he said, and continued: We highly appraise all the successes achieved by the fraternal Romanian people in the revolution and construction and sincerely wish them great success in the future, too.

He said that the meetings and talks between Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, general secretary of the Romanian Communist Party and president of the Romanian Socialist Republic, and Comrade Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Workers Party of Korea and president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, marked a decisive occasion in continuously deepening the relations of fraternal friendship and cooperation and militant solidarity between our two parties, two countries and two peoples.

Romania, he noted, fully supports the proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Korea which was put forward by Comrade Kim Il-song, president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, to achieve the independent and peaceful reunification of the country.

The ambassador declared: The Romanian people watch with keen interest great successes achieved by the Korean working people in the drive for creating the "speed of the 80's" and in the endeavours for carrying out the second seven-year national economic plan ahead of schedule and sincerely wish them greater successes in the implementation of the decisions of the Sixth Congress of the Workers Party of Korea.

Attending the meeting were the functionaries concerned, along with workers, technicians, office workers and members of the three revolutions teams of the plant. The meeting began with a chorus of "The Song of Gen Kim Il-song."

At the meeting, Yi Chol, secretary of the KWP Committee of South Pyongan Province, conveyed the letter of thanks from the KWP Central Committee.

Discussions were held at the meeting. The speakers said that they extended the greatest honor and warmest gratitude toward the glorious party center who has sent a letter of thanks to them. They pointed out that they will attain this year's goal for electricity generation ahead of schedule by meticulously controling and managing generating facilities -- the precious assets of the country -- by carefully checking and repairing facilities at the right time, by guaranteeing the full operation of the facilities, by vigorously waging the mass technological innovation movement, by endlessly renewing the technological and economic indices and generating more electric power, while displaying the spirit of absoluteness and unconditionally toward the great leader's teachings and the party policy.

The meeting adopted a letter of pledge to the KWP Central Committee.

SK131523 Pyongyang KCNA in English 1509 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] Pyongyang, August 13 (KCNA) -- New residential quarters are taking shape at a rapid tempo in various parts of Pyongyang. Multistory flats for more than 10,000 families are under construction in the spacious Munsu-bol plain on the bank of the River Taedong. This district will form a self-contained unit of life with high-rise flats for more than 10,000 families, many public buildings, cultural welfare and public service establishments.

In the last one year or more since the start of the construction multistory dwelling houses for thousands of families have been completed and provided to people.

The construction of 41 18-story tower style flats is progressing apace in different places on the bank of the Potong River. Each flat of the new apartment houses has a floor space of 77-110 square metres. It has rooms papered with colourfully patterned vinyl sheet, a dining room, kitchen, warehouse, bathroom and flush toilet and will be provided with T.V. set, modern furniture and a whole kitchen unit.

In the last ten years or more, the capital has completely renewed its face as a result of the construction of more than 20 modern streets including the Chollima, Nakwon, Pipa, Kyonghung and Hasin Streets. In particular, the Changgwang Street, lined with tall flats up to 30 stories with a total floor space of 400,000 square metres, was built in 1980 to be a model in the construction of residential quarters. Along with the continued construction of modern residential quarters in different parts of the capital, the housing conditions of citizens are being steadily improved.

CHON PLEDGES SAFE PASSAGE FOR NORTH KOREANS

SK170049 Seoul THE KOREA HERALD in English 17 Aug 82 p 5

[Text] My sixty million fellow countrymen at home and abroad: It is of special significance for us to greet this 37th Liberation Day at a time when the nation is vigorously emerging on the world scene and when both our sense of national pride and resolve to uphold it are stronger than ever before.

Furthermore, today marks the 34th anniversary of the launching of a democratic government which, for the first time in history, involved all citizens in the shaping of national policies. From the bottom of my heart, I wish to celebrate this day with all my fellow countrymen, the masters of this country.

On this fitting occasion, I exalt our patriotic ancestors who nobly sacrified for the cause of independence and all those who have dedicated themselves to the development of a democratic Korea.

Fellow citizens, the significance of this day lies in the potent lesson that tremendous pain results from the loss of sovereignty. The time since liberation is now longer than the 36 years of Japanese colonial rule. And yet, we continue to celebrate this day with profound emotion because the ordeal of subjugation has left such deep scars on our psyche. Punctuated by blood and tears, anguished sorrow and tortured laments, the pain cannot possibly be understood by anyone who has not actually experienced such an ordeal.

Many of our ancestors were shot or bayoneted to death by the Japanese imperialists. Totally deprived of freedom and property, our predecessors, many of whom are now quite elderly, suffered with seething anger the long years of poverty and oppression. We still vividly remember how we were deprived even of the last symbols of national identity and pride -- our own names and language.

The legacies of those painful days are still evident. Many of our fellow countrymen left the homeland to wander abroad to escape poverty and oppression. Many others were forcibly mobilized for hard labor in alien lands. Even today many of those compatriots weep with homesickness in such places as Manchuria, Siberia and Sakhalin. Tens of thousands of Korean residents in Japan are now leading a difficult life in the face of all kinds of discrimination. This is yet another sad legacy of the colonial period.

But the most tragic legacy is the current South-North confrontation between the two halves of the divided Korean Peninsula. It is superfluous to say that our homeland would never have been partitioned if it had not beeo forcibly occupied by the Japanese imperialists. And there would not have been any cause for a fratricidal war and the consequent wearisome confrontation that is wasting our energies even at this very moment.

The pain of subjugation not only marked the years of bondage but persisted until the present, with increased range and intensity. Accordingly, on Liberation Day, it behooves us all to once again contemplate the havoc that loss of independence can wreak and to determine to prevent any recurrence of such a tragedy. While strongly opposing any form of expansionism or colonialism whereby a nation seeks to subjugate another, we must further intensify our preparedness so as not to fall prey to these evils. We cannot ward off aggression and oppression merely by hating them. The Japanese imperialists were able to invade our land not because we did not oppose such aggression but because we were powerless to check it. If national might is strong enough, nobody will dare attempt to rape us, even if we do not voice any opposition.

History clearly shows how futile it can be for a weak nation to cry for peace and dignified independence. We have learned this through trying experience. The great lesson of Liberation Day should be that if we are resentful and chagrined at the past, we should be all the more intensely determined to build up national strength. It goes without saying that genuine national unity is indispensable to a continuous enhancing of national strength. Division and conflict, partisan strife and extreme confrontation, preoccupation with private interests and political intrigues do not sustain the full realization of national potential; rather, each of these only erodes national strength. We thus owe it to ourselves to humbly reflect upon the past. Looking back on the times preceding Japanese aggression, we must frankly ask ourselves whether or not we were genuinely united during that crucial period. We cannot but come to the acute realization that internal divisions hampered the mobilization of full national strength and were the major cause of our suffering from foreign invasions and harassment.

Today, we greet the anniversary of liberation at a time when the importance of national strength is as keenly felt as ever before. We must turn this Liberation Day into a great moment of redoubled efforts to eradicate the inimical habits that have persisted through history and forge true national unity and harmony.

Fellow citizens, I believe that the historic meaning of Aug. 15 is to be found in the fact that this particular day saw two liberations: The liberation from oppression by an alien people and the liberation from hereditary monarchy. The first liberation was achieved on this day in 1945 when the Japanese imperialists withdrew from our land. On this day in 1948, we achieved the second liberation with the founding of a republican government.

I believe it is of great historic significance that in restoring national dignity following liberation, we opted for a new political system, instead of reviving the old one. In other words, Aug. 15 is the day when our national identity was revived and also when Koreans were reborn as democrats to become the masters of the country. I am convinced that this rebirth was a very necessary and valuable turning point in our pursuit of happiness and prosperity as a modern people.

In spite of a lack of experience in democracy, we boldly chose new democratic values and institutions, even though there was considerable pressure to opt for a different political system. I think this decision reflects great national wisdom. Although there have been some vicissitudes in our constitutional history, it is beyond question in today's light that that decision was a truly sagacious one. True, many citizens have complained that democracy has not been satisfactorily rooted into Korean soil. But we can say with confidence however that our determination to make democracy work has steadily intensified and that we have become increasingly mature politically. I do not think there is a single citizen who is not convinced that democracy is absolutely superior to hereditary monarchy. There is no doubt that every citizen ardently wishes for all 60 million Koreans to enjoy this superior political system.

Unfortunately, however, this wish has yet to be fulfilled. Our brethren in the other half of the country have not yet experienced the joy of democracy. They have only known the monarchy that lasted until the end of the Yi dynasty, the 36 years of Japanese rule and the 37 years of hereditary nepotism resembling a dynasty. They are the only people on earth that have been continuously ruled by the same person for over 30 years. They live in a world totally insulated against the tide of democracy. This sad state of affairs affairs must be ended as quickly as possible, if only to enhance national pride. The best way to end it, of course, would be through democratic unification.

It was with the aim of establishing the image of a people creatively contributing to world progress that I proposed last year an exchange of visits and summit talks between the top leaders of South and North Korea, and that in January I announced a formula for national reconciliation leading to democratic unification.

Fellow citizens, as you know well, the liberation on Aug. 15, 1945 enabled us to reaffirm our spirit of independence. I am convinced that this spirit of independence must serve as the basic principle by which to solve the unification question. This basic spirit would be gravely violated if we were to repeat the tragedy of fratricide or the futile confrontation any longer. Firmly upholding the principle of self-determination of peoples, I belive that the time has come when we must demonstrate to the whole world that we are capable of solving by ourselves the question of unification -- the most cherished goal of all Koreans.

To that end, it is imperative that representatives of the South and the North sit down at a conference table to frankly and open-mindedly discuss the future. Without dialogue no issue can be resolved peacefully. If both sides keep their doors closed as they do now and avoid contact with each other, national reconciliation and unification will be delayed that much longer.

What is required both by history and our own desires is to throw the door wide open to contact and dialogue. To resolutely accomplish this end, I want to emphasize again the necessity for a summit, at the earliest possible date, between the top leaders of the South and the North. Once more I urge Pyongyang to resond affirmatively to this proposal. I am convinced, furthermore, that to facilitate the momentous task of carrying on sincere dialogue aimed at unification, we must also strive in concrete ways to promote national reconciliation. At the very least, this should involve an end to the present abnormal relations between the South and the North and the opening of the two societies to each other.

In that spirit, I take this occasion to announce that we shall be the first to open our doors to fellow countrymen living in any part of the communist world, including North Korea. I make it clear that any compatriot can freely and safely travel to and from the Republic of Korea and that the Republic of Korea will absolutely guarantee such free travel.

It is my conviction that only when anyone of Korean extraction can freely travel to and from his homeland, regardless of the ideology or political system he may subscribe to or where he may reside, can we effectively promote fraternal love and speed national reconciliation. This will no doubt ultimately become the driving force of national unification.

Fellow citizens, the 37th Liberation day has dawned. The time since liberation more than matches the 36 years of Japanese occupation. But with the scars of alien subjugation not yet completely healed, we must realize that we have not yet achieved full liberation from the legacies of that nightmare. Accordingly, we must establish a clear and precise perspective of national history and then strive in concert to complete our liberation by building up national strength and unifying our homeland. When this goal has been achieved, no nation will think of invading the Korean Peninsula and no people will dare look down on us. Rather, on the strength of the greatness and the limitless inner resources of our people, coupled with the geopolitical importance of the peninsula that links the world's largest continent with the world's largest ocean, Korea will be able to rise in stature and win the envy and respect of all people. All this depends on our own efforts and nothing else. The only sure guarantee that we shall not again experience the kind of pain and humiliation to which we were subjected in the pre-liberation years is to build a stronger and more prosperous country than the one that once ruled us.

To that end, we must bestir ourselves to greater national unity and redouble our efforts to cultivate the national strength. I am confident that our long-term, historic endeavors to build a strong and prosperous Korea will surely succeed if we fully exert our willpower and wisdom to the task of reinforcing the newly awakened self-confidence gained during the 1970's with the recognition of our ability to modernize the homeland. I earnestly solicit the concerted efforts of the entire people.

CHON STATEMENT ON DEPARTURE FOR AFRICA, CANADA

["Text" of statement by President Chon Tu-hwan issued on departure for a tour of four African nations and Canada 16 August]

[Text] Fellow citizens: I am now embarking on a tour at the invitation of the heads of state of the four African nations of Kenya, Nigeria, Gabon and Senegal and of the governor-general of Canada. Following similar trips to the United States of America and Southeast Asia, this is my third summit tour since the inauguration of the Fifth Republic. Furthermore, since this is the first African tour by a Korean president, it is expected to contribute significantly to internationalizing Korea's capabilities.

Over the past two years, everyone has worked hard together to restore stability and prepare for the future, enabling us to advance proudly onto the world stage. I wish to pay highest tribute to every citizen for quietly devoting heart and energy to national development in the face of numerous domestic and international obstacles.

Fellow Koreans, we are now living in a constantly shrinking world with nations becoming more interdependent as a result of increasingly significant exchanges. On the one hand, the prospects for universal coexistence and prosperity are enhanced by this, while on the other international disputes and conflicts are becoming more far reaching, disturbing and destructive. Accordingly it behooves all countries and peoples to come to grips with the urgent mission of promoting understanding, friendship and cooperation to jointly shape an eternal future as one big family in the global village. It is my belief that Asian and African nations have an especially crucial role to play in this mission.

Asian and African nations not only share similar historic experiences but have much in common in immediate tasks and long-term ideals. Of special note is the fact that most peoples in Asia and Africa suffer a legacy of foreign colonialism, perpetual poverty that was often considered an inescapable fate, and ceaseless internal division and strife. These three tribulations have not only been a major source of misfortune and tragedy but have also been an enormous impediment to progress. I am convinced that by getting rid of the old yoke and attaining the common ideals of freedom, peace and prosperity, nations in Africa and Asia will be able to shape a better future not only for themselves but the world as a whole. I further believe that the promotion of understanding and cooperation among nations with similar historic experiences and common goals is a most effective way to facilitate the realization of shared ideals.

In this spirit, I want to emphasize that we have a responsibility to forge a new era of Afro-Asian cooperation not only in our own interests but also that of the world at large. Throughout history the countries of Asia and Africa have hardly ever invaded or otherwise harmed each other. This historic fact is a common source of pride and offers a basis for solidarity that enables us to unhesitatingly work in concert to shape an era of Afro-Asian cooperation, free of mistrust.

Fellow countrymen, although Africa and Asia were once synonyms for bondage, poverty and chaos, I predict that the coming century will see the two continents move onto the center stage of world affairs to make major contributions to the freedom, peace and prosperity of all mankind. Although Asians and Africans once stagnated in the backwaters, we are entering an age in which we will play active roles in shaping the course of world history. It is my earnest hope that my African tour will make a substantial contribution to the unfolding of such a new age.

I do not have the slightest doubt that the five countries will prove to be fine partners in our endeavors to realize our ideals and also those of all manking. The African nations, especially, are important forces in the Third World and other international arenas. They are strong friends who occupy leading position in the African region.

Through my visit, I will do my best to cement the friendly and cooperative relations that have existed, furhter solidifying the international standing of Korea, especially in Africa. Also, I will convey our appreciation and gratitude for their active support in recent years for the cause of the republic, including our policy for peaceful unification. I am leaving for those countries with high hopes that the international environment for peaceful unification will be steadily improved by deepening a sense of political and moral community.

The four African countries are endowed by nature with limitless potential. If this is linked with the knowledge and expertise that we have gained through economic development in the past decades, it is beyond question that we would complement each other well.

Canada, to be visited on the last leg of this tour, is a long-time ally who has not only fought side by side with us to throw back communist aggression but has also been building very close ties with Korea through political, cultural, economic and other pursuits. Moreover, I am conficent that being a Pacific-basin nation just like Korea, Canada will be a valuable and powerful partner in forging a great Pacific era. It is anticipated that the Canadian leaders and I will be able not only to broaden and deepen the existing relations between our two countries but also to carry out a meaningful dialogue on ways to advance the prosperity of the Pacific basin.

In the countries I am going to visit, especially Canada, there are many Koreans and citizens of Korean extraction working far away from their native land. I wish to convey to them the wholehearted encouragement and sympathy of all of you. Furthermore, this is a most appropriate occasion to renew the national determination to advance Korea onto the world stage through concerted efforts at home and abroad.

Lastly, it is my earnest hope that this tour will convince the world that Korea is determined, in the interest of peace and prosperity, to cultivate ties with all countries, transcending differences in ideology and institutions. Reaffirming this resolution, I am confident that the 1988 Seoul Olympics will be a festival of all mankind, a medley of friendship and goodwill. I hope that this trip will lay the foundation for such a festival.

Fellow countrymen, as your representative, I am now leaving on a 15-day trip strongly resolved to enhance the prestige of the country throughout the five oceans and six continents. I promise to do my best to attain the desired results and hope that all of you will continue to support and encourage me. I am grateful to you for this enthusiastic send-off and pray for your happiness and that of your families.

DJP URGES ACTION ON JAPANESE TEXTBOOK ISSUE

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 17 (YONHAP) -- South Korea's ruling Democratic Justice Party (DJP), prompted by the textbook dispute, decided Tuesday to set up a special body aimed at "boosting national spirit and strength."

DJP spokesman Kim Yong-tae said the ruling party also urged the government to take "resolute steps" against the Japanese Government which has not yet shown a positive response to Korea's call for correcting distorted accounts in Japanese textbooks of past Korean-Japanese relations. He explained that the projected special body reflects President Chon Tu-hwan's Aug. 15 call for establishing a clear and precise perspective of national history and building up of national strength.

Noting that Japan has not shown a sincere response on the issue for two weeks since Korea conveyed a protest memorandum to Japan, Kim reiterated that the government should take a resolute step against the "haughty" Japanese Government.

FIRMS SHIFTING IMPORTS FROM JAPAN TO U.S., EC

SK160130 Seoul YONHAP in English 0106 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 16 (YONHAP) -- South Korea's major enterprises are shifting import sources from Japan to the United States and Europe in a bid to reduce the country's heavy economic dependence on Japan, business sources here said Monday. Korea's trade deficit with Japan in 1982 amounted to more than 2.3 billion U.S. dollars as of the end of June, 69.4 percent of the total trade deficit, according to the sources.

Domestic enterprises have been intensifying their market survey and sales activities in the American and European regions. In addition, they will dispatch large purchasing missions to North America in October and increase imports from European countries through the activities of bilateral economic cooperation committees, based on results from joint government-private trade missions sent to the European Community in June.

Included among the industries in which domestic enterprises are trying to increase imports are auto parts, shipbuilding technology, construction engineering, petrochemical products, textile technology, machinery, land transportation technology and power generating equipment.

NUCLEAR POWERPLANT CONSTRUCTION COMPLETED

[Text] Wolsong, Korea, Aug 14 (YONHAP) -- South Korea Saturday completed the construction of nuclear powerplant No. 3 in Wolsong on the southeast coast, and loaded it with atomic fuel in a ceremony attended by Song Nak-chong, president of the Korea Electric Power Corp (KEPCO) and other dignitaries.

The Wolsong atomic powerplant, the first to use a Candu-pressurized heavy water reactor (PHWR) in the country, will have a rated generating capacity of 678,700 kilowatts when begins full commercial operations in December. The powerplant construction was started by Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. (AECL) in January 1976 with foreign capital of 595.32 million U.S. dollars and domestic capital of 305.5 billion won (about 413 million dollars). The fuel loaded Saturday consisted of 4,400 bundles of natural uranium dioxide and 160 bundles of depleted uranium U-235 0.52 percent, all provided by the AECL. One bundle contains 37 nuclear fuel elements. In December, after the critical testing in November, the share of atomic energy in the nation's gross electric generation will be 11.8 percent, or 1,265,700 kilowatts.

The country's nuclear powerplant No. 1 in Kori on the southeast coast is already in operation. The No. 2 plant in Kori is now under construction by Westinghouse Company of the United States with dedication due in late 1983. The No. 2 plant will have a generating capacity of 650,000 kilowatts. The Kori powerplants use pressurized water reactors (PWR) and enriched uranium fuel.

The No. 3 plant will save the country five million dollars worth of oil and oil derivatives per annum and provide four billion kWh of electricity on an annual basis.

Tsedenbal Message

OW170235 Ulaanbaatar MONTSAME in English 1750 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Message, dated 16 August, from Yumjaagiyn Tsedenbal, chairman of the Presidium of the Great People's Hural of the MPR to the sixth general conference of the Asian Buddhists Conference for Peace held in Ulaanbaatar]

[Text] Ulaanbaatar, August 16 (MONTSAME) -- On behalf of the people and the Government of the Mongolian People's Republic, and on my own behalf, I warmly welcome the participants in the sixth general conference of the Asian Buddhists Conference for Peace and wish successes for its work.

In the Asian Buddhists Conference for Peace we see the sincere devotion and strivings of the Buddhists in the Asian countries to promote the cause of peace and security and good-neighbourly relations amongst peoples and states of the continent in conformity with principles of the Pancasila.

It gives me a pleasure to note that the movement of the Buddhists for peace is gaining growing recognition and support among the public in the Asian countries and that its contacts and ties of close collaboration with other peace-loving organizations and movements that actively work for salvation of mankind from the impending threat of a thermo-nuclear catastrophe are expanding.

Your conference is being held at a time when the situation in Asia and the world over has sharply aggravated due to the escalating militarist and aggressive course of the imperialist and hegemonist circles that seek to perpetuate in the international relations the policy and practices of brute force, blackmail and diktat.

Today, men and women of diverse views and beliefs everywhere come to realize ever more the grave consequence of the imperialist policy of military confrontation and the unprecedented build-up of nuclear arsenals and other sophisticated means of mass annihilation, the existing stocks of which are sufficient enough to wipe out life itself from the face of our planet.

The Mongolian People's Republic, along with the Soviet Union and other countries of the socialist community, has always been advocating the policy of consolidating the foundations of peace and good-neighbourly relations among nations. It's widely known that the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries put forward a whole set of constructive proposals on key aspects of the contemporary international life.

It's understandable that the Government of the M.P.R. pays a particular attention to preserving peace and security of the Asian continent, where extremly dangerous seats of tension continue to exist as a result of the policy of the imperialist circles and their accomplices. The proposal of our government to jointly elaborate and sign a convention on mutual non-aggression, non-use of force in relations between the states of Asia and the Pacific is directed at promoting and consolidating the atmosphere of mutual trust and cooperation among the states of the region. And we are pleased to note that this proposal has found a positive response among a broad strata of public in the Asian countries.

It's remarkable that peoples around the world, alarmed with the growing danger of thermo-nuclear catastrophe, are joining together in anti-war mass movements and launching broad-scale campaigns for curbing the arms race and promoting the disarmament, in which representatives of the Buddhists peace movement are also taking an active part.

I express the confidence that the A.B.C.P. sixth general conference will mark a new important momentum in further mobilization of efforts of Buddhist communities and public at large in defence of the sacred right of peoples to a peaceful life, which is the earnest of their happiness, welfare and prosperity.

[Signed] Y. Tsedenbal, chairman, the Presidium of the Great People's Hural, Mongolian People's Republic

[Text] New Delhi, Aug. 15 (AFP) -- Seventeen people, including ten members of the outlawed 'National Socialist Council of Nagaland (NSCN)' and seven Burmese security force personnel were killed in an encounter in northern Burma on Thursday, the UNI News Agency reported today.

The encounter followed an armed attack on a steamer anchored on the Chindwin River for unloading rations, arms and ammunitions for the Burmese security forces stationed in northern Burma along the Indo-Burmese border, UNI said quoting authoritative reports from across the border.

The Burmese security forces captured 'Colonel' Chocho of the NSCN in the encounter, the agency reported. One regiment of Burmese security force was detailed to apprehend the NSCN members living underground in northern Burma, it added.

The NSCN militants have been fighting a virtual war with the Indian and Burmese armies since 1956. They want an independent Naga state. There are about 777,000 Nagas scattered in the jungle on both sides of the Indo-Burmese border.

Heng Samrin Report

BK161503 Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian 1300 GMT 15 Aug 82

["Excerpts" of PRK Council of State Chairman Heng Samrin's report to the third session of the First National Assembly on 15 August]

[Text] [Begin recording] In this third session, the Council of State will submit to the National Assembly for examination and endorsement two other bills: The bill on the protection of state property and the bill on procedures to examine and solve people's complaints and accusations. The first bill has been drafted and is aimed at raising the sense of responsibility of cadres, personnel and workers in order to protect state property against sabotage by the enemy and against all phenomena of idleness and abuse of authority displayed by cadres, personnel and workers in the misuse of state property. The second bill is aimed at building and strengthening the correct relationship between the party, state, and state organizations and the people to protect state and collective interests and the interests of each citizen. [end recording]

Dealing with the foreign affairs activities of the Council of State, Comrade Heng Samrin stressed:

[Begin recording] The Council of State has listened to the report of the representative of the Council of Ministers on the PRK's foreign affairs activities, in particular on the sixth conference of the three Indochinese foreign ministers in Ho Chi Minh City. At this conference, the foreign ministers of the three Indochinese countries took many initiatives aimed at strengthening the struggle against the policy of aggression and intervention pursued by the Beijing expansionist-hegemonists in collusion with the U.S. imperialists, the reactionary ruling circles of the ASEAN countries and their lackeys against the Kampuchean revolution and the three Indochinese countries and against the trend toward peace and stability in Southeast Asia. The conference brought to new heights the foreign policy of peace, friendship and cooperation of the three Indochinese countries. The Council of State unanimously endorses the abovementioned activities of the Council of Ministers.

Our country and the SRV signed an agreement on 7 July 1982 concerning the two countries' historical waters. The Council of State examined and signed the decree delimiting the maritime zones and continental shelf of the PRK. Both the agreement and the decree are very significant for the defense of our territory, the economic development of each country and the strengthening of the great friendship between the two fraternal countries of Kampuchea and Vietnam.

The Council of State exchanged documents putting into effect a treaty of friendship between our country and the Mongolian People's Republic.

The comrade vice chairman of the Council of State and I have received and worked with many visiting international delegations. Among the foreign guests were the vice chairman of the SRV Council of Ministers, the foreign ministers of Hungary and the Congo, many high-ranking military and economic delegations from socialist countries, and front and cultural delegations and magazine and television correspondents from fraternal and friendly socialist countries the world over.

These activities of the Council of State have contributed to strengthening the strategic alliance among the three Indochinese countries and to expanding friendship with fraternal socialist countries and other friendly countries in search of international support and assistance to the revolutionary cause of our people." RADIO HAILS THIRD NATIONAL ASSEMBLY SESSION

[Station editorial: "The Kampuchean People Warmly Acclaim the Third Session of the First National Assembly"]

[Text] The PRK National Assembly opened its third ordinary session on 15 August 1982. It will examine the activities of various state institution in implementing the resolutions of the Second National Assembly session in order to assess the outcome of and draw experience from these activities so that we can strengthen and accelerate our drive toward total success. The National Assembly will also set targets for all tasks to be carried out by the end of 1982.

All Kampuchean people and the entire army warmly acclaim this significant political event because they fully understand that the National Assembly, elected on 1 May 1981 by 97.83 percent of the Kampuchean population in a democratic manner -- something unprecedented in Kampuchean history -- is the supreme organ of the people's state power. All members of the National Assembly are outstanding representatives elected by the people and from among the people of all strata -- workers, peasants, intellectuals, army combatants, monks and minority nationals. Their duty is to be responsible to the people and contribute to defending our independence, people's freedom and revolutionary achievements. Since all its activities must focus on improving the people's living conditions, the National Assembly represents the will and interests of the people and the revolution.

The Kampuchean people will always remember the great achievements of the National Assembly, which began with its first session on 24 June 1981 when it adopted a genuinely democratic constitution. Pursuant to this supreme law, the National Assembly elected various institutions, such as the Council of State and the Council of Ministers, to be responsible for different assignments in the service of the fatherland.

At its second session on 5 February 1982, the National Assembly approved three laws on the organization and activities of the National Assembly, the Council of State and the Council of Ministers and on the jurisdiction and the courts. Moreover, the National Assembly set up targets for discussion by the third session on the further restoration of the national economy, the development of culture, the rehabilitation of agricultural production and the expansion of goods circulation. All of this is for the purpose of stabilizing the people's living conditions, actively serving the maintenance of security and national defense and ensuring the successful completion of all tasks. The National Assembly assigned the Council of Ministers to draft the 1982 budget and advised all sectors to strive to implement the important economic and cultural plans 1982 effectively.

During the period between the second and third sessions, the Kampuchean people struggled actively in accordance with the plans set by the National Assembly and scored new victories in military, economic and diplomatic domains.

In the last dry season, our KPRAF, in cooperation with the fraternal Vietnamese Army, launched operations to mop up the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan-Son Sann-Sihanouk elements, plunging them into an impasse, inflicting heavy losses on them and forcing them to flee and take refuge on Thai soil. Moreover, a part of the fraternal Vietnamese Armed Forces was withdrawn in July. Yet despite this withdrawal, the situation in Kampuchea remains as secure as before. This is proof of the development of our armed forces, both in size and quality.

In the economic sector, the peasants launched an intensive campaign to grow dry-season rice, during which they greatly expanded the amount of land cultivated the previous year. The sale of rice to the state overfulfilled plans by more than 50 percent. At the same time, fishing, forestry and rubber exploitation were rehabilitated and achieved greater success than in 1981.

The sectors of culture, education, health service and social welfare have also made steady steps toward fulfilling the sacred need to improve the living conditions and stabilize the moral and political standards of the people.

In the diplomatic field, the Kampuchean people have unceasingly sought to strengthen the solidarity and cooperation among the three Indochinese peoples. Recently, the sixth conference of the foreign ministers of Kampuchea, Vietnam and Laos was hailed by national and international public opinion, which vigorously supported our goodwill proposal to establish a safety zone along the Kampuchean-Thai border. This initiative was regarded by progressive world opinion as a path leading to good relationships among the ASEAN and Indochinese countries in the interest of peace and stability in Southeast Asia.

These considerable gains will be analyzed and assessed by all National Assembly members from all over the country in order to strengthen and develop the advance of the people in their national defense and reconstruction duties. All Kampuchean people are closely following the progress of the National Assembly session and are firmly confident that the third session of the First National Assembly will enact new resolutions to serve as a beacon leading the way for the people, army and authorities at all levels to implement the policy of the KPRP in the cause of defending and building our fatherland so that it will forever remain independent, peaceful, free and glorious.

All Kampuchean people wish the members of the National Assembly the best of health and success in carrying out every mission entrusted to them by the party and people. May the session be crowned with brilliant success.

HENG SAMRIN MEETS WITH SOVIET AMBASSADOR

BK160957 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0415 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 16 Aug (SPK) -- Heng Samrin, general secretary of the KPRP Central Committee and chairman of the Council of State, received the Soviet ambassador to Kampuchea, O.V. Bostorin, in Phnom Penh on Saturday, 14 August.

Chairman Heng Samrin denounced the formation of the so-called tripartite Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea at the instigation of the Chinese expansionists acting in collusion with U.S. imperialism and the ASEAN countries. It is only a smokescreen to cover up the corpse of the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan regime and a trick to fool public opinion and prolong the presence of the genocidal regime at the United Nations. However, Heng Samrin asserted, the situation in Kampuchea is irreversible.

Heng Samrin voiced the profound gratitude of the Kampuchean party, government and people to the party, government and people of the Soviet Union for their material and moral aid to the Kampuchean people and expressed the hope that the multifaceted cooperation between Kampuchea and the USSR will become even stronger in serving the interests of the two nations and peoples.

O.V. Bostorin said that the party, government and people of the Soviet Union are doing their best to strengthen and expand the bonds of friendship and cooperation uniting the USSR and Kampuchea in conformity with the treaty of friendship and cooperation between the two countries.

Chan Ven, secretary general of the Council of State, attended the meeting.

RADIO SCORES ASEAN AS 'BROKERS' OF PRC POLICY

BK140357 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0408 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Commentary: "The Brokers of Beijing"]

[Text] Phnom Penh, 13 Aug (SPK) -- The ASEAN countries have just confirmed their role as the brokers of Chinese policy regarding Kampuchea.

According to Western sources, at the end of an extraordinary meeting held in Bangkok, the ASEAN foreign ministers called on the international community to support the alliance of Kampuchean traitors and assassins headed by Sihanouk, the core of which is made up of the wretchedly infamous Pol Pot hangmen. Do the ASEAN countries realize the risk they are taking by obstinately persisting in this policy blessed by the Chinese expansionists and U.S. imperialists? After 3 years of fruitless betting on the Pol Pot gang to try to reverse the current of the Kampuchean situation, Beijing has produced the Sihanouk trump from under its sleeve. And believing that the occasion was favorable, the ASEAN countries took advantage of it to accelerate the establishment of a coalition, hoping that it would be to their benefit. But they could only make a cat's paw out of it. "Democratic Kampuchea" remains Pol Pot in essence despite Sihanouk and Son Sann, who are placed in front as a smokescreen to cover up the pool of blood shed by 3 million Kampucheans in the hellhole created by Pol Pot, Ieng Sary and Khieu Samphan.

International public opinion has widely commented on that. Even in Thailand and other ASEAN countries, some circles have been aware of this masquerade, and have cautioned their governments against this interference in the internal affairs of the Kampuchean people and against a policy which benefits only Beijing's hegemonist ambitions in the region. Thai students have also shown their concern on this dangerous policy of Prem Tinsulanon.

Far from taking notice, ASEAN still attempts to stake its last farthing. The statement issued by the ASEAN ministers of foreign affairs and the measures they have taken in an attempt to prolong the presence of the Pol Pot hangmen in the United Nations and even restore their seat in the Nonaligned Movement reflect stunning political shortsighteness! Do they really ignore that the traitors-assassins alliance headed by Sihanouk, a Beijing man, is only a point to allow the Chinese expansionists, U.S. imperialists and other reactionaries to set foot in the region? If they do not, do they want then to act, as a Thai newspaper put it, like that peasant who warms a cobra in his embrace? What do they hope to get back in return by counting on Sihanouk whose decorative role has no value whatsoever since the moment he openly got in touch with the assassins? The Kampuchean people spit at this traitor. This is a fact. Why don't the supporters of this megalomaniac playboy draw the lesson from his recent visit to the "Kampuchean refugee" camps in Thailand? During this visit, according to foreign journalists present, only a small number of people welcomed him, more by curiosity than by sympathy, to see "this unique personage who got fat under Pol Pot" while millions of his compatriots were merely bags of bones, were dying in labor camps or under the blows of pickaxes or living miserably in the "people's communes." Some "refugees" even scornfully remarked to a Western journalist that Sihanouk is none other than Pot Pot.

And ASEAN is working in the hope that this ignorminous personage, who is maintained by Beijing, would represent Kampuchea in the Nonaligned Movement and the United Nations!

The nonaligned countries in 1979 expressed their horror at the Pol Pot assassins by expelling them from their movement. It would be the same thing again during their forthcoming summit. The United Nations must also take care of its prestige by following this example, whether "Democratic Kampuchea" is represented by arch-criminal Khieu Samphan, Pol Potist Sihanouk or any other puppet on the payroll of Beijing and responsible for the genocide of the Kampuchean people.

The sole and only authentic representative of the Kampuchean people is the Government of the PRK. It is also the sole legal government born out of truly democratic elections and supported by the quasi-totality of the Kampucheans who have survived genocide. It is the only one which really exercises its authority over the whole of the territory, the force of which is growing with every passing day. To ignore this reality and act for the corpse-like "Democratic Kampuchea" is to serve the policy of Beijing and to sabotage peace and stability in Southeast Asia. ASEAN must stop being the broker, before becoming another victim, of Chinese expansionism!

SRV TROOPS ATTACK SON SANN CAMP NEAR BORDER

[Excerpt] Ta Phraya, Prachin Buri -- Seven women soldiers of a Khmer resistance force were killed and many others wounded when Vietnamese troops assaulted about 40 followers of resistance leader Son Sann near his jungle hide-out opposite this Thai-Kampuchean border town over the weekend.

The Khmer guerrillas were about 2 kms from their camp, situated near Sangae and Sanlor Shangan villages at the border district, when a platoon of Vietnamese troops opened fire with rocket-propelled grenades and sub-machineguns. They were picking materials to build houses in the jungle camp when the fighting erupted last Friday at about 9 am near Sanlor and Kalor villages. Fighters of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF) later rushed to rescue the shattered force and retaliated against the Vietnamese attackers.

After the Vietnamese troops pulled out from the area, seven bodies of Khmer women were all found slashed at the throats at the scene. [as published] The Vietnamese were believed to have killed them before they withdrew.

Meanwhile, military sources at the border said about 300 troopers of the Hanoi-backed Heng Samrin regime last week defected to a Sihanoukist force based at Baan Nong Chan opposite Aranyapathet District. The defectors reportedly said they decided to desert their units due to strict control imposed by the Vietnamese forces on them. The Heng Samrin force in Sisophon was disarmed following the clash between them and the Vietnamese forces early this month. The Vietnamese also imposed a dusk-to-dawn curfew on the town and put on around-the-clock guard to bar Khmer people from reaching international relief aids on the Thai-Kampuchean border, according to the defectors. The Vietnamese and the Heng Samrin forces were at odds over the ban for the Khmer people to receive relief aids at the border.

The Supreme Command earlier reported that fighting between Khmer resistance forces and the Vietnamese troops escalated along the border area opposite Sisaket Province on August 11.

TRADE DELEGATION'S TALKS IN LAOS REPORTED

BK170819 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 1300 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Radio Thailand's correspondent in Nong Khai Province reported that Commerce Minister Punmi Punnasi led a Thai trade delegation to visit Laos 11-13 August. The trade delegation's mission was to strengthen and expand bilateral trade between Thailand and the LPDR as well as to study certain related problems. The Lao delegation was led by Trade Minister Vanthong Sengmuang.

The two delegations agreed that trade between Thailand and Laos must be carried on in accordance with the Thai-Lao trade agreement dated 1 June 1982 and the Thai-Lao joint communiques signed by the two countries' prime ministers on 6 January 1979 and 4 April 1979.

Touching on border trade and commercial exchanges between the two countries' peoples, particularly at the provincial level, the Thai side has agreed to expedite the export and transportation of goods in transit from third countries to the LPDR while the Lao side will provide documents necessary for the transportation of goods in transit which had been stranded in Thailand before 1975. The Thai side has approved the transportation of the stranded goods to Laos provided that the Lao side assumes the responsibility if claims should later arise on ownership of the goods.

The Thai side has requested that the Lao authorities issue border-pass documents for authorized Thai traders.

The Lao side has agreed to consider this request and asked the Thai side to lift the ban on goods listed in the Thai Commerce Ministry's announcement No 16, particularly those essential for development of the country.

The Lao side proposed the reopening of the border passes at Chiang Khong-Houai Sai and Chong Mek-Phonthong for the expansion of border trade and the transportation of goods in transit to Laos. The Lao side was informed that the Chong Mek-Phonthong pass has been opened occasionally for delivery of goods. The Thai side has accepted the request to permanently reopen the two border passes.

The Thai commerce minister and his delegation also paid a courtesy call on Lao Deputy Prime Minister Sali Vongkhamsao and conveyed Prime Minister Gen Prem Tinsulanon's best regards to LPDR Prime Minister Kaysone Phomvihan.

BREAKAWAY CPT GROUP FORMS 'INDEPENDENT' MOVEMENT

[Text] A group of Communist Party of Thailand (CPT) members who control most of the upper part of the northeastern region have broken away from the CPT and set up a new independent movement to fight the government, a senior intelligence source said yesterday.

The source said the new group was called the National Forces Movement. He said the group consisted or "progressive" members of the CPT labelled "Young Turks," and former activists and students who joined the CPT after the Thammasat University bloodbath in 1976. These former activists and students were reported to have already left the CPT because of dissatisfaction over its policy.

The breakaway stemmed from the fact that the CPT's claimed general congress earlier this year adopted a resolution reaffirming that Maoist revolutionary theory was the correct way to struggle against the government. This caused dissatisfaction among CPT members in many parts of the country, the source said. Another reason was that Comrade Chit, leader of the insurgents in the northeast, was not elected a member of the CPT's Central Committee during the general congress.

The founders of this new movement, according to the source, were of the opinion that both China and Vietnam were not sincere about social revolution in Thailand. The source said the new group had turned down the offer by a leading communist in Udon Thani, Comrade Yut, to help them persuade communist insurgents in the north and northeast to side with Vietnam.

The source said the group would continue to enforce the so-called "three strategic zones" policy adopted by Vietnam which concentrate operations in the jungle, the lowlands and the town. The founders of the breakaway group are reportedly in the process of selecting a leader. According to the source, the headquarters of the National Forces Movement might be set up in a town, possibly Bangkok.

'ILLEGAL' MON IMMIGRANTS TO BE SENT BACK TO BURMA

[Text] About 6,000 ethnic Mons who illegally migrated into the country and have worked without permission for about 25 years on a plot of land owned by the army in Kanchanaburi will be sent across the border to Burma soon, a senior official said yesterday.

National Security Council (NSC) Secretary General Squadron Leader Prasong Sunsiri said Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon had switched on the greenlight to the proposal to evacuate the minority people. He said that the Mon people, who settled in Saiyok District in the province about 25 years ago, were hired to work on about 46,000 rai of farmland at Thung Kang Yang in the same district by a former commanding officer of the 93rd Division of the Kuomintang Army.

The employer, identified as Chaiyot Pinsukan, alias Phayap Pinsukan, illegally occupied the land in 1959 and later set up a company to export the produce from the farmland to Burma, the NSC chief said. He said that the Interior Ministry late last week informed Chaiyot to close down his business and hand over the farmland to a combined police and military force.

The government force was ordered to seize the land and control it on Tuesday, said Prasong, who added that the First Army Region could immediately make use of the farmland.

The NSC secretary general said officials had earlier allowed Chaiyot to occupy the land as he always claimed to be backed by some influential village headmen in the district.

He also said that the Mons had set up their own rule regardless of the authority of the province. "They have their own leaders and many Mons have been shuttling between the villages and the Burmese territory," he added. Prasong said that prompt action against the Mons was necessary, given the fact that they had violated the laws and could harm the relations between Thailand and Burma.

NSC took up the issue after First Army Region Commander Gen Athit Kamlang-ek had asked Prasong to solve the issue urgently on grounds that the First Army Region wanted to make use of the land. After having conducted a fact-finding mission on the spot, NSC called a meeting with representatives from related government agencies which ruled that the illegal immigrants must be sent across the border as soon as possible.

Meanwhile, Kanchanaburi Governor M.L. Phaksuk Kamphu said he was waiting an order from the Interior Ministry to take action against the people.

About 40-50 families of Mons first settled on the land, which was used as an airstrip by the Japanese forces during World War II. Former Lampang MP Wichai Lochaya and his followers occupied the land during 1947-1957 to hire Mons to grow opium on the land at low wages. Wichai was later at odds with some Mon leaders over the ownership of the land. The conflicts intensified when the two rival parties exercised violence against each other. Chaiyot, or Maj Gen To Lao later took control over the land and hired the minority people to work on the farmland.

RADIO SAYS PRC WANTS TO DESTROY PEACE IN REGION

BK161442 Hanoi International Service in English 1000 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Station commentary: "Beijing Does Not Want Peace and Stability in Southeast Asia"]

[Text] The goodwill proposal of the ministerial conference of the three Indochinese countries and, especially, the recent visit to three ASEAN countries and Burma by Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach have helped develop the trend of dialogue between the states of different political systems in Southeast Asia. Many influential figures in the ASEAN countries as well as progressive public opinion advocated the development of this trend because it does not only benefit peace and stability in Southeast Asia but also contributes to easing world tension.

Only the reactionary forces in the Beijing leadership oppose this trend of dialogue. They have tried to distort the Indochinese countries' proposal and Foreign Minster Nguyen Co Thach's recent Southeast Asian tour. They have resorted to a familiar trick of opposing ASEAN to the Indochinese countries. Actually, Beijing's reaction took no one by surprise because it never wants Southeast Asia to be turned into a zone of peace and security.

If the trend for dialogue develops and the Indochinese and ASEAN countries sit together to seek appropriate solutions to their outstanding regional problems, how can Beijing have the chance to fish in troubled waters? And how can it realize its plot of annexing one country after another in its expansionist ambition toward Southeast Asia?

Beijing, out of its attempt to cause tension and sabotage peace and stability in Southeast Asia, has been trying to oppose the three Indochinese countries. It ignores the Indochinese countries' proposal on the signing with China a bilateral or multilateral treaty of peaceful coexistence. It also eludes Vietnam's proposal on the resumption of the Vietnam-China talks which it has unilaterally suspended. Moreover, it has, in recent days, revived the defunct genocidal Pol Pot clique to pollute the international atmosphere and deceive public opinion so as to illegally maintain its seat at the United Nations.

However, its wicked plot has been exposed. The so-called Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea has been termed as a disguised Pol Pot government. The Sihanouk card used by Beijing to cover the blood-stained face of Pol Pot has also been unmasked. As well-known Australian journalist Wilfred Burchett put it, Sihanouk is a card devalued the moment it is played. Sihanouk allied himself with the worst enemy of the Kampuchean people and he neither has any power bases in Kampuchea nor political support and, most importantly, no place in the hearts and minds of the people.

French Foreign Minister Cheysson said during his visit to China that his government has never had any intention to assist the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. He also made known that no politicians in France can imagine a meeting or talk with the Pol Pot clique. Meanwhile, diversified activities have been held in Thailand, the United States and other countries demanding the ouster of the disguised Pol Pot clique from the United Nations.

While hailing the Indochinese countries' peace initiative and their extra good will aimed at turning Southeast Asia into a zone of peace and stability, world progressive public opinion comes out strongly against Beijing's hostile actions and its opposition to the Indochinese countries. Many sober-minded persons in the ruling circles of the ASEAN countries have gradually realized the fact, as Malaysian Foreign Minister Shafie said, ASEAN shared Vietman's view on the threat of subversion from China.

Stemming from the common interest, that is peace and stability in the region, the trend for dialogue between Indochinese and ASEAN countries is being consolidated in conformity with historical developments and the aspirations of the people in Southeast Asia and the rest of the world. The Beijing reactionaries will surely fail in their attempt to oppose this trend and cause tension and sabotage peace and stability in Southeast Asia in furtherance of their expansionist and hegemonistic ambitions.

TRUONG CHINH TOURS HO CHI MINH CITY INSTALLATIONS

BK140655 Hanoi Domestic Service in Vietnamese 1430 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] Comrade Truong Chinh, member of the VCP Central Committee Political Bureau and chairman of the Council of State, recently visited a number of production installations, public organs and precincts in Ho Chi Minh City.

Chairman Truong Chinh was accompanied by Comrade Phan Minh Tanh, member of the VCP Central Committee and deputy secretary of the city party committee, on a tour of the Mien Nam detergent corporation, the Cuu Long detergent factory, the Foreign Trade Office, the Bureau of Commerce, Tan Binh Precinct and the Ly Thuong Kiet cooperative.

At these public organs, factories and enterprises, various leading comrades of the localities and installations concerned briefed Chairman Truong Chinh on their respective units' situation and guided him on a tour of various factories and an exhibition of consumer and export goods.

Chairman Truong Chinh commended various public organs and enterprises for working in conformity with various party resolutions, with the support and policies of the government and with the specific conditions in the localities concerned, which enabled them to overcome difficulties and step up production. The chairman had a close look at and praised a number of good-quality and well-presented consumer and export goods, especially those made from locally available materials.

Chairman Truong Chinh showed concern for the livelihood of the working compatriots, the implementation of policies on wages and bonuses, and the activities of the many party, trade union, youth and women's organizations at the grassroots level which contribute to the stabilization and gradual improvement of the people's lives in the current difficult situation.

Chairman Truong Chinh urged various production units to develop a self-reliant spirit by seeking ways to exploit locally available materials for increased production. The chairman advised various industrial, artisan and handicraft production installations to remember the duty of serving production, the welfare of the people and export operations, especially serving agriculture; and to contribute to strengthening the worker-peasant alliance -- the backbone of the all-people solidarity bloc.

Chairman Truong Chinh said: All of our thinking and actions must be based on the principles of the socialist revolution. Simultaneously, we must flexibly manage to discover new and creative measures, forms and working methods suitable to the specific conditions in each locality. He emphasized: We must carry out our tasks in such a way as to suit the situation of the "who will defeat whom" struggle between socialism and capitalism and the struggle against the multifaceted war of destruction waged by the Beijing expansionists and hegemonists in collusion with the U.S. imperialists to impede our people's socialist revolution and socialist construction. All of our party, people and armed forces will certainly be victorious in these struggles. They must carry out the two strategic tasks put forward at the Fifth VCP Congress, namely, successfully building socialism and firmly defending the socialist Vietnamese fatherland. All our actions, tough or flexible, must be directed at this common goal. In order to examine certain guidelines, measures, policies and doctrines to see if they are right or wrong, we must check to see if they are truly suitable and useful to the above-mentioned two revolutionary struggles and to the implementation of the party's two strategic tasks.

The leading comrades, cadres and office and manual workers of various public organs and units welcomed Chairman Truong Chinh with great elation and pledged to scrupulously implement all the chairman's advice by struggling to step up production to fulfill the 1982 state plan, thus contributing to successfully building socialism and firmly defending the socialist Vietnamese fatherland.

[Text] A conference was held by the Hanoi Municipal VCP Committee from 11 to 14 August to study the fifth party congress resolutions, to formulate a program of revolutionary action for the party organization and people in the capital, and to launch a political drive to study and discuss the implementation of the fifth party congress resolutions in Hanoi. ILLEGAL EMIGRANTS SENTENCED IN BINH TRI THIEN

[Text] According to VNA, the people's court of Binh Tri Thien Province held a session recently to try (Le Cong Lien) and his accomplices for murder and theft of socialist assets in order to flee abroad.

At the beginning of 1981, (Lien) and some bad elements in the province organized clandestine trips and induced many people to flee abroad. However, they were arrested before they could carry out their scheme. After his release from a rehabilitation camp, (Lien) contacted (Bui Xuan The) and continued their plot. They tricked 14 more people into giving them money and gold to buy food, fuel and transport in order to make a second escape by sea. They were detected by the security forces as they were attempting to escape. Taking advantage of darkness, (Lien) and (The) escaped and fled to the jungle. (Lien) continued clandestine contacts with (Hoang Thuong), (Le Van Phiem) and (Tong Van Huong) and began a third time to organize trips for people to flee abroad. Once again, they stole some weapons, stole a motorboat from the Binh Duong fishing cooperative and killed (Bui Ngoc Hung), the boat guard. The local militia immediately coordinated with border defense outpost No 144 and promptly surrounded them. Because of darkness, only 9 of the ring's members were arrested. The ringleaders, (Lien), (The) and (Thuong), escaped again.

With the assistance of the people and the local administration, the security forces later arrested (Le Cong Lien), (Bui Xuan The) and their accomplices. Since their crimes are very serious, the people's court of Binh Tri Thien Province has sentenced (Le Cong Lien) to death. (Bui Xuan The) received 20 years in jail and the others were sentenced to prison terms of 1-4 years. They all are liable for the damages caused to Bui Ngoc Hung's family and to the Binh Duong cooperative.

SUHARTO PRESENTS INDEPENDENCE DAY ADDRESS

BK161544 Jakarta Domestic Service in Indonesian 0331 GMT 16 Aug 82

[President Suharto's state address before the 16 August plenary session of parliament to mark the 37th independence day -- live]

[Excerpt] Honorable brothers: Our security situation has been satisfactorily stable. We have safely passed through [word indistinct] and sensitive situations like the general election campaign period and election day. This was possible thanks to a vigilant and aware society which is not easily influenced by irresponsible movements and rumors and also thanks to the vigilance and alertness of the state instrument, the armed forces, which stood ready to maintain public security and order.

Meanwhile, we still have to give more serious attention to the elimination, once and for all, of all those responsible for the violent and brutal crimes which have taken place of late, such as the robbing and hijacking of buses and so on. I hope that all sections of the armed forces, particularly the police as the law enforcement agency, can overcome the disorders which have been a source of public restlessness.

Along with this, the development of the armed forces, designed to increase their ability to defend the sovereignty of the state and the security of the people and protect the country from threats from within and without, must continue to modernize their weapons systems and steps up their technical and combat skills.

Another step which must be taken in the context of stabilizing the development of defense and security is to develop our defense and security capability in the rural areas in accordance with the concept of people's total defense and security [hankhmrata].

We have also paid attention to developing a defense and security industry within the context of industrial development in particular and of national development in general. In order to provide a legal basis for further developing the defense and security sector, an organic law governing state defense is currently being drafted by this honorable assembly and the government. It is hoped that the draft can be completed soon.

Honorable brother speaker: While concentrating on the task of development, which forms the current historic task, we, however, cannot remain quiet about the flare-ups and turbulence occurring in various parts of the world. True to the concept in the Preamble of the Constitution, we are called upon to contribute to the realization of a world order based on independence, lasting peace and social justice. In this, we must continue to adhere to an independent and active foreign policy which is devoted to the interests of national development. It is in this spirit that, in foreign policy matters, we have formulated our attitudes and taken steps in various existing forums.

Our attention has been directed mainly toward the consolidation of the ASEAN organization, which has gradually consolidated the political views of its members in facing regional and international problems as well as toward the expansion of economic and development cooperation among its five member countries.

Regarding the Kampuchean problem, from the outset our attitude, which is also ASEAN's, has been clear; namely, we want to see Kampuchea a sovereign and peaceful country. As a sovereign nation, the Kampuchean people must have the right to choose their own government and determine their own future, without outside interference.

It is in this context that Indonesia, as well as ASEAN, supports the Coalition Government of [Democratic] Kampuchea, which was formed recently. Indonesia believes that the presence of foreign troops in the country is contrary to the wishes of the Kampuchean people; they must be immediately withdrawn from Kampuchean territory. Their presence is clearly contrary to the principles of friendship and neighborly relations and denies the Kampuchean people the freedom the determine their own government in a democratic way.

Another development which is a source of concern is the situation in Afghanistan, which remains unchanged. The presence of foreign troops there does not guarantee Afghan sovereignty which deserves our respect. Therefore, the foreign troops must be withdrawn.

Meanwhile, developments in the Middle East are alarming. The war between Iran and Iraq, two neighboring Islamic countries, is continuing. We, as the country with the largest Muslim population in the world and as friends, call on both sides to seek a peaceful solution to their conflict in the spirit of Islam.

The war between these two countries has weakened the unity of Arab countries, which is needed in the struggle against the Israeli aggressors who, arrogantly and in disregard of humanitarianism, have invaded Lebanon and its capital, Beirut, and killed and persecuted the Lebanese people and the Palestinians. Our views on this have been clear from the outset: We side with the Arab nations who are fighting Israeli aggression and stand by the Palestinian people in their struggle for the right to determine their own future and set up their own homeland.

ANTARA Report on Speech

BK161329 Jakarta ANTARA in English 1114 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Jakarta, August 16 (ANTARA) -- Indonesian President Suharto declined [as received] here Monday that the 37th anniversary of the country's independence proclamation, August 17 this year, marked "the last stages of the services of the 1945 generation." He added that transfer of responsibility from generation to generation was basically "a proper and natural process."

The president emphasized this in a state address before a plenary session of the House of People's Representatives Monday morning on the eve of the 37th Independence Day, August 17.

Himself belonging to the 1945 generation, which fought physically in Indonesia's war of independence, Suharto stressed that the "liberating generation" was determined to ensure that "they will be able to leave the best of their as [as received] a strong base for the development and growth of the nation in keeping with the noble ideals of the independence proclamation."

As the country commemorates its 37th anniversary tomorrow, the 1945 generation would have devoted its service to the country for 37 years, he observed. And now a younger generation had emerged and its role would grow larger in coming years, he continued, adding that what was left behind by the present generation should form the foundation and the example of the coming generation.

Touching on the country's political parties, the president reiterated that all the socio-political forces in this country must assert that "the one and only principle they use is Pancasila -- the state philosophy and ideology."

He said that 16 years after the birth of the national will to reform the political life the nation had experienced three general elections. We must therefore continue and complete once and for all the process of reforming political life, which means that their respective aspirations should be aimed at realizing a balance spiritual and material prosperity consistent with Pancasila.

The head of state deemed it necessary to raise this question apparently because political parties were regarded to have given prominence to principles other than Pancasila at the peak of the general elections campaign earlier this year.

Warned the president: "The presence of other principles -- beside the principles of Pancasila -- as the special characteristics of the parties will prompt extreme elements, both from within and from without, to give greater prominence to other principles at times when the political struggle attains concrete forms... and that they also tend to easily stimulate narrow group fanaticism which can be readily exploited by extreme elements...."

On the other hand, by ideally adhering solely to the principles of Pancasila, the political parties concerned, he believed, will be able to grow every stronger and gain greater confidence from the people.

By Law No 5 of 1975 the nine Indonesian political parties were streamlined into two (the Moslem Partai Persatuan Pembangunan and the Democratic Partai Demokrasi Indonesia) plus the creation of the functional group (Golongan Karya).

Referring to the acceptance of the convention of the Law of the Sea by the UN conference recently, President Suharto said for Indonesia it was extremely important and historic. This is because the resolution constitutes a guarantee and recognition in international law of states that are archipelagoes that conforms with and ensures the execution of the archipelago principle.

Suharto also called it a milestone for the international community, especially because it is for the first time that an overall legal regimen has been created and that it regulates the use of the seas and the natural resources contained therein, inclusive of those on the ocean bed. He hoped that this convention can be signed and ratified immediately by the countries concerned so that Indonesia can start taking steps to give substance to the archipelago principle.

Referring to Indonesia's economic conditions the president dismissed as not in accord with facts and unfounded pessimistic views depicting the situation as so afflicted by ailments and injustice as to portend "total failure".

He admitted in some areas progress was still slow and some groups of people were still poor, "but as a nation we have already entered a more advanced level of progress as a result of development." He cited in this context the fact that Indonesia was recently categorized as a middle-income nation -- no longer a low income nation.

Despite adverse world economic conditions which resulted in sluggish demand for Indonesia's non oil exports and a fall in prices of these commodities on the international market, Indonesia's foreign exchange reserves had remained "within the bounds of adequacy". The government therefore was not considering devaluation of the rupiah but maintain the present floating and controlled exchange rate.

The president also cited Indonesia's successes in keeping inflation down amidst a world suffering from protracted inflationary trends. In the first seven months of 1982 the rate of inflation was under 7 percent and in the past six months less than 2.3 percent. He predicted in the coming months the rate of inflation would remain stable.

Indonesia's economy grew at a rate of 7.6 percent in 1981, one of the highest growth rates in the world, the president remarked and attributed this achievements to increased production in agriculture, industry and services. With rice production expected to reach 23 million tons this year Indonesia may soon become self-sufficient in this staple food.

The president listed the population problem and creation of job opportunities as "the biggest challenge" being faced by Indonesia in the economic development sectors. The 147 million population grows at an annual rate of 2.3 percent and the labour force by more than 6.5 million persons a year. Indonesia had to intensify its family planning program so that by 1990 the birth rate stands at not higher than 2.2 percent. In addition the government aimed to step up the rate of transmigration (resettlement of landless farmers from densely populated Java and Bali islands to the other islands) which under the current third five year development plan has been targeted at a total of half a million families.

Another great task being undertaken by the government was the creation of economic democracy through the promotion of the cooperative movement which was already making headway in the agricultural sector or rural areas.

ARMY CHIEF SPEECH CLOSES EXERCISE WITH MALAYSIA

BK140815 Jakarta ANTARA in English 0730 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] Jakarta, Aug 14 (ANTARA) -- The Sixth Malaysian-Indonesian Army exercise code-named Kekar-Malindo VI was closed here Friday by Indonesian Army Chief of Staff General Poniman, who assessed the exercise as of a more advanced level than previous ones.

The command-post exercise applied battle simulation to bring more reality into the event, and also had a wider scope with the involvement of a brigade formation and other auxiliary units, he said. The equipment used in the drill was also of a more comprehensive kind, the general said, adding the hope that it would pave beneficial cooperation between the two countries on the basis of the "Malindo spirit." The exercise, which lasted ten days and involved no less than 1,000 members from the armies of both sides, was held in North Sumatra.

Poniman further said the exercise was intended not only to enhance military professionalism but also to step up mutual understanding and ideological concord in the implementation of the defence and security doctrine of the two countries. The two neighbor countries cannot but work together in efforts to strengthen their national security in the region, he stressed.

Flanking Poniman at the closing ceremony was Malaysian Army Deputy Commander Lieut, Gen Datuk Jagar Onn, who referred to the exercise as of great importance for the security of the two countries. The exercise, an annual affair since 1977, will next year be located in Malaysia.

COMMENTARY EXAMINES KAMPUCHEA'S NONALIGNED SEAT

BK141600 Jakarta Domestic Service in Indonesian 1200 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Unattributed commentary: "Kampuchean Membership in the Nonaligned Movement"]

[Text] TANJUG, the official Yugoslav news agency, reports that Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the president of Democratic Kampuchea, has called on Yugoslavia to restore Kampuchean membership in the Nonaligned Movement. Norodom Sihanouk made the call at a dinner in Ohrid, Macedonia, Yugoslavia, last Thursday. On this occasion, Sihanouk said that the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea he led was no government in exile, because it functioned inside Kampuchea. He stressed that Democratic Kampuchea is the only free, neutral and nonaligned government in Kampuchea and which is recognized by the United Nations.

In view of Sihanouk's call, the question arises whether or not Kampuchean membership in the Nonaligned Movement can be restored. As it is, Kampuchean membership was suspended when the Nonaligned Movement held a summit conference in Havana in 1979. It was suspended because both the Khmer Rouge regime -- which was recognized by the United Nations -- and the Phnom Penh regime -- which is not recognized by the United Nations -- were not represented at the Nonaligned Summit Conference.

The absence of Kampuchea in the Nonaligned Movement was the result of a Cuban move which supported Vietnamese strategy concerning Kampuchea. According to the Vietnamese strategy, Kampuchean membership in the Nonaligned Movement had first to be suspended before Kampuchea could be represented by the Phnom Penh regime it protected.

Three years after the nonaligned summit conference in Havana, the Khmer Rouge regime is still recognized by the United Nations. Nevertheless, by mobilizing worldwide opinion concerning the atrocities of the Khmer Rouge after Pol Pot seized power from Sihanouk's hands in 1976, Vietnam is harboring the hope that what happened in Havana in 1979 can happen again in the United Nations in New York in 1982.

The Vietnamese hope has become questionable following the emergence of the 17 June [date as heard] declaration in Kuala Lumpur, which was followed the next month by the establishment of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea led by Sihanouk. Only if Sihanouk withdraws from the coalition government can Vietnam's objective be attained.

In order to attain its objective, Vietnam has offered the convocation of an international conference, which could draw Sihanouk's sympathy. However, ASEAN's rejection of the Vietnamese offer implied that Sihanouk will not withdraw from the coalition government as hoped by Vietnam. Nevertheless, this does not automatically mean that Kampuchean membership in the Nonaligned Movement will be restored at the nonaligned summit conference next month, because Vietnam is going to make an all-out effort to foil Sihanouk's strategy by sending Deputy Foreign Minister Vo Dong Giang to Iraq and other nonaligned countries. The outcome is still to be determined.

SUZUKI: ASIAN CRITICISM OF TEXTBOOKS SHOULD BE ACCEPTED

OW171353 Toyko KYODO in English 1247 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 17, KYODO -- Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki said Tuesday Japan should accept criticism from its Asian neighbors of school textbooks termed as "distorting" Japan's actions in Asia before and during World War II. But Suzuki also said it is also important to maintain Japan's textbook screening system.

The remarks, made in a meeting between Suzuki and three ruling Liberal-Democratic Party lawmakers, may signal Suzuki's readiness to change the textbooks within the framework of the screening system, government sources said. China and South Korea have been officially asking the government to replace "distorted" accounts about Japan's wartime military activities in the countries with "true historical facts." Suzuki met the LDP Dietmen to discuss how to deal with the textbook dispute, which has grown into a major diplomatic issue clouding Japan's relations with the two countries.

LDP To Take Measures

OW180239 Tokyo KYODO in English 0229 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Tokyo, Aug 18, KYODO -- The ruling Liberal-Democratic Party will take "some measures" to settle the current diplomatic dispute involving Japan, China and South Korea over controversial textbook revisions, it was reported Wednesday.

LDP Diet members specializing in educational affairs met Wednesday morning to discuss the row concerning textbook distortions of Japan's conduct in China and Korea before and during World War II. A party member said the party will take "some measures within the framework of the existing textbook screening system" to settle the controversy. The party, he said, will consult with the Foreign and Education Ministries.

About 120 conservative members attended the meeting. Some members contended that Japan should not change contents of textbooks under "external pressure" because the screening system is a question related to the sovereignty of a state.

In the meantime, Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi attended a meeting of LDP Diet members dealing with foreign affairs and repeated his earlier remarks that Japan should repent where repentence is necessary, an indication that he was in favor of deleting words in the texts which led to the current diplomatic dispute.

MILITARY TECHNOLOGY COOPERATION WITH U.S. UNSETTLED

OW170845 Tokyo KYODO in English 0706 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 17, KYODO -- The government could not produce a unified view during the current extended session of the Diet (Parliament) on Japan's cooperation with the U.S. in the field of military technology, a high-ranking government official said Tuesday. The official of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI) made the forecast, while asking not to be identified.

The question surfaced in June 1981 when former Director General of the Defense Agency Joji Omura visited the United States. The Reagan administration has been soliciting Japan's cooperation since then, and the Japanese Government was to present its policy in the current Diet session ending August 21 after considering the question in connection with its existing basic principles on arms exports.

Under the export trade control ordinance, the Japanese Government limits export of arms to the communist bloc, the nations to which the United Nations prohibited arms shipments and the countries at war or having the possibility of being engaged in an international warfare.

In the process, the Foreign Ministry and the Defense Agency supported cooperation, citing the necessity to "correct one-sided imports by Japan of military technology from the United States."

But the Ministry of International Trade and Industry opposed the idea and insisted that it is difficult to make exemptions to the current restrictions on arms export. Behind MITI's objection is the fact that the U.S. Government did not exclude the Japan-Soviet project to develop oil and gas off Sakhalin from its tightened sanctions against the Soviet Union, a political analyst said. He also cited as the reason for MITI's hard stance a burgeoning "technical friction" between the two countries, as evidenced by the recent IBM espionage case.

Japan's policy on the matter, therefore, will not be made clear until mid-September when Soichiro Ito, director general of the Defense Agency, will visit the United States following a three-day working-level meeting in Honolulu in late August on security between the two nations.

ELECTORAL SYSTEM FOR HOUSE OF COUNCILLORS CHANGED

OW180823 Tokyo KYODO in English 0821 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 18, KYODO -- A bill to change the electoral system for the House of Councillors national constituency became law Wednesday as it was approved at a House of Representatives plenary session.

The ruling Liberal-Democratic Party (LDP) and the conservative opposition New Liberal Club voted for the bill, while the Japan Socialist Party (JSP), Democratic Socialist Party, Komeito and the Japan Communist Party voted against. Some independent members have rejected the bill as signifying the death of the upper house because it virtually prevents them from running in the national electoral district beginning next year.

Under the revised election law, voters will cast their ballots for political parties which will submit a list of candidates of each party's choice. The number of successful candidates will be determined according to votes each party gets. In the past, people voted for individual candidates with or without party affiliation.

A political party must have at least 10 candidates from now on if it wants to take part in an upper house national constituency election. At present, LDP has 134 members and JSP 47 in the House of Councillors, compared with nine independents in the 252-member Upper House.

The current Diet session initially due to end in May was extended until August 21 to discuss the upper house election bill.

NODONG SINMUN FLAYS CHON'S LIBERATION DAY SPEECH

SK180550 Pyongyang Domestic Service in Korean 2251 GMT 16 Aug 82

[NODONG SINMUN 17 August commentary: "Shameless Gibberish of Colonial Stooge"]

[Text] Traitor Chon Tu-hwan made a so-called speech marking the liberation anniversary in Seoul on 15 August. In a word, his speech from first to last was full of his inner thoughts aimed at justifying the U.S. imperialists' colonial rule, beautifying and embellishing the dark reality of South Korea and disguising his nature. His gibberish on that day establishes this fact well.

He babbled that with the defeat of the Japanese imperialists South Korea was liberated from national oppression, and that with a so-called government established, the country was liberated from dynastic rule. He even urged the South Korean people to be wary of aggressive policy and colonialism. It is brazenfaced for one who is selling the country and the nation to the U.S. and Japanese aggressors -- the pro-U.S., pro-Japanese stooge -- to dare to say such a thing. This is really ridiculous.

In South Korea today, the U.S. imperialists, who sneaked into Korea in place of the defeated Japanese imperialists, are playing the master.

There is no one who is not aware that the U.S. imperialists execute the prerogative of supreme command over the military, take control of the economy, and control and supervise the internal and external policies of the puppet regime. South Korea is not only the complete colony of the U.S. imperialists under the U.S. forces' military occupation, but also is becoming a sphere of activity for the Japanese aggressive forces. It is no secret that in South Korea, the despotic, fascist terrorist rule -- much more cruel than the feudalistic rule or the Japanese colonial rule -- has continued.

Today, the South Korean people are moaning, while the national sovereignty and freedom is being violated under the double torture of harsh rule by internal and external oppressors headed by the U.S. imperialists. Can we describe this as a liberation?

The sordid stooge, who is maintaining himself with the backing of his U.S. masters, while regarding as his creed the pro-U.S., flunkeyist idea and ideology of falling back on the United States, dared discuss so-called national liberation. This is preposterous.

Traitor Chon Tu-hwan babbled about liberation or about precautions against colonialism. This is a gimmick aimed at covering up the fact that South Korea is a colony of the U.S. imperialists and the Chon Tu-hwan regime is the U.S. imperialists' colonial stooge -- more detestable than Yi Wan-yong and Song Pyong-chun [Yi and Song were respectively education minister and home minister during the last days of the Yi Dynasty] who sold the country to the Japanese imperialists.

For the genuine liberation of South Korea, it is necessary to be liberated from the U.S. imperialists' colonial and fascist rule.

In his speech, Chon Tu-hwan also used the trick of depicting previous South Korea puppet regimes as democratic governments and describing himself as typical figure for realizing democratic rule. The so-called previous South Korea regimes were tools fabricated by U.S. imperialists to execute their colonial policy. The Chon Tu-hwan military fascist regime is their most truculent executioner. The atrocity of the Kwangju massacre and the unprecendentedly dark court trial against Kim Tae-chung clearly show what the puppets consider to be democracy. The deceptiveness of democratic rule advocated by the puppets was also revealed by the fact that they kicked up a racket to appear as if they granted great grace to the prisoners by announcing the so-called amnesty on 14 August.

The amnesty has a disguise aimed at squashing the antigovernment sentiment growing among the South Korean people. The political prisoners who should have been released were not included in the amnesty. Behind the facade of amnesty, suppression of the patriots has been even more cruelly committed.

In recent days too, the puppets held a murderous trial against the patriots who burned a U.S. cultural center for national dignity and sovereignty and passed death sentences and heavy penalties on them. With such a sham amnesty, who on earth can they deceive?

The cutthroats, who have disemboweled pregnant women, cut off breasts of girl students and gouged out eyeballs and kidneys from bodies of living men and sold them because they had demanded democracy, are not qualified to babble about so-called civil rights and humanitarianism.

No matter how often the puppets may babble about democracy, they can never conceal their cruel nature as a military, fascist group that indiscriminately suppresses and murders people and stains South Korea with the people's blood.

On this occasion, traitor Chon Tu-hwan also put forth the theory of opening the society in order to disguise the free domecracy in South Korean -- the one established with guns and bayonets.

Some time ago, compatriots overseas, whose hometowns are in South Korea, visited there, regarding it as their fatherland, and many of them were accused of being impure elements or spies, and were arrested, imprisoned and tried. Involved in such a case were Japan-resident Korean students (So Sung) and his brother and compatriot (Hong Song-kil). The opening of society is a deceptive trick aimed at ridiculing compatriots overseas, appeasing, cheating and making a cat's-paw of them for their political sport.

If they are sincerely going to open South Korean society, they should abolish evil fascist laws including the infamous national security law and change the anticommunist policy into a policy of (?tolerating communism).

Traitor Chon Tu-hwan's deceptive trick was also revealed by the fact that he again proposed the dialogue and so on, the idea of which has already worn out. This is ridiculous enough. If he really wants the fatherland's reunification, before talking about other things, he should talk about the need for forcing the withdrawal of the U.S. imperialist aggression forces from South Korea and of ending the U.S. imperialists' interference in the internal affairs of Korea. However, as on previous occasions, he did not touch on this issue at all. Instead, he only repeated threadbare gibberish, such as national reconciliation through dialogue and contacts and the so-called talks between the highest responsible persons.

This situation in which the U.S. imperialists adhere to colonial rule and the two Koreas plot while occupying South Korea, and their stooges cry out for the North-South confrontation while killing people under the anticommunist slogan, babbling about the so-called dialogues on reunification, is like a dog howling at the moon.

By reciting from memory his U.S. masters' scenario, traitor Chon Tu-hwan made such absurd remarks. His remarks were only aimed at ridiculing public opinion at home and abroad. He has to escape isolation at home and abroad, which is deepening with each passing day owing to his forever intolerable crimes committed before the nation, so he had to try such a deceptive trick. This notwithstanding, no matter what gimmick he may resort to, traitor Chon Tu-hwan can never cheat anyone.

The following facts have been well known to the whole of the world: South Korea is the U.S. imperialists' colony; traitor Chon Tu-hwan is the U.S. tainted stooge; he is a puppet president who usurped power on the strength of U.S. backing; he is a fascist tyrant who murders compatriots; and he is a splittist, who opposes the country's reunification, and a warmonger. This being the case, among the compatriots at home and abroad and the world's progressive peoples, today, voices demanding the overthrow of traitor Chon Tu-hwan are growing further.

The antinational nature of traitor Chon Tu-hwan and his crimes committed before history and the nation can never be concealed with anything. If he continues to pursue fascism, division and war by depending on outside forces, while making deceptive remarks such as the national liberation, democratic rule or independent reunification, he cannot escape ruin.

NODONG SINMUN HITS CHON'S PACIFIC SUMMIT PROPOSAL

[NODONG SINMUN commentary: "The Puppet Stooge's Sordid Role"]

[Text] According to news reports, the traitorous Chon Tu-hwan clique has recently babbled about a summit meeting of the United States, Japan, Canada, Australia and New Zealand, a group of Asian countries and South Korea. Stressing the need for such a meeting, the puppets are trying to strengthen the contacts with these countries. It is ridiculous and unbecoming of a U.S. stooge like the traitorous Chon Tu-hwan clique to babble about such a summit. It is widely known that South Korea is absolutely a colony of the U.S. imperialists. As for the traitorous Chon Tu-hwan clique, it is a dirty and well-trained stooge of the U.S. imperialists, a puppet president who usurped power at the instigation of the U.S. imperialists and who now maintains a puppet regime.

Today, the spirit of anti-U.S. struggle for independence is growing as an unstoppable force among the South Korean people and the people of the world are raising their voices denouncing the U.S. imperialists for their military occupation of South Korea and their colonial rule, rejecting the traitorous Chon Tu-hwan clique. At a time like this, the traitorous Chon Tu-hwan clique is trying to make South Korea appear to be an independent nation, maneuvering to win favor with people at home and abroad and advertising a summit to cover up a sad situation of a lone puppet.

By advertising such a meeting, however, the traitorous Chon Tu-hwan clique is only exposing more of its dirty nature as a stooge serving U.S. masters. The so-called summit of Pacific nations is not an invention of the puppets. It has long been advocated by the Japanese reactionaries with the positive support of the U.S. imperialists and in accordance with U.S. imperialist strategy against Asia.

Under the pretext of economic cooperation, the Japanese reactionaries have been seeking to establish a Pacific economic community and a new order by advocating the economic unity of the Pacific nations. Not long ago, Japanese Prime Minister Suzuki again spoke of this in Honolulu. The purpose of the Japanese reactionaries' move to establish a Pacific economic community is to bring the countries in this area under Japan's domination so as to plunder their rich natural resources as they please and to harshly exploit the cheap labor force.

The nature of the Pacific economic community is nothing but a modern version of the Greater Far East Coprosperity Sphere advocated in the past by the Japanese militarists to dominate the Asian and Pacific countries. At the same time, the U.S. imperialists, while encouraging the Japanese reactionaries to establish the Pacific economic community, are trying to turn it into a military alliance system to be directed by their baton.

If the Pacific economic community is to be formed at a time when the U.S.-Japan security system exists, the maneuvers to form a tripartite military alliance among the United States, Japan and South Korea are fully prepared and the ANZUS treaty linking the United States, Australia and New Zealand still functions. A community of economic character could easily be turned into one of a military nature. This is as clear as daylight. If this were to take place, first of all, the developing countries of this region would not only be subjected to economic domination of the industrialized nations, such as Japan, but they would also be tied to the wheel of the U.S. imperialists' Asian military strategy. This would eventually trample the independence and national sovereignty of these countries and block their road of building a new society, bringing about nothing but the irrevocable consequence of disturbing the peace and stability of the region.

All the facts show that the South Korean puppets, playing the role of a shock brigade executing the policy of aggression of the U.S. and Japanese reactionaries, are contributing to leading the developing countries in the Pacific region along a dangerous road. The people of the Pacific nations still vividly remember the bloody history of aggression committed by the Japanese imperialists and the brutal acts of murder committed by the U.S. imperialists in Korea and Southeast Asia. They do not want a repetition of such an accursed history in this region.

This being the case, the peoples of these countries, regarding the traitorous Chon Tu-hwan clique's babbling about a summit meeting, which was instigated by the U.S. and Japanese reactionaries, as absurd remarks by a puppet that has no fixed ideas of its own, ignore its remarks from the beginning. The louder it shouts about a summit meeting, the stronger will be the denunciation and rejection faced by the dirty imperialist South Korean puppets.

VRPR SCORES CHON'S VISIT TO AFRICA, CANADA

SK180358 (Clandestine) Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in Korean to South Korea 0300 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Station commentary]

[Text] On 16 August Chon Tu-hwan left to visit five countries with his faithful stooges. In connection with this, mobilizing all government-patronized political parties, government-patronized buglers and other rabble, the rascals are noisily advertising Chon Tu-hwan's tour, saying that it will make a display of the so-called independent diplomacy, will promote the national power and image of South Korea and will further promote the friendly and cooperative relations with these countries. But, this is a scheme aimed at deceiving the people and at misleading public opinion at home and abroad.

Chon Tu-hwan's current tour of the four African countries and Canada is in every way not only a puppet tour under the directives of the U.S. boss, but is also a tour designed to secure support of the two-Koreas line from Third World countries and to freeze the division of the country.

Chon Tu-hwan's tour of these countries is described as independent diplomacy. This is indeed preposterous. As is known, today South Korea is a typical colony of the United States and is a puppet state like Manchuria in the past, which was a puppet state under Japanese imperialism.

In South Korea, a signboard which reads the Republic of Korea [taehanminguk] is hung, and there is a National Assembly, which poses as a so-called sanctuary of the popular will, and a so-called judicial branch. But these are controlled by the United States and are nothing but a tool for the neocolonial rule of the United States. Thus, the United States completely controls all fields of South Korea -- political, economic, diplomatic and military.

Chon Tu-hwan's current five-nation tour is also being made in accordance with the directives of the United States. In other words, Chon Tu-hwan's tour is the tour of a colonial puppet of the United States who follows aggressive U.S. policy toward Africa. Nevertheless, the Chon Tu-hwan ring talks about independent diplomacy. This is nothing but a dirty trick to conceal its true nature as a puppet of the United States.

Chon Tu-hwan is clamoring that the purpose of the current five-nation tour is to enhance the so-called national power and image of South Korea and to promote friendly and cooperative relations with these countries. This is also a gibberish of [words indistinct].

The purpose of Chon Tu-hwan's current five-nation tour is to split and alienate the Third World countries, to escape international isolation by blocking the ever-increasing influence of the North among these countries, to embellish fascist rule and to secure support for the two-Koreas line.

In fact, the Chon Tu-hwan military fascist system today has been isolated and rejected not only by our people but also by the Third World countries. Today, many countries are rejecting Chon Tu-hwan, branding him a murderer, a fascist, a tyrant and a splittist. The number of countries severing diplomatic relations with South Korea is increasing each day.

Proceeding from this, while leering at the Third World countries in a bid to avoid of international isolation, the Chon Tu-hwan ring is trying to secure support from these countries and to justify its splittist schemes. But, this is nothing but a foolish delusion. The Third World countries will never be fooled by such cunning tactics and will wage the struggle to oppose and reject Chon Tu-hwan even more strongly. Our people will resolutely continue to struggle against Chon Tu-hwan, branding his current five-nation tour a splittist and treacherous tour.

VRPR SCORES CHON'S 15 AUGUST AMNESTY MEASURE

SK171218 (Clandestine) Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in Korean to South Korea 0300 GMT 15 Aug 82

[Station commentary: "A Clumsy Act of Disguise"]

[Text] Marking Liberation Day on 15 August, the fascist Chon Tu-hwan group played a game of suspending sentences and granting amnesty to prisoners.

In connection with this, the group is saying through progovernment mouthpieces that it is granting a special favor to these illegally imprisoned people. This is a trick and a farce to appease public opinion at home and abroad denouncing the U.S. fascist colonial rule and to divert the people's denunciation and resistance directed toward the group. It is absurd for a murderer serving the United States -- the Chon Tu-hwan ring -- to babble about granting a special favor.

The majority of people imprisoned in now crowded jail cells struggled to regain national sovereignty in opposition to U.S. colonial rule or have waged a just struggle to regain the basic human right to existence and democracy. These people are innocent and have done nothing to deserve imprisonment. They were arrested for violating the fascist evil laws while they were struggling. All were imprisoned on preposterous charges.

The fact that the fascist hangmen imprisoned and punished them is evidence of the tyranny of illegal laws and lawlessness. The Chon Tu-hwan ring, while paying lipservice to suspension of sentences and a special amnesty for imprisoned persons, still hold in prisons the political prisoners and prisoners of conscience who deserve to be released. This is an intolerable criminal act.

In fact, the Chon Tu-hwan ring is imprisoning numerous democratic personages such as Kim Tae-chung and prisoners of conscience to maintain the U.S. fascist rule in this land, subjecting them to torture and repression.

What is more, with murderous trials for those involved in the arson at the American Cultural Center in Pusan, the group has committed a fascist act of sentencing to capital and heavy punishment those who had waged a just struggle under the banner of the anti-U.S. struggle for independence.

That the Chon Tu-hwan ring advertised the suspension of sentences and the special amnesty for prisoners is nothing but a farce to embellish maneuvers to repress civil rights, fulfilling its duty as stooge of the United States, and to cover up its dirty nature as a wicked murderer and fascist tyrant.

As revealed by the Kwangju massacre, the Chon Tu-hwan group is an intolerable group of human butchers which, on orders from the United States, brutally murdered the patriotic masses who rose against the outside forces to regain democracy and achieve national reunification. It is an unprecedented fascist group of tyrants which has turned all of South Korea into a prison cell without bars.

The murderous acts committed by the Chon Tu-hwan ring since it seized power to maintain U.S. colonial rule in this land readily prove this.

If the Chon Tu-hwan ring is truly willing to do something -- at least as a token -- it should first of all abolish the fascist evil laws such as national security laws and immediately and unconditionally release the patriots and prisoners of conscience, including the patriots who struggled in the anti-U.S. struggle for independence.

At a time when all sorts of fascist evil laws fabricated to maintain U.S. colonial rule in this land are enforced, the release of a few people, if they ever really were released, is meaningless.

Even though the group is trying to appease and deceive the people by producing such a farce as granting favors, nobody will be deceived. Our masses will wage a more vigorous struggle to overthrow the military Chon Tu-hwan regime -- the puppet serving the U.S. colonialists -- and for the immediate and unconditional release of political prisoners and democratic personages.

CHON ARRIVES IN KENYA, MEETS WITH PRESIDENT MOI

SK180120 Seoul THE KOREA HERALD in English 18 Aug 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] Nairobi -- Korean President Chon Tu-hwan and Kenyan President Daniel arap Moi agreed Tuesday to make common efforts to usher in a new era of cooperation between the two countries.

In a summit held behind closed doors at the state guest house, the two heads of state shared the view that it is important for developing countries to channel their power into close cooperation, it was learned. They also agreed to expand technological cooperation, strengthen economic and trade relations and promote cultural exchanges between the two countries. The two leaders agreed that Korea and Kenya would hold regular consultations to discuss joint ventures between the two countries on the private sector.

President Chon emphasized that it is important for the two countries to enhance mutual understanding and friendship on the basis of the Olympic spirit. Echoing the view, Moi pledged full cooperation to help Korea to hold the 1988 Seoul Olympic Games successfully. The Korean president said that it will be desirable to form a "development front" in an effort to further develop the relations of inter-dependence and mutual compensation among developing countries.

Chon explained to Moi that tension continues to exist on the Korean Peninsula, as North Korea has drastically built up its military power instead of abandoning its scheme to communize the peninsula by force. He pointed out that it is urgent for the divided parts of the Korean Peninsula to restore mutual trust by holding a summit, if they are to dispel tension and normalize relations. The Korean chief executive said that the new unification formula proposed by the Republic of Korea is the most comprehensive and realistic appraoch to Korea's unification.

In reply, the Kenyan president expressed positive support to the Republic of Korea's dialogue and unification policy, a meeting source said. As Chon said Korea and Kenya should be more staunch than ever before in opposing colonialism, since the two countries had experiences of fighting colonialism, Moi nodded, it was learned.

The two presidents exchanged views on a wide range of issues including the situation in Northeast Asia, African and world affairs and cooperation among developing countries. The summit meeting was held in a very friendly atmosphere, the meeting source said. Chon proposed that Moi visit Korea at an opportune time, and Moi accepted the invitation, the source said.

After the summit, Chon and Moi attended a meeting of senior officials of the two countries. The meeting was jointly presided over by Korean Deputy Prime Minister-Minister of Economic Planning Kim Chun-song and Kenyan Vice President Mwai Kibaki.

Speaking before the meeting started, Chon said that it is necessary for the two countries to channel their energy into close cooperation in order to pursue the common goals of freedom, peace and prosperity and create a new history. He said that he expects the meeting will contribute to increasing bilateral cooperation in the political, economic, social and cultural fields.

Moi said that Korea is a grateful country that recognized Kenya and dispatched its ambassador to Nairobi ahead of other countries when Kenya achieved independence. Touching on the technological training of young Kenyans, he said that Korea may send trainers to Kenya or Kenya may dispatch its young people to Korea for training. Earlier in the day, President and Mrs. Chon arrived here after eight hours and 30 minutes of flight from Penang. When the presidential plane touched down at Jomo Kenyatta International Airport, President and Mrs. Chon were welcomed by President Moi, and other ranking officials including Vice President Kibaki and Minister of Foreign Affairs Robert Ouko.

In an arrival statement, Chon said that since the establishment of diplomatic relations in 1964, the two countries have steadfastly developed bonds of friendship as partners in a variety of political, economic, social and cultural activities, pursuing the common goals of freedom, peace and prosperity.

"It is my hope that this visit will contribute to expanding and deepening our relations through a consolidation of our partnership aimed at peace and prosperity. We can accomplish this by sharing the precious experience and wisdom acquired in the course of our respective growth," he said.

PARTIES TO CONVENE ASSEMBLY SESSION ON TEXTBOOKS

SK180327 Seoul YONHAP in English 1310 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 18 (YONHAP) -- South Korea's major political parties Wednesday agreed to convene the National Assembly Foreign Affairs Committee next Tuesday to deal with the controversial "textbook issue" between Korea and Japan.

The agreement came during a meeting of floor leaders of the ruling Democratic Justice Party, the opposition Democratic Korea Party and the Korea National Party. The three leaders shared the view that the convocation of the Foreign Affairs Committee is necessary because of the growing national sentiment demanding the correction of distorted parts of Japanese history books and the Japanese Government's "lukewarm" attitude in the matter.

During the committee meeting, Vice Foreign Minister No Chae-won will answer lawmakers' questions concerning diplomatic contacts to have the distortions corrected and the government's future measures to cope with the issue, parliamentary sources said. The committee meeting will also discuss a pan-national campaign to overcome adversities caused by Japan and rectify Japan's biased view of Korea, according to the source.

Delay of Lawmaker's Meeting

SK180134 Seoul YONHAP in English 0048 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Text] Seoul, Aug. 18 (YONHAP) -- The Seoul side of the Korea-Japan Parliamentarians Union is considering postponing the annual convention of the bilateral body slated for Sept. 7 in Tokyo unless the Tokyo government takes appropriate measures to solve the "textbook issue" between the two countries.

Rep. Yi Chae-hyong, the union's Seoul-side chairman, and other leading Korean members of the union met Tuesday and discussed measures to cope with the issue. Emerging from the meeting, Rep. Yi Sang-ik, Seoul-side secretary general, said that a "decisive clue" for solving the problem should be found before the annual meeting of the union is called into session. If the problem as well as the longstanding ecnomic cooperation issue between the two countries are not solved, they will adversely affect the convocation of the joint meeting, Yi said.

Meanwhile, the opposition Korea National Party has already decided not to attend the union's annual meeting if the textbook issue is not resolved before Sept. 7.

SECOND-QUARTER ECONOMIC PERFORMANCE REPORTED

[Text] It is significant that the nation's economy moved ahead during the April-June period despite the prolonged recession in industrial countries and reduced growth in world trade, relevant economists said yesterday.

Economists at the Bank of Korea (BOK) noted that the April-June economic performance, with the GNP growth rate of 4.6 percent, was rated good, especially compared to the 4.1 percent growth rate posted in the same period of last year. The quarterly GNP increase, though slower than in the second years of the late 1970's, is welcome news in that there was a rise in capital spending considered essential for the long-run health of the economy. Domestic fixed investment related to plants and equipment showed a whopping 10.2 percent increase over the like period of last year, which is in sharp contrast to a negative growth rate of 7.2 percent in the same 1981 quarter.

The BOK economists are certain that the nation will be able to attain this year's economic growth target of six to seven percent without a hitch barring unforeseen events such as a poor rice harvest. They also said that recently slow-going commodity prices will prove to be conducive to steady and solid growth of the national economy. In fact, a major premise of this year's economic planning backed up by the government is to arrest price inflation. The inflation rate has thus far shown a noticeably moderate trend. During the first seven months of this year, the commodity inflation rates recorded 2.2 percent (wholesale) and 3.6 percent (consumer) respectively, which in turn seem to make the government's economic planners confident that this year's inflation will be held down to a single-digit figure as planned.

Despite the real growth rate of 4.6 percent during the April-June period, however, some economic observers pointed out the nation's economy is still facing many woes. One is that a considerable portion of the second quarter GNP growth was dominated by overseas factors.

Gross national product (GNP), the total output of goods and services produced only within the country, posted a growth rate of only 2.8 percent during the second quarter, contrasting with a 5.2 percent growth in the corresponding period of last year. This means that such overseas factors as earnings from overseas construction and reduced external debts servicing following lower international interest rates have contributed as much as 1.8 percent to the overall growth rate during the second quarter. This also means that domestic production of goods and services remained relatively flat during the period. It was for this reason that the nation's total consumption expenditure during the second quarter registered a small increase of 2.6 percent over the like period of last year. In comparison, last year's second quarter total expenditure recorded a growth rate of 4.8 percent.

Moderate export performance was also cited as a gloomy factor for the nation's economy. The second-quarter export growth rate posted only 5.5 percent as compared with 24.1 percent growth rate recorded in the same period of last year. The poor export performance was largely attributed to the growing trend of protectionism in major industrialized countries plus weak overseas demand for Korean-made goods.

Meantime, the growth of the manufacturing industry, normally considered the mainstay of economic development, registered a mere 3.1 percent during the second quarter. The manufacturing industry grew by an average of 20 percent in late 1970's, leading off the overall economic growth.

Unemployment Drops 'Slightly'

[Text] Unemployment dropped slightly by 0.1 percent during the second quarter (April-June) over the same period last year to 3.8 percent, according to figures released by the Economic Planning Board (EPB) yesterday. The figures show that the economically active population totaled 15,990,000 during the cited period, down 0.4 percent from a year earlier. Of them, 3.8 percent or 602,000 persons were jobless.

The total work force accounted for about 60.5 percent of the nation's population over the age of 14, which stood at 26,442,000, according to EPB, the government's top economic planning agency. Of the total workers -- 15,388,000 -- 42.5 percent or 6,.45,000 were working in the tertiary industry and service fields. Next came 37.5 percent or 5,765,000 who worked in the fields of agriculture, forestry and fishery. The workers in mining and manufacturing totaled 3,078,000 or 20.0 percent. EPB, meanwhile, said that 5,104,000 or 33.2 percent were found to be selfemployed while 6,986,000 or 45.4 percent were employed by business firms or other work places. The remaining 3,298,000 or 21.4 percent were engaged in family-related businesses during the period, EPB added.

Of the 602,000 unemployed, 22,000 were previously engaged in agriculture while 580,000 were involved in non-agricultural businesses.

HUN SEN REPORTS TO ASSEMBLY ON FOREIGN POLICY

BK171015 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0409 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 16 Aug (SPK) -- This morning, at the third session of the National Assembly, Hun Sen, vice chairman of the Council of Ministers and minister of foreign affairs, presented a report on the international situation and the PRK's foreign policy.

He analyzed the situation in different regions of the world and pointed out that the worsening tension arises from the bellicose policy of the imperialists, first of all, the U.S. imperialists who, in collusion with the Chinese expansionist-hegemonists and other reactionary forces, have interfered in the internal affairs of other states.

The vice chairman of the Council of Ministers pointed to the efforts made by the USSR, other socialist countries, governments and progressive peoples to prevent war, and stressed the repeated peace initiatives taken by the USSR -- particularly in disarmament, the reduction of nuclear arsenals and the banning of chemical weapons -- initiatives which have received a favorable response from peoples the world over, even in Western and northern Europe.

Regarding events relating to Kampuchea, the minister of foreign affairs stressed: For more than 3 years, the Chinese expansionist-hegemonists, in collusion with the U.S. imperialists and other reactionaries inside ASEAN, have resorted to various political, military, economic and diplomatic maneuvers against the revival of the Kampuchean people and against the revolutionary cause of the three Indochinese countries; but they have met with one failure after another. The situation in our country is steadily improving, the revolution of the three Indochinese countries has been consolidated and their solidarity and cooperation with the USSR and other fraternal socialist countries has been further strengthened.

On the so-called tripartite government of the reactionary Khmers, he said: Faced with the increasingly stable situation of our country and the world's trend toward abandoning Pol Pot, the U.S. forced ASEAN to agree with the Beijing reactionaries to form the so-called "Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea" in order to avoid a complete failure and to maintain the presence of the murderers and reactionaries at the 37th Session of the UN General Assembly.

On the direction of the party and government's foreign policy, the minister of foreign affairs indicated that the PRK will work to consolidate and develop the strategic alliance and cooperation in all fields with Vietnam and Laos; consolidate and strengthen the relations of friendship and cooperation in all fields with the USSR and other socialist countries; develop the relations of militant solidarity with communist and workers' parties, with revolutionary and progressive movements in the world and with the people's struggle in the world for peace, independence, the right to life, democracy and social progress; and frustrate the maneuvers of the Chinese reactionaries who, in collusion with the U.S. imperialists and reacionary forces inside ASEAN, use the reactionary Kampuchean forces to reverse the situation in Kampuchea and provoke confrontation between the Indochinese and ASEAN countries.

This afternoon, the head of the Kampuchean diplomacy gave an account of the Kampuchea-Vietnam agreement on the historical waters and the decree on the delimitation of the PRK's maritime zones and continental shelf. Afterwards, he answered questions from National Assembly members concerning relations between the Indochinese and ASEAN countries, Kampuchea's attitude regarding the struggle of the Palestinian people and the Kampuchea-Vietnam agreement on historical waters.

National Assembly members also heard Sim Ka, chairman of the Committee for the Control of State Affairs, present the bill on criminal procedures and settlement of cases concerning administrative disputes and accusations.

Answers Questions on Policy

BK171552 Phnom Penh SPK in French 1447 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Phnom Penh, 16 Aug (SPK) — At the National Assembly, Vice Chairman of the Council of Ministers and Minister of Foreign Affairs Hun Sen this afternoon answered several questions of the representatives regarding Kampuchea's foreign policy. The questions concerned relations between the countries of Indochina and ASEAN, the Palestinian question and the agreement on historical waters between Kampuchea and Vietnam.

Answering a representative who asked him to "talk about the reaction of the ASEAN countries to the peace proposals and inititives raised recently at the Kampuchea-Vietnam-Laos foreign ministers conference," the minister said:

The peace initiatives recently proposed by the Kampuchea-Vietnam-Laos foreign ministers conference are very important. They once again clearly confirmed the desire of the three Indochinese people to normalize relations among the Southeast Asian countries in order to reestablish peace and stability in the region. These proposals and initiatives have been widely welcomed by peace-loving public opinion in Southeast Asia and the world as well as by some of ASEAN's prominent politicians.

Following the visit of the Vietnamese foreign minister to four Southeast Asian countries, millions of people of this region and the world's progressive peoples noted and grasped the just position full of good will of the three Indochinese countries. This visit and position have increased the mutual understanding and trend toward dialogue among the countries of the region in conformity with everyone's aspirations.

In contrast, some high personalities in the Thai ruling circles worked up various slanders to falsify the meaning of the proposals and initiatives of the three Indochinese countries. For example, regarding our proposal on the creation of a safety zone along the Kampuchean-Thai border, with no valid grounds they said that "it is the proposal raised 2 years ago on the demilitarized zone" and "if anyone wants to create a safety zone, he should create it along the Kampuchean-Vietnamese border!"

In fact, the three Indochinese had long proposed the creation of a demilitarized zone along the Kampuchean-Thai border, but Thailand had rejected it. Now we propose creating a safety zone along the border of the two countries in which there are only the armed forces of the PRK on the Kampuchean side of the border and only the Royal Armed Forces of Thailand on the Thai side of the border. But Thailand again has rejected it. The Thai authorities claimed that "the threat comes from Kampuchea where Vietnamese troops are stationed along the border of the two countries." But when we proposed the above -- that is, no more Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea inside the safety zone and also no more remnants of the Pol Pot troops and other armed bands of reactionary Khmers on Thai territory inside the same zone — why then did they hastily reject our proposal full of good will?

In fact, the tension at the Kampuchean-Thai border stems from Bangkok's hostile policy regarding the PRK. The remnants of the Pol Pot gang found "sanctuaries" in Thai territory in order to plunder Kampuchean border residents. Thailand is responsible for repeated violations of the airspace and territorial waters of the PRK and many criminal acts committed during the past few years against the Kampuchean people, including the use of toxic chemicals to which many among our people fell victim.

Therefore, all the unfounded assertions, unreality and hostility of the responsible Thai authorities have clearly shown that Bangkok intends to follow the expansionist policy of the Beijing Chinese hegemonists who want to maintain tension along the Thai-Kampuchean border and push the ASEAN countries into confrontation with the PRK and the countries of the Indochinese Peninsula in order to serve their expansionist maneuvers.

This is why Thailand continues to shelter the remnants of the Pol Pot gang and other reactionary forces in its territory, allowing them to conduct sabotage activities against the Kampuchean revolution and prevent the rebirth of the Kampuchean people.

To a question on the declaration of the ASEAN foreign ministers conference held recently in Bangkok, Minister Hun Sen stated: According to the Western press, the ASEAN foreign ministers conference in Bangkok on 7 August issued a declaration demanding the total withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea so that the Kampuchean people can exercise their right to self-determination. This fact shows that:

1. Thailand and some ASEAN countries practice a two-faced policy. The first consists of following an obsolete reactionary policy that we have rejected on many occasions. They continue to serve the expansionist policy of China, in collusion with the U.S. imperialists, and continue to carry out hostile acts against Kampuchea, Vietnam and Laos to sap the revolution of the three Indochinese countries. The second consists of accepting dialogue with the Indochinese countries in order, in reality, to appease world public opinion and that of their peoples who demand reconciliation with the Indochinese countries.

2. The leaders of Thailand and other ASEAN countries are in an endlessly embarrassing situation. In fact, the world's progressive opinion supported the peace initiatives full of good will of the three Indochinese countries, and even opinion in their own countries demands noninterference in Kampuchea's internal affairs which must be settled by the Kampuchean people.

In the same conference, the foreign ministers of the ASEAN countries made a declaration begging for international aid for the benefit of the so-called "Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea" and are trying to protect the genocidal Pol Pot clique.

The Thai leaders must know that they are playing with fire. Currently, Beijing is still using pro-Chinese rebels to conduct subversive acts in ASEAN countries, and many ASEAN personalities themselves have noted that the danger threatening the peace and security of their own countries comes from China. Thus, the creation of a so-called "Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea" and the request for international aid for the benefit of the reactionary Khmers reflect the ignorance of some of ASEAN's ruling circles which pursue a policy incompatible with the reality of Kampuchea and with the interests of the peoples in Southeast Asia as well as the aspirations of their own peoples. This gross interference in the internal affairs of Kampuchea threatens the security of independent and sovereign neighboring countries and will prove to be very dangerous for their own countries. Nothing is funnier than the Thai prime minister's assertion that the creation of the above-mentioned so-called "coalition government" constitutes a strengthening of security for Thailand.

Our people would be very happy to live in peace and establish friendship with the peoples of neighboring countries, particularly with the Thai people. However, they also insist on exercising their right of response and are determined to crush all subversive acts of foreign aggressors against the independence of their fatherland and against their freedom.

As for the attitude of Kampuchea regarding the struggle of the Palestinian people against the current aggression by Israeli Zionists supported by the U.S. imperialists, the minister said: Following the aggression by Israeli Zionists in Lebanon with the support of the U.S. imperialists to annihilate the Palestinian people and other patriotic Lebanese forces, our Foreign Ministry issued a statement vigorously condemning the aggressors and clearly demonstrating that this act of the Israeli Zionists stems from the so-called "strategic cooperation between Tel Aviv and Washington" which is trying to repress the Palestinian people's struggle and bring Lebanon under its domination.

Recently, we received 'Ali Fayad, special envoy of the Palestinian Liberation Front. The inhabitants of Phnom Penh organized a meeting of solidarity in honor of the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples, who are fighting against the Israeli aggressors and U.S. imperialists, and expressed their strong indignation at the genocidal crimes perpetrated against the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples.

Our people and our government acclaim the valiant struggle of the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples and once again express their solidarity and support for the just cause of the Palestinian and Arab peoples against the Israeli Zionists and U.S. imperialists aimed at recovering the sacred right of the Palestinian people and defending the independence, national sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Arab peoples.

Regarding the agreement on the Kampuchea-Vietnam joint historical waters and the decree on Kampuchea's maritime zones, the vice chairman of the Council of Ministers said: The PRK and the SRV decided to create a zone of historical waters to confirm their sovereignty and defend the security and rights of the two countries in the said zone and prevent all violations there. We oppose all violations of our maritime zones and continental shelf. We are, however, ready to negotiate, on the basis of equality and mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, with neighboring countries to settle disputed zones.

KAMPUCHEA SCORES NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC REPORT ON ANGKOR

BK131211 Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian 1300 GMT 11 Aug 82

[KAMPUCHEA commentary: "Who Is Preserving Our National Cultural Heritage and Who Destroyed It?" -- date not given]

[Text] Last July, the Voice of America broadcast an interview with Peter White and Wilbur Garrett excerpted from the NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC magazine for the purpose of duping public opinion concerning the true situation in Kampuchea, interfering in the PRK's internal affairs and opposing the rebirth of the Kampuchean people.

In this interview, Peter White and Wilbur Garrett groundlessly said that the Kampuchean people and the present Kampuchean Government cannot preserve and defend the Angkor temples, which are their national heritage, because of the on-going conflict. These two unreasonable individuals stated that they will make efforts to put on illegal exhibitions of Angkor photographs in Kansas City; Vienna, Austria; and Paris, France, in the near future. They look upon their ill-intentioned acts as a campaign in search of support from various governments for so-called measures to preserve the Angkor temples. They want to transform this area into a region that they call a demilitarized zone under the supervision of an international organization. This maneuver constitutes flagrant interference in the internal affairs of the Kampuchean people.

All humanity knows that the Angkor temples were damaged by U.S. bombs. These temples also suffered serious damage at the hands of the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan clique -- the cheap lackeys of the Beijing Chinese expansionists. They did not even attempt to preserve these temples but instead deliberately damaged them, in particular Angkor Wat. They transformed a number of temples into ox stables and paddy granges. They broke statues notably those in Preah Poan at Angkor Toch. They used temple stones to build bridges, roads and various other works. Particularly badly pillaged were the Prasat Snoeng temple in Battambang Province and the Prasat Preah Theat temple in Kompong Thom Province. Stones from these temples were used to build roads and embankments.

They burned and destroyed old texts and treaties. These acts of destruction were aimed at completely demolishing our national tradition and customs. The Angkor temple complex became deserted and engulfed by the jungle. A number of old temples -- such as Bayon and Preah Khan -- were partly damaged by trees cut down by the Pol Pot gangs. These foolish acts seriously hurt the Kampuchean people and all of mankind. We very much regret such actions. These barbarous acts represent serious insults to the value of our national culture and to the conscience of all mankind.

The NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC magazine also raised the issue of the damage done to the Angkor temples but it does not acknowledge that the main cause of this destruction was the war of aggression waged by the U.S. imperialists, and in particular the genocidal Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan clique which implemented a cultural revolution in conformity with foolish Maoist theory. This is a genuinely reactionary act by the NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC magazine, which seems to be imbued with a criminal desire to obstruct the restoration of our national culture. In particular, this magazine wants to distort the ties of solidarity between Kampuchea and Vietnam, which are the major factor in our revolution's victory.

After being freed from the danger of barbarous genocide and although the Kampuchean fatherland was facing serious obstacles and difficulties, the PRK Government paid great attention to restoring our national cultural heritage. We promptly organized an administrative council to examine and closely control our national cultural heritage, which was damaged by the genocidal regime. Due to these efforts, the Angkor Conservation Organization was immediately put into action to begin repairs and to oppose a number of vandals who had been committing crimes against our national cultural heritage.

In 1980, our government issued a decree law on the defense of the national heritage and national cultural estates. This decree emphasized the necessity of close cooperation between various ministries, offices, military units, local state powers and our people in order to protect and preserve our national cultural heritage. In the same year, we founded the Angkor Conservation Organization, comprising more than 100 employees and cadres. Guards were assigned to watch over and protect these temples. They also take care of important sites, such as the Angkor Wat temple, Bayon and, in particular, the Angkor complex.

Moreover, our government contacted experts from various friendly countries, such as the Soviet Union and India. It also appealed to UNESCO for assistance in the conservation and repair of the Angkor temples which are the heritage of all mankind. All of this clearly shows that the PRK Government conscientiously sought to conserve our national cultural heritage.

We reiterate that our genuine revolutionary state power is presently controlling the whole territory of the People's Republic of Kampuchea. Therefore, without the permission of the state power, any photographic exhibitions or interviews on the Angkor temples are considered null and void and constitute criminal acts.

We completely reject any attempt to create a so-called demilitarized zone in the Angkor area under the supervision of an international organization, because this constitutes interference in the internal affairs of the PRK -- an independent and sovereign state.

Facts clearly show that the PRK Government is capable of defending and conserving the Angkor temples. Since the liberation of our territory many national and foreign visitors have visited the Angkor temples safely.

NATION REVIEW: USSR MAY BE REVIEWING SRV POLICY

[Text] Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila will tomorrow fly to Manila for talks with his Philippine counterpart Gen Carlos Romulo on the Kampuchean situation and the planned visit of Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach to that country, informed sources said yesterday. Describing the visit as a "routine exchange of views," an informed source who requested anonymity said the trip was arranged at the invitation of the Philippine foreign minister.

Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach, who has already toured three ASEAN countries of Singapore, Malaysia and Thailand, is tentatively scheduled to visit Indonesia and the Philippines in October. The source said that the planned visit of the Vietnamese minister to the Philippines would be among the topics to be raised during Sitthi's visit to the country to this week. Sitthi is due to return here this Friday, according to another source.

In another related development, a senior Soviet official earlier this month toured the three ASEAN countries of Thailand, Malaysia, and Singapore to sound out the opinions of the three countries over the Kampuchean problem and the relations between ASEAN and the Soviet Union. During his separate talks with Thai senior officials here, the director general of the Southeast Asian Affairs Department of the Soviet Union stood firm that the presence of the Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea would not pose a threat to Thailand, according to informed sources.

A source said that the senior Soviet official did not "essentially' suggest any shift in the Soviet policy on its support for the Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea. However, he said that the trip, which was his second to Thailand, might indicate that the Soviet Union might be in the process of reviewing its policy on Vietnam. The senior Soviet official, who is of the ambassadorial rank, also suggested that he would continue visiting Thailand on a regular basis, probably once a year, according to another informed source.

Some officials believe that the Soviet Union is now bearing an increasing pressure from the economic grouping of East Europe countries (COMECON) which has been sharing a burden to prop up the ailing economy of Vietnam. The Soviet Union has wanted to improve its relations with ASEAN, but the non-communist grouping has stood firm that the relations would be improved only after the country changes its stance on the Kampuchean issue. Thai senior officials who met the senior Soviet visitor included Undersecretary of State for Foreign Affairs M.R. Kasem, S. Kasemsi, and Director General of the Political Department Asa Sarasin.

NHAN DAN PRAISES INDONESIA ON NATIONAL DAY

OW170807 Hanoi VNA in English 0726 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, August 17 -- NHAN DAN today praises the achievements recorded by the Republic of Indonesia since it became independent 37 years ago.

Indonesia has striven to build a new economy and has rid itself of the state of underdevelopment resulting from the 350 years of Dutch domination, the paper says. It notes that through three Repelitas (five-year development plans), the republic has tried to achieve three important objectives: self-sufficiency in food, development of key industries and increase in exports. Feeding a population of 150 million is not a simple matter, and Indonesia considers the development of agriculture a primary task, NHAN DAN says. Thanks to this effort, the paper notes, the import of food has dropped year after year.

NHAN DAN continues: Industry is encouraged. Many rubber, coffee and tea plantations have been restored and expanded... Indonesia is planning to regain its former position as the world's leading pepper producer, while developing the production of mineral oil and gas, the chemical industry, mining, and the production of consumer goods. The Indonesian Government also pays great attention to boosting exports.

In conclusion NHAN DAN says that the public in Indonesia is growing interested in making Southeast Asia a zone of peace and stability and in promoting economic cooperation among the nations in the region, with a view to establishing a new economic order in the world.

RADIO REPORTS ON LIFE IN REEDUCATION CAMP

BK171425 Hanoi International Service in English 1000 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] Although there had been no bloodbath, nor any revenge on those who had worked for the Saigon regime in South Vietnam, many are still wondering how these Saigon collaborators are treated, especially in reeducation camps.

Today, in this edition of "Here and There in Vietnam" you will hear our correspondent's report on the daily life at a reeducation camp in the province of Quang Nam-Danang in the central coast.

They had worked as police officers, informers and other dirty jobs for the olden regime of Saigon. Some were officials of anticommunist parties. All were notorious for their crimes against the people of South Vietnam, and now they are inmates of a reeducation camp, called T-154 by Vietnamese Government officials, located in the province of Quang Nam-Danang.

Before South Vietnam was liberated in 1975, everybody in this region knew (Le Thi Doi), a notorious woman, and her family. She lived in the village of (Ky Chung) in the district of Tam Ky. Her house, hidden behind an impenetrable bamboo grove, used to be the launching place of mopping up operations and mass arrests. It was also where many patriots were detained and tortured. (Doi) has three sons: (Nguyen Vinh Lieu), (Nguyen Vinh Mang) and (Nguyen Vinh Manh). All had collaborated with Saigon police and were notorious as the bullies of the province.

After 1975 (Doi) and her sons were brought there. They were not tortured or humiliated. They got time to repent of their past. After spending some years at the Camp T-154, they were allowed to return home.

Walking along the lane shaded by coconut and jackfruit trees to the crop field and fishpond, we had a feeling of visiting a farm. The only difference is created by the sports ground where inmates can play football and volleyball. There is also a common room for social meetings and a classroom. I visited the camp carpenter's workshop and was strongly impressed by the durability of wooden articles made by the inmates. I was told that the camp manager also employed trainers of several crafts such as making of bamboo articles, brick and tilemaking, conical hat making, etc. This makes the camp a school providing both education and job teaching, and testifies to the humane policy of the Government of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam toward those who had worked with the other side of the past.

GHAZALI DISCUSSES KAMPUCHEA WITH ROK COUNTERPART

BK171113 Kuala Lumpur International Service in English 0600 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs, Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie, said the formation of the government of Democratic Kampuchea [as heard] has led to very positive results in line with ASEAN's efforts in providing a political solution. The fact that Prince Norodom Sihanouk is able to visit Romania and Yugoslavia is encouraging. In addition, there has been overwhelming support from Kampucheans to refugee camps and inside Kampuchea. The support given by the people to the Government of Democratic Kampuchea is an indication of the way the Kampuchean question is going to be solved. Tan Sri Ghazali was speaking to newsmen after meeting the South Korean Foreign Minister, Mr Yi Pom-sok, in the state of Penang.

INDONESIAN PRESIDENT'S REMARKS ON CGDK VIEWED

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] President Suharto of Indonesia yesterday stated that Vietnam must withdraw all its troops from Kampuchea as they were not wanted by the Kampucheans. Four years of military occupation should have taught Vietnam that it cannot occupy a neighboring country without suffering the consequences.

Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea have little or no support from the Kampuchean people. They are reportedly sufering from a high incidence of malaria and the desertion rate of its soldiers should prove to be alarming to the leaders in Hanoi. The Vietnamese have so far failed to convince any nation, including many communist countries, about the reasons for militarily invading Kampuchea, stationing a garrison of 200,000 troops in that nation and, according to Prince Norodom Sihanouk, launching a systematic campaign to Vietnamize the Kampuchean national character.

The prince had also alleged that today it is the Vietnamese who are catching fish at Kampuchea's Tonle Sap, which at one time provided much of the protein need of the Kampucheans.

President Suharto also reminded Hanoi that the presence of foreign troops in Kampuchea was a clear violation of the principles of good neighborliness. The Vietnamese troop presence will also deter the Kampucheans from determining their government democratically. Indonesia, together with other ASEAN countries, wishes to see Kampuchea a sovereign and peaceful state. As a sovereign state, it was the people of Kampuchea who had the right to determine their own government and their own future without interference from outside. It was within this context that ASEAN supported Prince Sihanouk's coalition government.

Yesterday the Malaysian foreign minister, Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie, pointedly reminded the Vietnamese to view the support gained by Prince Sihanouk government in a positive way. It is the direction from where a political solution will emerge and this would ultimately mean the assumption of power in Phnom Penh by Prince Sihanouk's government.

The Coalition Democratic Kampuchean Government is a solution to the problem of finding a government in Kampuchea that will be accepted by all Kampucheans. It also provides the opportunity for Hanoi to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea honorably. The people of Kampuchea have already demonstrated their rejection of the puppet Heng Samrin government and the Vietnamese presence in their midst. Vietnam should not isolate itself further by the current resurgence of support for Prince Sihanouk -- a man who is revered and loved by everyone in Kampuchea.

Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie stated yesterday that ASEAN was happy with the positive results achieved thus far by the coalition government. For example, it was encouraging that Prince Sihanouk could visit Romania and Yugoslavia. Several nations within the nonaligned group are also attempting to ensure his attendance at next month's summit meeting of heads of state and government of nonaligned nations. Prince Sihanouk will also attend next month's meeting of the UN General Assembly where the question of accreditation of the coalition government is expected to be discussed.

Domestically, all Kampucheans are aware that Prince Sihanouk has launched his government on Kampuchean soil recently. Some 400 troops from the Heng Samrin forces had defected to his side. Thus, the tide of history in Kampuchea is beginning to change in favor of those who support Kampuchea's integrity and honor and those who wish to see an independent, proud and free Kampuchea.

GHAZALI TO ATTEND ISLAMIC CONFERENCE, VISIT MALI

BK171544 Kuala Lumpur Domestic Service in English 1130 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs, Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie, said Malaysia will persuade members of the Organization of Islamic Conference (OIC) to seek a solution to the Lebanese crisis resulting from Israeli aggression. He will head the eight-member delegation to the conference to be held in the capital of Niger from Sunday to the 27th of this month.

Tan Sri Ghazali said Malaysia is dissatisfied with the big powers in not assisting and preventing Israel of invading Lebanon. So far only the PLO has been asked to leave Lebanon and no move has been made to press Israel to withdraw from the country. The minister was speaking to newsmen in Kuala Lumpur.

The OIC will seek ways for the reconciliation of Iran and Iraq. He said in line with this Malaysia will forward a proposal asking both parties to respond to the call for peace and stability in the Islamic world. Other matters to be discussed include Afghanistan and the Kampuchea question.

Before the conference, Tan Sri Ghazali will pay an official visit to Mali for 3 days. He leaves tomorrow. He will have discussions with his counterpart on bilateral matters, including the African refugee problem. Tan Sri Ghazali will also brief his counterpart on the latest situation in Southeast Asia, particularly the Kampuchean question and ASEAN's concept. The minister will also donate 10,000 tons of rice to Mali as Malaysia's contribution to drought victims in that country. He added, Malaysia will also consider offering technical assistance to Mali like fresh water culture, farming and resettlement schemes.

MAHATHIR ADDRESSES MALAYSIAN INDIAN CONGRESS

BK150831 Kuala Lumpur International Service in English 0600 GMT 15 Aug 82

[Text] Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir Mohamed says Malaysians should possess high ideals. This will contribute toward making the country great and on par with other developed nations.

Opening a Malaysian Indian Congress [MIC] political symposium in Kuala Lumpur, the prime minister said high ideals would force the people into a progressive society, both in the material sense and in motivation. Malaysians would then be respected wherever they go.

Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir also spoke on the quality of a good leader. Leaders, he said, should heed the needs of their followers. Constant contacts between the leader and his followers must be maintained. They should follow the middle line of action and be ready to suffer unpopularity. The decision of the majority must be accepted, but this did not mean the minority should be completely neglected.

In Malaysian politics, the winner does not necessarily take all. The minority still has a say in all matters. However, the people should accept the establishment as it is.

Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir described Malaysian politics as unique. Nowhere in the world did leaders associate with their people as much as in Malaysia.

OLALIA SAYS KMU WILL PURSUE 'MILITANT STRATEGY'

OW171513 Tokyo KYODO in English 0558 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Manila, Aug 17, KYODO -- A detained Filipino labor leader said Tuesday his radical group will pursue a militant strategy despite government efforts to demoralize workers by arresting him.

Felixberto Olalia, Sr., 79, told reporters during his arraignment on charges of inciting rebellion and sedition that the 150,000-strong May 1 Movement (KMU) which he heads never planned any terrorist activities.

Olalia, who has been in the labor movement since 1920, said his detention conditions are worse than those during his earlier prison stints -- three years for rebellion in 1951 and several months when martial law was imposed in 1972. He said he is jailed with common criminals. He faces an 18 year jail term if convicted.

Documents Seized

HK180303 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 16 Aug 82 pp 1, 14

[Text] Subversives are planning to burn down the oil refinery and the export processing zone in Mariveles, Bataan, and destroy electric plants and Metro Manila's water supply in Ipo and La Mesa dams during their nationwide bombings next month, intelligence authorities said yesterday. They released documents seized earlier by military agents, which pinpointed the subversives' targets.

Other targets, they said, are the export processing complex in Mactan, Cebu, and five-star hotels in Metro Manila, Cebu, Zamboanga, and Baguio cities.

The documents were among those confiscated by security agents in a raid on the residence of labor leader Felixberto Olalia, Sr. and his offices in Quezon City. Olalia, who was arrested Friday night, was one of the labor leaders tagged by the military as having a hand in the plan to stage strikes and other mass actions next month.

Another document seized from Olalia's house, military authorities said, showed Olalia's "long history of involvement in the Communist Party of the Philippines." The document is his bio-data which Olalia personally prepared and signed, the military said.

According to the military, materials seized in the raids on Olalia's house and offices filled about one six-by-six truck. They said the materials include books, pamphlets, periodicals, and banners containing slogans calling on the people to rise against the government. Among the books was one entitled "Patnubay Para Sa mga Kadre at mga Kasapi ng Partido Komunista ng Philipinas," and works of Lenin, tracts of Stalin, Ho Chi Minh and Kim Il-song.

Brig. Gen. Hamilton A. Dimaya, armed forces judge advocate general, who headed military lawyers in filing the charges, said there was clear evidence of Olalia's continuous and consistent effort to incite the people to overthrow the government.

Marcos: Rights Will Be Upheld

[Excerpts] President Marcos has assured that civil rights will be upheld in the crackdown on those who would foment sedition and rebellion. The president said there would be no oppressive use of authority, even against persons or groups plotting to stage nationwide strikes, bombings and assassinations next month. The full details of that story from (Bert Asuke):

[Begin recording] In a statement, the president said that only those who have committed the crimes of sedition, subversion, rebellion and those who have violated laws on the security of the state have to fear the full force of the law. Even those who are guilty will be given ample protection of their individual rights, no matter how much they have abused the freedoms of Philippine democracy, the chief executive emphasized.

The president's statement was issued in the wake of the arrest and detention of Felixberto Olalia, Sr, chairman of the Kilusang Mayo Uno (KMU), which has been identified as a front for the Communist Party of the Philippines and its military arm, the New People's Army.

In his statement, the president said there was no need for alarm among the citizens in the current campaign to curb the [words indistinct]. He assured everybody that the constitutional processes and human rights of every citizen will be protected by the government and by the president. [end recording]

In the meantime the lawyers of labor leader Olalia have asked for more time to submit a counter-affidavit for their client. Olalia was brought to the Quezon City fiscal's office yesterday to present his side of the rebellion and defend himself against sedition charges filed against him by military lawyers. Olalia's defense also asked the court to return to their client the truckload of alleged subversive documents seized during his arrest. There is also a petition filed by Olalia's son with the Supreme Court, asking it to order the military to justify Olalia's detention at Camp Crame. The high tribunal ordered the military to present Olalia in court on August (?31) and explain why he was being detained.

Meanwhile, Metrocom Chief Prospero Olivas has denied reports that the Metrocom sealed off the offices of Olalia's Kilusang Mayo Uno headquarters in the raid. He also denied that 13 other KMU leaders and members were arrested and detained.

Following developments, PC [Philippine Constabulary] Chief Fidel Ramos cautioned the military to be extra careful in dealing with labor leaders and members implicated in the plot to stage disruptive nationwide strikes. He said they should see to it that their rights under the new labor code are fully protected even in the toughest of crackdowns against their subversive schemes.

FORMER SENATOR DIOKNO VIEWS POST-MARCOS ERA

[Excerpts] Manila, Aug 17, KYODO -- A U.S.-supported military government after President Ferdinand Marcos is a foregone conclusion, a leading member of the moderate Philippine opposition said Tuesday.

Former Senator Jose W. Diokno added that Mrs. Imelda Marcos, powerful wife of the president, may immediately take over with military support, but "she cannot last half as long as her husband" because she does not have his political capability.

"I don't think Mr. Marcos can last very much longer," Diokno said, citing demands for the president's resignation last month by Cardinal Jaime Sin, whom Diokno described as a representative of the economic elite and conservatives in this predominantly Catholic country.

Diokno, 60, is a former secretary of justice who was imprisoned by Marcos for two years after the imposition of martial law in 1972. He now heads a nation-wide group of lawyers engaged in human rights work and has avoided joining any partisan political group.

Diokno predicted a worsening national and world economy and declining American support for the Marcos government, but he added that Marcos is a fighter who will not step down willingly. "It's wishful thinking," Diokno said of the possibility of the president's resignation, explaining that the current crackdown on militant labor leaders is part of a plan to crush the nationalist opposition with force.

Diokno said the outlawed Communist Party of the Philippines (CCP) and its military arm, the New People's Army (NPA), as well as other rebel groups are incapable of taking over in the immediate future. The next government, he said, will necessarily be like the Marcos government and will surely involve the military.

The former senator explained that there still are "many good people" in the military who would back a freely elected government, and that any new government must take a more independent stand toward the U.S. Government, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

PEOPLE'S FORUM DISCUSSES PELAEZ SHOOTING

HK170255 Davao City PEOPLE'S FORUM in English 27-28 Jul 82 p 2

["Window Shopping" column by Aurelio A. Pena: "Pelaez To Resign From KBL and Join Opposition?"]

[Text] Some weeks ago, during a seminar on the coco levy at the Pope Pius Center in Manila, Assemblyman Emmanuel Pelaez was reported to have said that he was having trouble reconciling his differences with some party members of the Kilusang Bagong Lipunan [KBL] and hinted that he might resign his party post and join the opposition some time next year. If this happens, it is possible the State Minister Pelaez could turn out a formidable foe against the incumbent Philippine president should he decide to run for president in the coming presidential elections.

Even former Senators Benigno Aquino, Raul Manglapus, Salvador Laurel or Reuben Canoy would have a hard time going through a presidential campaign, with Pelaez on the line-up.

It seems Pelaez, through all these many months fighting to abolish the coco levy and dismantle the well-entrenched and well-organized coconut monopoly, had managed to build up a "saviour" image for thousands of coconut farmers who still haven't got a complete grasp of the finer points of the entire Unicom [United Coconut Mills] program.

It is a pity, though, that the opposition thinks of him as a "fake" and questioned his motives in many instances. Of course it is now common knowledge that all the full-page Unicom ads one comes across in many newspapers explaining the coco programs' many 'benefits' are direct responses to Pelaez' many denunciations against the coco levy.

Among his peers in the Marcos government, the KBL and even his compadres in Cagayan de Oro, the state minister strikes out as a lonely man with a lonely fight which he described here in Davao sometime ago, as a "fight to the last."

It would be very, very unfair, however, to automatically link his attempted assassination last week to his current political and economic differences, because, as Marcos put it recently, it is possible MNLF terrorists could be "responsible" for the ambush, in their bid to attract attention of the Islamic Conference Organization which meets next month in Algeria. However, at the back of the minds of many, many people, it is altogether possible Pelaez poses a real threat to a certain number of strong interest groups who look at the state minister as a stumbling block to many plans and programs which must be pursued right to the very end.

It is very hard to believe, as many said after the assassination attempt, that Pelaez has "no enemies" and does not deserve to die this way. If the state minister has no enemies, at least many do not like what he's doing and the extent to which he has attacked certain powerful interests. Even the Philippine press will not even touch him with a ten-foot pole on his comments against these interests. Now it took an attempted assassination to put Pelaez on the front pages of our national papers.

To clear up all these doubts now bothering so many people's minds, it is best for the National Bureau of Investigation [NBI] to dig deep into this attempted assassination case, not just to simply "identify and arrest the ambushers" of Pelaez, (as the Manila Metrocom puts it) but to trace up the entire conspiracy right to the very people who masterminded it.

The credibility of the government here is at stake, and Marcos can do no less than to personally see that this case is solved the earliest possible time. The attempted assassination does not look to many, as an ordinary crime that adds up the daily crime statistics of Manila, so it is very imperative that a thorough and impartial investigation be made by the NBI to help erase many insinuations and suspicions that only divide this country farther.

INDUSTRIES 'SUFFERING' FROM HIGH INTEREST RATES

[Text] The problem brought about by high interest rates and collateral-conscious financial system was the most common complaint aired by industries during last Tuesday's annual review of the financial system which was conducted by the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry (PCCI). Reeling under the impact of this problem are industries engaged in exportation, logging, tannery, chemical production and other manufacturing concerns. Leaders of these industries said that against a backdrop of increasing inventories and weakening demand, the problem aggravated the already difficult financial positions of many companies and caused the closure of several plants and factories.

The battery manufacturing industry complained that the high cost of money has caused untold hardship to its export trade, adding that the problem has provided competitors in the export market with a very important advantage. The garment industry commented that the high interest rates for medium- and long-term credit facilities are "prohibitively high" compared to the industry's marginal performance. The same industry said that at present, it still ships out its products even at a loss so it can hold on to its clients and sustain operations. The interest rate problem, it pointed out, is discouraging several companies from expanding their operations. Newcomers in the industry, on the other hand, end up in more serious financial difficulties due to the interest rate problem. The garment industry also observed that due to past scandals, the banks have become collateral-conscious, making it difficult for the industry to obtain much needed short- and medium-term loans.

The Philippine Wood Products Association (PWPA) said that logging firms are in a desperate situation resulting from the lack of soft loans for their industrial tree plantation projects. Unless soft loans are made available to the logging firms, PWPA said, the timber license of each company "stands to be cancelled for failure to comply with an executive order requiring licenses to convert up to 30 percent of their concession areas into industrial tree plantations." The Philippine Steel Rolling Mills Association reported that the high interest rates have forced the closure of plants and have withheld infusion of new investments.

The Chemical Industries Association of the Philippines said that many companies are suffering from illiquidity problems caused by, among others, increasing uncollected receivables. It said there is an urgent need for suitable long-term financing instruments which would take the place of short-term instruments which are being used to finance long-term projects.

The Tanners Association of the Philippines said that the tannery industry is "in deep trouble" caused by the high cost of money, spiralling prices of rawhides and energy. It urged the government to study ways and means "of reducing interest rates on loans for the industry or subsidize a portion of the loan interest".

[Editorial: "The Return of Backsliders"]

[Text] When the national leadership effected a series of purges in the government service years ago, the country found sufficient reason to rejoice over the move, notwithstanding some kinks that characterized it. Many thought that the purges would instill some degree of discipline in the government service, or that the public officialdom would take the cue in favor of improved service.

Unfortunately for the citizenry, government offices today are teeming with men and women whose lust for power and money far exceeds their love for public service. There is no doubt that even the most suspect offices have some honest and efficient workers, but one cannot simply disclaim the fact that many offices have not only retained a number of "bad eggs" but have reemployed those who had been purged earlier. As expected, the unseen hand of politics has again played its deceptive role in the hiring or retention of hopelessly undesirable officials and employees.

There, too, is the case of workers who have transformed themselves, wittingly or otherwise, from dedicated and honest public servants into influential, power-hungry, cash-conscious and inept members of the government service. Popularly known as the country's "backsliders", these persons have been living high and acting like leeches that suck human blood in order to survive.

A thorough and serious study of the situation by the Civil Service Commission is in order, if only to prove that there is no substitute to true public service.

The "leeches" and the backsliders, many of whom enjoy protection by influential men in the government, have to go. The country can be better run without them.

SAKURAUCHI URGES DIPLOMACY ON TEXTBOOK ISSUE

OW190453 Tokyo KYODO in English 0401 GMT 19 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 19 KYODO -- Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi, reiterating his view on the current school textbook controversy, said Thursday the matter should be settled with China and South Korea based on existing diplomatic agreements. In a 1972 Sino-Japanese statement and 1965 Japan-South Korea joint communique under which diplomatic relations were restored, Japan expressed regret over activities before and during World War II in the two neighboring countries.

Sakurauchi told a meeting of the House of Councillors Foreign Affairs Committee that correction naturally must be made if there are facts running counter to the "self-reflection" expressed by Japan in the two normalization agreements.

Sakurauchi's views were expressed in discussions conducted by the committee on the dispute with China and South Korea over alleged "distorted" textbook accounts on Japanese activities in the two countries before and during World War II. The foreign minister said the government planned to deal with the controversy by fully taking into account the severe criticism expressed by China and South Korea that Japan's actions represented "aggression." He expressed the belief the understanding of Beijing and Seoul could be obtained if detailed explanations were made based on the fact Japan renounced war under its postwar constitution.

Officials of the Education Ministry also told the committee that the ministry could not agree to changing the contents of the textbooks but revealed that it was seriously making a study for a solution while maintaining the present textbook authorization system.

Meanwhile, the Liberal-Democratic Party's Foreign Affairs Research Council and Foreign Affairs Committee agreed Thursday that the government should make efforts to settle the textbook dispute at an early date. At a joint meeting of chairman and vice chairman of the council and committee, strong views were expressed that the demands of China and South Korea on revision of the "distorted" textbook accounts represented interference in Japan's domestic affairs and that the government should not compromise on the matter.

But views also were expressed that corrections should be made by placing emphasis on diplomatic relations and to prevent Japan from becoming an "orphan" in Asia.

As a result of the conflicting views expressed, Zentaro Kosaka, chairman of the Foreign Affairs Research Council, proposed the adoption of unified opinion calling on the government to work for an early solution by taking into account Japan's national interests and diplomatic relations.

The LDP Education Affairs Committees also held a joint meeting Wednesday and decided to work out measures to solve the dispute within the framework of the present textbook screening system.

FOREIGN MINISTRY TO ENLARGE INTELLIGENCE NETWORK

OW190035 Tokyo KYODO in English 0018 GMT 19 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 19, KYODO -- The Foreign Ministry is planning to strengthen its information-gathering and analysis network to cope with the fast changing world situation, ministry sources said Thursday.

The ministry's plans call for establishment of two new divisions under the Research and Planning Department to take direct charge of intelligence-gathering and policy research. The ministry plans to ask for budgetary appropriations in fiscal 1983 for 38 intelligence-gathering posts, including 16 senior assistants for security, the sources said.

Information-gathering at the Foreign Ministry is mainly carried out by the policy planning and the analysis divisions under the Research and Planning Department.

But Japanese foreign-policy makers have pointed to the necessity of beefing of Japan's intelligence network to provide sorely-needed information to coordinate the country's conduct of foreign affairs.

Under ministry plans, the intelligence division will be responsible for the setting-up of a central computerized data bank with the ability to store and provide information 24 hours a day. The intelligence division will also be in charge of directing information-gathering activities in Japan's diplomatic missions, and will also carry out long-term policy research for the ministry, the sources said.

They will negotiate quotas for fiscal 1982, ending March 31, at future talks, they added. The two sides agreed to set the fiscal 1981 quota for raw silk at 11,500 bales (each bale containing 60 kilograms) and that for silk yarn at 4,000 bales. XINHUA REPORT ON PRC-U.S. COMMUNIQUE CITED

[Text] Beijing, August 18 (KCNA) -- The spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China made a statement on August 17 on the China-U.S. joint communique on the settlement of the issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, according to a XINHUA report.

Noting that the Government of the People's Republic of China and the Government of the United States of America have reached agreement on the question of United States sale of arms to Taiwan and the two sides have released the joint communique simultaneously on August 17, it stresses that the United States' sale of arms to Taiwan is an issue which affects China's sovereignty. It says:

The joint communique has laid down the principles and steps by which the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan should be settled.

The joint communique reaffirms the principles of respect for each others' sovereignty and territorial integrity and non-interference in each other's internal affairs. Both sides also emphatically state that these principles continue to govern all aspects of their relations.

It further says: The U.S. arms sales to Taiwan should have been terminated altogether long ago. But considering that this is an issue left over by history, the Chinese Government, while upholding the principles, has agreed to settle it step by step.

The U.S. side has committed that, as the first step, its arms sales to Taiwan will not exceed, either in qualitative or in quantitative terms, the level of those supplied in recent years since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries, and that they will be gradually reduced, leading to a final resolution of this issue over a period of time. The final resolution referred to here certainly implies that the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan must be completely terminated over a period of time.

In the joint communique, the Chinese Government reiterates in clear-cut terms its position that "the question of Taiwan is China's internal affair."

The statement stresses: What is important is that the relevant provisions of the joint communique are implemented in earnest, so that the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan can be resolved thoroughly at an early date.

VRPR CONDEMNS CHON'S REMARKS TO PRESS IN KENYA

SK190716 (Clandestine) Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in Korean to South Korea 1000 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] Amid the rising condemnation at home and abroad of the junkets to four African nations and Canada, Chon Tu-hwan arrived in Kenya on 17 August and uttered ridiculous gibberish to camouflage his shameful appearance with a masquerade.

At those talks, which were hurriedly set up after his arrival, he said words such as the struggle against colonialism, the proposal for the national reunification and so on. And, in exchanging greetings with the president of that country, he spoke English and behaved inappropriately, surprising those who were present. We cannot but say that this was an absurdity of the military hooligan and colonial puppet who has no sense of disgrace and humiliation.

Above all, it was shameless gibberish that he babbled about the experience in the struggle against colonialism and so on. As the world knows, today's South Korea is a total colony that has no sovereignty or independence and is under the complete subjugation of the United States. It is none but the United States that controls the domestic and foreign policies of the South Korean Government as well as its economy. At the same time, it is none but the U.S. aggressors who exercise the prerogative of supreme command in South Korea. This is a fait accompli that everyone knows.

As for the South Korean regimes, the past regimes of Syngman Rhee and Pak Chong-hui and the present military regime of Chon Tu-hwan, all were or has been fabricated by the United States without exception, and were the puppets and is the puppet, acting at the direction of the White House and the U.S. ambassador in South Korea. Accordingly, the past regimes of South Korea have been and the present South Korean regime is a tool for the implementation of the U.S. policy of aggression and nothing more than a camouflage to conceal the colonial rule of the United States.

In fact, the puppet South Korea established by the U.S. imperialists is entirely identical to the puppet Manchurian state that was established in the northeast region of China under the military occupation of the Japanese imperialists. It was not by chance that the Washington POST of the United States called the South Korean Government an illusory image created to look as if it had independence under the domination of the United States.

The colonial puppet who considers the flunkeyist worship of the United States and the dependence on the United States as his credo and maintains his dirty life with the protection of his U.S. masters dared to babble about the struggle against colonialism. This is like a prostitute preaching on virginity. His gibberish about the struggle against colonialism is nothing more than a trick aimed at embellishing South Korea-- the historically deep-rooted U.S. colony -- and concealing the ugly nature of the colonial puppet.

In Kenya, Chon Tu-hwan also reiterated the worn-out deceptive reunification slogan. This, too, is ridiculous gibberish. As long as the United States continues the occupation of South Korea and persists in the colonial rule and the schemes for two Koreas, and as long as its stooges promote anticommunism and North-South confrontation, the gibberish about the dialogue for reunification is something like howling at the moon.

Chon Tu-hwan's gibberish in Kenya was nothing but a recitation of the scenario written by his U.S. masters and a last-ditch effort to extricate himself from the isolation and rejection at home and abroad. With such clumsy tricks, Chon Tu-hwan is trying to extricate himself from the daily worsening isolation at home and abroad. This is, however, a useless attempt. Our masses will not be deceived by the tricks of the Chon Tu-hwan ring but will stage an even more resolute struggle against it.

KCNA ATTACKS CHON AS SEEKING PERMANENT DIVISION

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] Pyongyang, August 18 (KCNA) -- The splittist, flunkeyist and treacherous nature of Chon Tu-hwan finds salient expression above all in begging for the U.S. imperialists' permanent occupation of South Korea. The U.S. imperialists are the main obstacle to the reunification of our country.

Chon Tu-hwan is the dirty flunkeyist traitor. As soon as he grabbed the puppet power, he called on his master across the ocean and asked the U.S. imperialists to revoke their "troop pullout plan" and keep aggression forces in South Korea for his "protection", saying that South Korea is "the defence line of Japan and the United States in the Pacific region."

Appointing the former chief of the secretariat of "Chongwadae" as "ambassador" to the United Nations, he babbled: We should share the destiny with the United States at any cost. Even if we are called puppets, we should prevent the U.S. troops pullout from South Korea. The continuation of division is the only way for us to live with the United States.

As he is such a despicable flunkeyist quisling, Chon Tu-hwan is dead set against the peaceful reunification of the country, inciting confrontation with the DPRK and keying up the tension on the plea of "threat of southward invasion," following the "two Koreas" plot and aggressive policy of the U.S. imperialist master.

He is begging larger quantity of weapons and equipment of the U.S. imperialist master. He introduced into South Korea military equipment and weapons worth 160 million dollars in the fiscal 1981 and plans to ship in more of them in the fiscal 1982.

What cannot be overlooked particularly in the Chon Tu-hwan military fascist clique's war moves to bar the independent and peaceful reunification of the country is that together with the U.S. imperialist aggressors, it is more frantically staging war exercises in a simulated attack on the DPRK.

A typical instance is the "Team Spirit 82," the "largest war exercises ever in history," which was held for a long period this year with the mobilisation of more armed forces than ever before.

The splittist nature of the traitor Chon Tu-hwan is seen with increasing clarity in brutally suppressing and slaughtering patriotic people, youth and students of South Korea who oppose U.S. imperialism and demand independence and national reunification.

The number of progressive youth and students arrested and imprisoned by the fascist thugs for 450 odd days after the "October incident" in 1979 was more than 56,180 and the number of patriots who were sentenced to death at secret military trial in Kwangju alone reportedly exceeded 200.

Extremely frightened by the fighting spirit against U.S. imperialism and for independence and national reunification which mounted sharply among the South Korean people after the Kwangju incident in particular, the fascist clique is cracking down more ferociously upon patriotic youth and students, people and democratic figures.

It reportedly fabricated over 200 anti-communist cases to suppress patriotic youth, students and people.

The traitor Chon Tu-hwan is craftily wearing the mask of "unification" to deceive public opinion and cover up his flunkeyist, treacherous and splittist nature.

But the South Korean people who see through the nature of Chon Tu-hwan, the pro-American flunkeyist and traitor, will fight more persistently against the U.S. imperialists and their stooges under the banner of anti-U.S. imperialism, independence and national reunification.

VRPR CALLS KIM CHONG-IL 'GREAT NATION'S FATHER'

SK181032 (Clandestine) Voice of the Revolutionary Party for Reunification in Korean to South Korea 1000 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Mailman's article from "Today's Feature" program]

[Excerpts] Even though I had not walked much, the sweat was running down. I washed my hands in a stream and sat down beside it to take a rest. I could hear the murmur of a conversation somewhere near me.

"Brother, the general is now 70 years old, isn't he?"

"That is right. This year marks his 70th birthday."

The first speaker seemed to be about 10 years old and the second seemed to be around 13 years old.

"Then the general is a great old man," said the younger brother.

"Sun-nim, look at the sun in the sky. Do you think the sun gets old as time passes?"

"How can it age?"

"Of course not. As the sun burns forever, so the great general extending the greatest love to the masses is the sun of mankind who is ageless. For this reason, our masses always call the general the fatherly general."

"Fatherly general!" shouted the younger brother.

I felt like standing up and exchanging pleasantries with them, but I did not want to interrupt them. I thought I seemed to grasp the genuine meaning of the term "father" then.

When I was about to enter the gate of the old man Kim's, two aged people, including old man Kim, were exchanging conversations.

"How old is the dear leader this year?" asked an old man next to Mr Kim.

"He is 40 years old this year," answered Mr Kim and went on to say: "He is so young, but he is advancing, shouldering the country's future. You say you are still young, but he is much younger."

"That is true. Since he rose in the guiding star of Mt Paektu, he has shined. He is a great man who is warmly respected and admired by all the people. The star of the general and the guiding star of Mt Paektu! They are godsends. For this reason, the people have called the dear leader the great nation's father. Not to speak of children and youths, even such old men as we call him the great nation's father."

"Great nation's father," uttered the other two in a reverential voice.

I could not suppress my surging pleasure and looked up at the sky. The sunshine in the blue sky was brilliant. The sunshine, like the smile of the guiding star, seemed to shine a bright light on every house. I then understood why the residents of the village looked happy. Once again, I said the word "father".

NORTH KOREAN DEFECTS ACROSS DMZ 18 AUGUST

SK190942 Seoul YONHAP in English 0919 GMT 19 Aug 82

[Text] Seoul, Aug 19 (YONHAP) -- A North Korean civilian defected to South Korea early Wednesday across the Demilitarized Zone dividing the two Koreas, the Defense Ministry announced.

Spokesman Pak Chong-shik of the ministry said Yi Hun-chu, 20, a farmhand in Paikchon County of Hwanghae Province, defected to a South Korean guard post located 15km northwest of the town of Kwanghwa around 01:00 on Thursday. The announcement said the defector crossed the Yesung River yesterday with the help of a plastic bucket under the cover of darkness. Yi said he was determined to escape from North Korea because he has been longing for freedom in South Korea, according to the announcement.

The announcement said the defector had been deported from a mine in South Pyongan Province to the farm after he attempted suicide because of the suppressed life, discrimination and hunger which he had to suffer arising from his being a non-communist party member.

Yi is the second North Korean civilian to defect to South Korea this year, following Kim Yong-chun, 31, who deserted communist North Korea and went to South Korea in January.

NORTH'S GENERAL SAID PURGED BY KIM CHONG-IL

SK190723 Seoul Domestic Service in Korean 0300 GMT 19 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo/YONHAP -- The rumor about the purge of North Korean puppet army Col Gen Kim Chol-man, which has been going around since last year, has been confirmed, a Japan-resident Korean daily published in Tokyo, TONGIL ILBO, reports today quoting a source who has recently been to Pyongyang, TONGIL ILBO reports that it has been confirmed that Kim Chol-man, who has not been seen since the end of last year,, was purged by the Kim Chong-il faction at last because of failure in the operations for domestic conflict [naeran].

According to TONGIL ILBO, the family of Kim has also disappeared from Pyongyang and Chongnyon Chairman Han Tok-su, who is Kim's relative by marriage, has been in an awkward situation, too. By the way, the rank "colonel general" held by Kim Chol-man, who has been recently purged, corresponds to "lieutenenat general" of the ROK Army.

KOREA TIMES VIEWS U.S.-BEIJING COMMUNIQUE

SK190225 Seoul THE KOREA TIMES in English 19 Aug 82 p 2

[Editorial: "DC-Beijing Communique"]

[Text] After about a year's tense tug-of-war and hard bargaining, Washington and Beijing have managed to settle or shelve a major issue in their relations -- that of U.S. arms deliveries to Taipei.

A nine-point joint communique has been issued in which the United States announced its intent to phase out weapons deliveries to Taiwan ruling out grounds for a "long-term" policy of arms sales to the Nationalist Chinese but endorsing in a separate unilateral statement the validity of the Taiwan Relations Act. In return, Communist China stated its "fundamental policy" to strive for a peaceful solution of the Taiwan question, retracting its previous refusal to insert in such a statement unequivocal references to the means of reuniting the island with the mainland on the ground that the question was an internal affair of China.

The joint statement is widely called a second Shanghai Communique -- the original one effecting Sino-American rapprochement 10 years ago -- and it indeed may be taken as a framework for future settlement of the Taiwan question.

Of course, it remains to be seen how effective the arrangement will be. For one thing, Taipei, an integral party to the question, promptly dismissed an agreement contained in the communique as null and void, reiterating its adamant stand against negotiations with Beijing.

Besides, Washington and Beijing voiced widely different analyses of the joint statement, which the former claimed was "mutually satisfactory" and fully consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act in contrast with the latter's stress that it only marked the beginning of a settlement of the Sino-American dispute and reaffirmation of its opposition to the American law on unofficial relations with Taiwan.

For all that, the communique is meaningful in that it has defused a sensitive dispute, which had once paralyzed relations between the United States and Communist China, and that the two powers are now back in detente to continue their cooperation for mutual and international objectives -- particularly to improve strategic cooperation concerning the Soviet Union. Indeed the need to forestall and contain Soviet expansionism, overriding for both Washington and Peking, should have played a vital guiding role in bringing about a renewed Sino-American accommodation.

What is also noteworthy about the communique is that it underlines the realistic approach being pursued by the Reagan administration as well as the pragmatism exhibited once again by the Beijing leadership. It was Mr. Ronald Reagan's advocacy of upgrading U.S. relations with Nationalist China, voiced during the 1980 presidential election campaign, that alarmed Communist China -- and again his announcement last January to continue arms sales to Taiwan that prompted Beijing to file harsh protests, including threats to downgrade diplomatic ties with Washington.

In this regard, the latest communique indicates to what extent President Reagan, in office now for 19 months, has reshaped his conservatism to meet the realistic demands of the international situation and those of American national interest. After all, it was a renowned anti-communist, Richard Nixon, who visited Communist China for an epoch-making detente a decade ago.

On the other hand, it must have been shrewd pragmatism that had led Beijing to commit itself to a peaceful settlement of the Taiwan question and compromise on a gradual reduction of U.S. arms deliveries to Taipei, short of a specific deadline it had long demanded.

All in all, the revival of Sino-American detente will have a far-reaching impact on international politics, possibly including elements pertinent to the circumstances of the Korean Peninsula. Thus we are obliged to watch closely developments deriving, both directly and indirectly, from the joint communique of the two giants.

DJP SEEKS 'EXTENSIVE' REVISIONS OF TEXTBOOKS

SK190111 Seoul YONHAP in English 0102 GMT 19 Aug 82

[Text] Seoul, Aug 19 (YONHAP) -- The ruling Democratic Justice Party (DJP) plans to make extensive revisions of Korean school textbooks "to oust the Japanese colonial view of history," DJP floor leader Yi Chong-chan said Thursday.

Korean history, ethics, and Korean language books for primary, middle, and high school students will be changed because "considerable parts of those textbooks are described with a Japanese colonial view." "The DJP will change the textbooks to eliminate the colonial view and to inspire a sense of self-esteem and national spirit," he said. Yi said that a special DJP body designed to promote national spirit, composed of experts from various fields, will carry out the revisions, adding that cooperation will be sought from opposition parties, including the Democratic Korea Party.

Yi said that to collect public opinion for the rewriting of Korean textbooks, a public hearing will be held by the Education-Culture and Information Committee of the National Assembly. The ad hoc panel will make a reevaluation of the economic relations between Korea and Japan and "drive out" Japanese-influenced elements from political, economic social and cultural fields of Korean society, Yi said. The DJP will also study ways to rectify Korean's economic dependence on Japan and make a study of Japanese militarism, Yi added.

FORMER SEREIKA MEMBER URGES 'RETURN TO NATION'

BK181017 Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian 1200 GMT 16 Jul 82

[Statement by Maj (Uy Veng) of the Sereika commando forces, who just defected to the revolution -- recorded; date not given]

[Text] To all Sereika brothers who are serving the reactionary Beijing gang and U.S. imperialists:

My name is (Uy Veng), formerly a lieutenant in the Lon Nol period and presently a major in the Sereika commando forces. I would like to make an appeal to all brothers in the commando forces and other ranks of Sereika.

I returned to the nation on 7 June 1982. I was warmly welcomed by our people, the revolutionary armed forces and the state power. I received assistance of all sorts -- food, clothing and so on. I can move around freely, something which is nonexistent in the traitor's camps. As you all know, in the traitors' camps we live like fish in a bucket, deprived of every right and freedom, tortured, beaten, kicked about, and starved by the Thai.

During the 3 years we lived together under the rule of traitors Son Sann, Dien Del and Ket Ret, we were all exposed to misleading propaganda alleging that the revolutionary armed forces slaughtered those of us who defected. In reality, I have found that what happened was totally opposite to the claims of traitors Son Sann, Dien Del and Ket Ret. On the contrary, the armed forces, the revolutionary power and the Vietnamese friends gave me good care and enabled me to be reunited with my own family.

For this reason, you must return to the nation and stop serving the traitors, for these Sereika -- Son Sann, Dien Del and Ket Ret -- are traitors responsible for the tragedy and hardship of our people, for the separation of families and for the slaughter of their own compatriots.

KPRAF ACTIVITIES FOR 6-12 AUGUST REPORTED

BK150949 Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian 1200 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Weekly roundup of KPRAF activities]

[Excerpts] During the past week the remnants of the Pol Pot forces intruded into our territory to carry out their crimes in a number of areas along the border with the backing of Thai artillery fire, aircraft and armed vessels.

In the air, Thai L-19's flew five times over the sectors Yeang Dangkum, Malai and Koh Kong, penetrating 3-5 kilometers inside our territory. At sea, the enemy carried out 73 spying missions using vessels disguised as fishing boats. Along the border, Hills 343, 199 and 172 in Koh Kong were shelled 35 times with an average of 70 rounds daily using 100-mm and 120-mm mortars and H-12 rockets.

On 28 July in particular, 100 rounds landed on Hill 343 west of Smat Deng in Pursat Province; the sector west of Ta Sanh was shelled 13 times and Hill 505 in Pailin 10 times. On 28 and 29 July, H-12 rockets were used to shell the sector west of Nimit in Battambang Province. On 31 July, three H-12 rockets landed in Koh Kong destroying a villager's house. On 1 August, the Preah Vihear temples were also hit with five H-12 rockets.

At the same time, inside our territory, groups of bandits continued to steal our people's rice but they were duly punished by our army and people. On 27 July, five bandits who infiltrated to steal the people's rice in Kulen village, Choam Khsan District, [Preah Vihear Province] were ambushed by our forces who killed three of them and seized two weapons.

In (Tahem), Mongkolborei District, Battambang Province, five Pol Pot soldiers were killed on the spot when they sneaked in to carry out their spying and agitation activities along Rout 10. A 60-mm mortar and a military map were also seized. West of Smat Deng in Pursat Province, on 4 August, a group of five spying enemy soldiers were ambushed by our forces who killed two of them and seized five mines and a number of [words indistinct]. On the same day, the Pol Pot remnants carrying out their destructive activities along the border in Pursat Province were intercepted by our forces who killed six of them and seized seven assorted weapons and an elephant.

MORE MASS GRAVES FOUND IN SVAY RIENG PROVINCE

BK181159 Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian 1300 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] Between 5 and 8 August, the crime investigation team of the Ministry of Propaganda and Culture and that from the Svay Rieng Propaganda and Culture Service, in cooperation with cadres and personnel of Svay Teap District, carried out investigations looking for mass graves -- the legacy of the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan genocidal regime -- in the area of Trapeang Som, Tuol Ang village, Koki Som commune, Svay Teap District, and found 214 bodies.

This site of crimes in Koki Som commune was one of the biggest detention and slaughter centers in Svay Teap District during the traitorous Pol Pot-Ieng Sary-Khieu Samphan regime. After the 17 April 1974 liberation, pupils, students, lecturers, intellectuals, teachers, monks and innocent people were detained and then slaughtered in this security office. The victims were supposedly taken away to undergo a period of reeducation.

At present, our crime investigation teams are continuing their works in Svay Rieng Province.

VODK RAPS SRV TROOPS FOR 'FORCING' VILLAGERS' APPEAL

BK180435 (Clandestine) Voice of Democratic Kampuchea in Cambodian to Kampuchea 2330 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Commentary: "The Vietnamese Enemies Forced Our People in Kompong Trach District, Kampot Province, To Move To Have Vietnamese Troops Stay in Kampuchea"]

[Text] On 27 July, the Vietnamese enemies gathered our people, youth and village and commune administrative employees -- who they had forced to serve their aggressive state power -- in Kompong Trach District, Kampot Province, to make a motion appealing to the aggressor Vietnamese troops to stay in Kampuchea. This is the cheapest and most vicious act.

When they sent thousands of their troops to attack and invade Kampuchea, the Hanoi Vietnamese enemies shouted that they had come to liberate the Kampuchean people. When the entire world denounced and condemned their act of aggression and called for the complete withdrawal of their troops from Kampuchea, the Hanoi Vietnamese enemies shouted that their troops invaded Kampuchea because they were invited by the Heng Samrin puppet group, which they put in power in Phnom Penh.

The Kampuchean people of all nationalities and social strata united with the Democratic Kampuchean Naitonal Army and guerrillas and waged a great struggle against them throughout Kampuchea and bogged them down. The Vietnamese troops experienced many difficulties in all fields and have reached a complete impasse on the Kampuchean battlefield, in addition to being isolated on the international scene.

The Hanoi Vietnamese enemies shouted that they would withdraw a part of their troops from Kampuchea to appease the international community's anger. But concurrently, the Vietnamese sent more and more troops to Kampuchea. They have gathered the Kampuchean poeple in the various areas temporarily controlled by them to make motions and note their approval with their thumbprints of an appeal to the Vietnamese to continue to keep their aggressive and murderous troops in Kampuchea. This is the most vicious, tricky, cowardly and dirty maneuver of the Hanoi Vietnamese enemy aggressors. They unashamedly lie to everybody.

VODK ON THAI NSC HEAD'S STATEMENT ON SRV

BK180550 (Clandestine) Voice of Democratic Kampuchea in Cambodian to Kampuchea 2330 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] On 14 August Prasong Sunsiri, general secretary of the Thai National Security Council, stated that the Soviets sent T-54 tanks, armored vehicles and more weapons to Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea. This clearly shows that the Hanoi Vietnamese do not want to withdraw their troops from Kampuchea. He said that the combative ability of the Vietnamese troops on the Kampuchean battlefield is decreasing, therefore, the Vietnamese need more modern weapons from the Soviets.

Prasong Sunsiri said: The Vietnamese are making efforts to implement their colonialist policy in Kampuchea. Phnom Penh is Hanoi's colony. The Vietnamese grab and control all affairs. The Heng Samrin puppet officials speak Vietnamese. Textbooks are printed in Vietnamese.

Concerning the Soviet military bases in Vietnam, the general secretary of the Thai National Security Council notes that Nguyen Co Thach said that the Vietnamese can allow the Soviets to establish military bases in Vietnam and says that this is a complete lie because everybody knows that the Soviets have already set their base in Camranh Bay.

PHOUMI NOSAVAN TO SET UP REBEL GOVERNMENT 10 OCT

[Text] An anti-communist Laotian liberation government will be officially formed somewhere in Laos on October 10, General Phoumi Nosavan, acting prime minister, defence minister and supreme commander of the resistance government, told the BANGKOK POST in an exclusive interview yesterday. The liberation government whose primary goal is to liberate Laos from Vietnamese occupation and communist rule will be officially named "United Front of Laos People for the Liberation of Laos."

Phoumi said that the liberation movement has been given financial and material support from some foreign countries which he declined to name. He claimed that the movement now has at its disposal some 40,000 supporters -- many of them under arms -- in Laos. He said that he would announce the liberation government's policy, objectives and means of achieving them to the press in Laos on October 10.

The formation of the Laotian liberation government has seriously mooted by exiled Laotian officials following the successful establishment recently of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. General Phoumi, a former rightist prime minister who fled to Thailand after failing to overthrow the Vientiane government in 1967, said that the liberation government consists of former Laotian officials and patriots of the right wing, nationalist and neutral factions, but excludes the communists. Two are under death sentences in absentia by the Pathet Lao regime now in Vientiane and another faces life imprisonment if captured by the pro-Hanoi government.

All 28 members of his cabinet, including himself, will be presented to members of the press at a location, which is yet to be disclosed, in Laos on October 10, said the general. Military forces loyal to Phoumi are known to be in control of an area across the Mekong River from Thailand's Nakhon Phanom Province.

Apart from Phoumi, the other cabinet members are:

-- Inpeng Souli-Gnadap, deputy prime minister and minister of internal affairs;
-- Sisouk na Champassak, deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs;
-- Kham-Ouan Lattanavong, deputy prime minister and minister of finance, economy, trade and industry;
-- Maj-Gen Koupasit Aphai, Maj-Gen Kong Le and Maj-Gen Vang Pao, deputy defence ministers;
-- Maj-Gen Kamhou Boutsalat and Maj-Gen Khamong Phoutthavong, deputy ministers of internal affairs;
-- Maj-Gen Oudon Sananikon and Chanthon Chanthalasi, deputy foreign ministers;
-- Sitha Sisombat and Khamphoui Volavong, deputy ministers of finance, economy, trade and industry;
-- Dr Somphou Oudonvilai, minister of education;
-- Khanthong Thammavong and Sithat Sitthiboun, deputy ministers of education;
-- Dr Khamphai Aphai, minister of public health and public welfare;
-- Dr Chantho and Dr Luan Volathanouvong, deputy ministers of public health and public welfare;
-- Khamking Souvansi, minister of justice;
-- Thongsavat Vongvanthong and Souvat Maokhamphiev, deputy ministers of justice;

-- Mouphan Saisit, minister of communications and telecommunications;
-- Maj-Gen Silak Pathammavong and Nuan Saisitthidet, deputy ministers of communications and telecommunications;
-- Tiao Sop Saisana, minister of public relations and tourism;
-- Bouvon Nolasing and Hung Sao, deputy ministers of public relations and tourism;
-- Oudom Lattanovong, secretary-general to the cabinet and his deputy Dr Pakit Chit-Oubon.

Maj-Gen Koupasis, former deputy commander of the Vientiane forces, Maj-Gen Vang Pao, former commander of the Meo mercenary force were sentenced to death in absentia by the Lao Central Supreme Court on September 4, 1975, whereas Sisouk, former defence minister before 1975, was sentenced to life imprisonment. Maj-Gen Kong Le, a former parachute battalion commander, staged a coup which helped install a neutralist government under Souvanna Phouma in 1960. He is now living in exile in China.

SOUVANNA PHOUMA REJECTS INDOCHINA CONFEDERATION

NC182140 Paris AFP in English 2129 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Text] Paris, Aug 18 (AFP) -- Prince Souvanna Phouma, adviser to the Laotian Government, came out here today against any idea of an Indochinese confederation.

In a conversation with newsmen, the 81-year-old former premier said that "all Laotians and Cambodians wish to remain independent," rather than join Vietnam in any confederation. The idea of such a confederation was periodically brought up in the Western press, the prince added, but such a thing in fact "does not exist and will never exist." The three countries had their autonomous governments, he recalled, and there was no central body for Indochina.

He did acknowledge that about 50,000 Vietnamese soldiers were stationed in Laos.

Asked whether he had turned communist, the prince, who headed Laos's neutralist faction for many years, replied: "Not at all. I am a patriot. I remain in my country, that's all," adding he was "an adviser to, not a member of, the government."

The prince, who met French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson today over lunch for a discussion of ways for strengthening cooperation between their two countries, came here for a month-long visit. He plans returning to Vientiane via Geneva and Moscow, where he will undergo a medical checkup in connection with the stroke he suffered three years ago.

KRIANGSAK DISCUSSES GRENADE ATTACK ON PREM

[Text] Leader of the National Democracy (Chart Prachatipatai) Party Gen Kriangsak Chamanan yesterday urged the Interior Ministry to urgently find out the culprit or culprits of Sunday night's grenade attack on General Prem's residence and clear up the mystery behind it for the sake of the country. He said he believed in the capability of the ministry to nail the people who were responsible for the attack as well as to reduce, on the whole, crimes of a similar nature. "It (the ministry) should try to clear up the matter as soon as possible for the sake of the country's image," General Kriangsak said.

The former prime minister called for a crackdown against illegal war weapons and harsher punishment against violators as a means to prevent further incidents of this sort. Speaking at his party headquarters in Bang Khen yesterday evening, General Kriangsak said he was worried for General Prem after the grenade attack because the incident, besides directly reflecting the government's stability, indicated that his administration has run into certain problems. He admitted that it was impossible for any administration to be absolutely free of problems, but "never before in the country's history has the prime minister been treated like this."

"When even the prime minister can be the target of such an attack, what about the lives of the people on the streets?" General Kriangsak asked. He added that it would be untrue to say that the grenade attack on General Prem's residence would not affect the country's image because the news has been dispatched worldwide and if nothing else foreign investors would think carefully if they are to invest in Thailand.

General Kriangsak said there were several factors which could have led to the grenade attack but he personally believed the cause was politically-motivated. When asked to comment on a BBC broadcast which said the grenade attack stemmed from dissatisfaction against the military reshuffle in October in which it has been widely speculated that Assistant Army Commander-in-Chief Gen Athit Kamlang-Ek will be promoted to the top army post, General Kriangsak said the report was just another speculation. He said, however, that the army should urgently announce the reshuffle so as to end the speculation on who will be the next army commander-in-chief. This would also help ward off any future unpleasant incidents, he said.

Press Views Attack

BK181501 [Editorial Report] Three Thai-language Bangkok dailies -- MATICHON, MATUPHUM and SIAM RAT -- on 17 and 18 August carry editorials and a column commenting on the grenade explosion which took place at Prime Minister Gen Prem Tinsulanon's Si Sao Thewet residence in Bangkok on the night of 15 August.

The 17 August MATICHON editorial, on page 4, entitled: "Why Assassinate the Prime Minister?" quotes Prime Minister Prem as saying that those who are behind the incident "must be his enemy." The editorial notes: "Since July, at least two attempts have been made on Gen Prem Tinsulanon's life. The first one took place on 16 July at the artillery center in Lop Buri Province. In that incident, the assailants used an M-72 mortar."

The editorial points out: "The persons who attempted to assassinate the prime minister could be urban communists or ordinary terrorists or military personnel who dislike General Prem or who want to protest the forthcoming annual military reshuffle, or even politicians who want to create a certain political situation. Whoever is responsible for the incident is following the wrong path, and his deed has exposed his ill intentions toward the country and people."

The 17 August MATUPHUM editorial, on page 4, entitled: "Something Is Behind the Grenade Explosion at the Prime Minister's House," says: "We are quite sure that politics is behind the incident. The question is what kind of politics is this? It is politics that is characterized by violence and barbarism." The editorial concludes by saying: "We urge the authorities to expedite the investigation to bring the culprits before the law and appeal to the government to be firm and solve the country's problems prudently. The people must oppose any attempt by anybody to lead the country away from the democratic path."

The 17 August SIAM RAT editorial, on page 3, entitled: "Bombing the Prime Minister's House," says: "The terms of the present government and Parliament will expire within the next few months in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution. However, the grenade explosion at the prime minister's residence has proved that there is no safety in this country. Even the prime minister, the country's leader, lives in danger. Has the incident shaken the people's confidence in the government?" The editorial condemns the use of violence for political purposes and asks the government to explain the incident to the people in order to prevent unfavorable rumors which will be useful only to those elements harboring ill intentions toward the country and people.

The 18 August "ordinary reporter" column in MATICHON, on page 4, says: "The incident was to protest the appointment of Gen Athit Kamlang-Ek as the new army commander which will be announced in the forthcoming annual military reshuffle prepared by General Prem. As the date of the annual military reshuffle approaches, the protests and harrassment against General Prem will be more frequent. They will throw more bombs (according to rumors) if General Prem fails to heed their warning.

"Why do we say that Gen Ahit Kamlang-Ek is the target of terrorism at present and in the past? The answer is that a bomb explosion took place on the road near General Athit's house in early May. It can be said that the grenade explosion at the prime minister's residence a few days ago was a challenge to General Athit since General Athit, not the police, is directly responsible for security at the prime minister's residence." The column points out that the incident has embarrassed not only the prime minister but also General Athit. However, it also tests the ability of General Athit before he can "ride a white horse toward the post of the army commander in chief."

OFFICIAL DENIES SALE OF RICE TO VIETNAM

BK180752 Bangkok Voice of Free Asia in English 1100 GMT 17 Aug 82

He said the Foreign Ministry has not received any request for the export of Thai rice to Vietnam. The Ministries of Commerce and Foreign Affairs would have to jointly consider the issue had it been raised. However, he added that the Soviet Union might have purchased Thai rice for transhipment to Vietnam. Thailand cannot prohibit the Soviet Union from reselling Thai rice to any country.

Meanwhile, a senior commerce official also reaffirmed that Thailand has no policy of promoting direct Thai export to Vietnam and said that the 400,000 [as heard] tons of Thai rice, which was reported to be destined for Vietnam, were actually sold to the Soviet Union.

BK181409 Bangkok Voice of Free Asia in Thai 1000 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Text] On 9 August VNA, citing a report of the so-called Voice of the Kampuchean People, alleged that Thailand had violated Kampuchean airspace, territory and waters many times during the first week of August.

The Voice of Free Asia wishes to state that the Thai Government has noted on several occasions that reports of VNA and the so-called Voice of the Kampuchean People are totally false and that such reports are propaganda aimed at slandering and defaming Thailand -- implementing a policy Vietnam excels at.

Vietnam itself has violated other countries' territory and the United Nations has adopted resolutions repeatedly calling for Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea. Vietnam has claimed that its troops have been pulled out of Kampuchea. However, what Vietnam did was to move weapons and troops into remote villages and mountains and jungles in order to deceive journalists and foreign representatives observing the troop withdrawal in accordance with the joint communique issued recently in Ho Chi Minh City. These actions demonstrate Vietnam's desire to deceive the world and simultaneously to slander others.

USSR PROPOSES LONG TERM MAIZE-FERTILIZER EXCHANGE

BK180747 Bangkok Domestic Service in English 0000 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Text] Russia has proposed to the Thai Government to establish a long term contract on the exchange of its fertilizer for Thai maize. A high-ranking official of the Agricultural Economics Office says that the Ministry of Agriculture will have to study the offer carefully by taking into consideration the pros and cons of the offer as well as the pricing of these products. The proposal will later be submitted to the committee in charge of agricultural product exchanges for final approval.

Thailand and the Soviet Union last year entered into a contract worth about 500 million baht to exchange about 100,000 tons of fertilizer for 200,000 tons of maize. The Thai Government has already delivered half of its contracted maize to the Soviet Union and has already received half of the targeted fertilizer from that country. The remaining amount of maize will be delivered to the Soviet Union in October of this year, so the Soviet Union will deliver the remaining half of fertilizer to Thailand in February of next year.

CPT IN NORTHEAST SAID SPLIT INTO THREE FACTIONS

[Text] The number of armed communist insurgents in the northeast, which shot to about 6,000-7,000 during the heyday of their jungle activity, had dropped drastically to only about 1,200-1,400 now, a senior army official said yesterday.

Chief intelligence officer of the Second Army Region Col Sa-Ngiam Rattanasimakon told the NATION that the ongoing military and political campaign mounted by the army region have also liquidated all the large-scale, permanent communist strongholds in the region. Of all the seven operational zones controlled by provincial Central Committees of the Communist Party of Thailand (CPT) in the upper north, the military had wiped out Zone 666 in Khon Kaen and almost crippled three others, Col Sa-Ngiam said. The three operational zones are Zone 777 in Udon Thani, Zone 555 in Sakhon Nakhon, and Zone 999 in Kalasin, according to the officer.

"We are now taking every possible measure to deprive the falling zones of their leadership and destroy their organizations," he said. He cited an example the military attempts to lobby for the defection of the secretary general of Zone 999 to the government. "His wife has already surrendered to the government and I expect the top leader of the zone to follow in her footsteps," he said.

He said that communist influence was still relatively strong only in Zone 111 in Nakhon Phanom, Zone 333 which straddles Kalasin and Yasothon, and Zone 444 in Upper Ubon Ratchathani.

"The three operational zones have long been established and the jungle terrain makes it very difficult for us to wipe them out," said Col Sa-Ngiam, adding that the communist armed guerrillas in the zones were estimated at about 550. However, he is convinced that all the large-scale jungle bases had already been overrun. "There are now only makeshift jungle camps in the area," he said. He added that the army region would keep up military pressure on the operational zones and launch political offensives against them at the same time.

Referring to the five smaller operational zones in the lower northeast, the chief intelligence officer said that the communist movements were still active only in Zone 205 and Zone 207. The communist activities in Zones 203, 30, and 11 which were active while the Khmer Rouge were in power, have almost totally ceased, he said.

Col Sa-Ngiam attributed the setback suffered by northeastern communist insurgents to policy 66/B.E. 2523 in which political measures are given precedence over military offensive. The policy has effectively switched communist insurgents and their sympathizers back to the embrace of the government, he said. He said that most of the communist defectors told officials that they agreed to the policy which would provide them with a chance of leading a normal life and encourage them to help develop the country through non-violence means. However, he said that actions must still be taken to fulfill the policy to the fullest extent. "We cannot solve the insurgency problem within a few years since it will take a long time to prove the sincerity of the government in solving the country's problems," he added.

Col Sa-Ngiam also said that factionalism in the rank and file of the outlawed party was also responsible for its weakening position. The communist insurgents in the region are divided into three major factions: The pro-Chinese group, the pro-Vietnam wing (which has set up "Phak Mai" party), and the group which welcomes aid from all foreign communist movements, according to the army officer. The bickering is particularly severe between the pro-Chinese faction and Phak Mai which has been attempting to extend its influence among the rank and file of CPT cadres, he said. "Phak Mai's operatives are especially active in Nakhon Phanom and the two rival factions have inevitably clashed with each other," he said.

Col Sa-Ngiam added that CPT members who have defected to Phak Mai would be hunted down and killed in what CPT leaders believed to be an uncompromising fight against the so-called "revisionists." He added that Comrade Wihan, who is commander of the battalion 111 in Zone 111, was recently slain as he was suspected to have tilted towards Phak Mai in Renu Nakhon District of the northeastern province. "Leaflets were circulated among party members following the assassination, claiming that Comrade Wihan had double-crossed the party," he said.

Col Sa-Ngiam said that the government regards all the three factions its enemies who must be destroyed. "Their approaches are different, but their aim is the same. They all want to seize power from the government through violent means," he added. He also said that Phak Mai members are persuasive in their propaganda campaigns to win the support from CPT operatives who are virtually their former colleagues. "The Phak Mai elements have been pointing out that the revolution in Thailand under the present situation would be realized only when communists receive aids from the neighbouring countries," he said.

NHAN DAN COMMENTARY SCORES PRC-U.S. COMMUNIQUE

OW190855 Hanoi Domestic Service in Vietnamese 1100 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Text] NHAN DAN today carries a commentary by Tu Ma Quang entitled "Reagan Is Helping Deng Xiaoping Prepare for the Congress." The commentary reads:

On 17 August, a joint communique was issued simultaneously in Washington and Beijing acknowledging a reduction in U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. This is a sensational new event made public by the United States and China. According to some diplomats in Beijing, this is the second Shanghai communique, the main points of which are that the sales will not exceed in quantity those of recent years and that the United States will continue to sell modern F-5E fighter planes to Taiwan.

China contends that the reduction in sales will help eliminate an obstacle to the development of Sino-U.S. relations. The sensational aspect of the agreement lies in the fact that it was issued only about 10 days prior to the convening of the 12th Congress of the Communist Party of China [CPC] and that it was a political asset which Reagan presented to Deng Xiaoping to help him cope with other factions in a fierce power struggle.

In the face of its many setbacks in foreign and domestic policies and especially in the face of China's destiny and honor being jeopardized by its collusion with the United States and other imperialist forces, of the protracted, tough conflict within the ruling circles and of the Chinese people's increasingly vigorous struggle, the Deng faction has had to resort to many cunning and deceitful maneuvers to defend itself, including the maneuver of agreeing with the United States on arms sales to Taiwan. In reality, this agreement presents nothing new because the United States will continue these sales which will not exceed in quantity those of recent years. The ambiguous words of comfort in the joint communique regarding the termination date of arms sales and the reaching of a final solution have as yet no real value. What is that final solution and when can it be reached? No one knows.

Tying China's destiny to imperialism and colluding with the United States in opposing the world revolution constitute the basic strategy of the Deng faction or force now controlling China's domestic and foreign policies.

The Chinese people are reckoning with the crimes committed by the Deng faction since its assumption of leadership over the country, and it is certain that their struggle will not be diverted by malicious maneuvers.

In timely presenting a new political asset to Deng Xiaoping, the U.S. imperialists expect to participate in the Deng clique's struggle for power at the 12th CPC Congress in order to maintain their useful trump card in their reactionary global strategy.

QUAN DOI NHAN DAN HITS CGDK LEADERS' TOURS

[Text] The Vietnamese army paper QUAN DOI NHAN DAN on Wednesday said that Beijing and Washington are sending Son Sann, Khieu Samphan and Sihanouk abroad to advertise their Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

This move, the paper said, is aimed at putting on a new mask for the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary clique so as to retain their illegal representation at the United Nations.

However, the paper pointed out, all the plots and maneuvers of Beijing and Washington and their stooges to reverse the Kampuchean table are doomed to failure.

NHAN DAN EDITORIAL MARKS AUGUST REVOLUTION

OW190839 Hanoi VNA in English 0759 GMT 19 Aug 82

[Text] Hanoi, VNA, August 19 -- The success of the August revolution in 1945 was a historic turning point for Vietnam, and to each Vietnamese it brought a new life, says NHAN DAN in its editorial today.

The paper goes on: "After obtaining independence the Vietnamese people had to fight for 30 years to completely liberate their country. Millions of people gave their lives for national independence, opening the path of socialism for the country."

The indomitable spirit expressed in the general uprising in August 1945, in the two national liberation wars against the French colonialists and the U.S. imperialists and in the struggle against the Chinese expansionists for national defence, is now being maintained and developed to build (?socialism), defend socialist Vietnam and surmount difficulties ahead".

The paper continues to say that the line of socialist revolution worked by the fourth and fifth congresses of the Communist Party is correct and that it ensures future success in revolution.

"Formerly a colony", NHAN DAN says, "Vietnam is now independent, united and free. The people, as masters of resource-rich country and with the support and assistance of fraternal countries and friends throughout the world, will succeed in building a new life in defending the independence and, thereby, will make greater contributions to the forces of socialism and to world peace".

Indonesia-MPR Press Statement

[Text] Jakarta, Aug 18 (ANTARA) -- Mongolia and Indonesia have expressed their concern over the deterioration of international situation described as adversing [as received] to the positive trend of world development and international detente, peaceful cooperation of states and national independence of nations. This was contained in a joint press statement issued here Wednesday.

Foreign Minister Mokhtar Kusumaatmaja of the Republic of Indonesia and Minister for Foreign Affairs Mangalyn Dugersuren of the Mongolian People's Republic in the joint statement appraised the efforts of nations to prohibit the use of nuclear weapons and expressed the hope that such efforts would ultimately lead to the total ban of the use of nuclear weapons.

They said that the prohibition of the use of force in the international relations and peaceful settlement of disputes is the basic condition for consolidating peace and security of nations in Asia.

Foreign Minister Mokhtar Kusumaatmaja in this context has taken due note of the proposal of the Mongolian People's Republic to conclude a convention on non-aggression and non-use of force in relations between the Asian and Pacific states.

EASING OF POLITICAL TENSION URGED IN OLALIA CASE

HK180312 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 17 Aug 82 p 6

[Article by Apolonio Batalla: "Easing of Political Tension"]

[Text] The objective of the government should be to ease political tension. If there is little tension, massive trouble cannot possibly occur. There will be no need for "preemptive action."

If tension is not relieved, the government may prevail in case of a showdown with the people for the government and the people will be heavy. Moreover, one cannot tell how the outcome, though apparently favorable to the government, will affect the future of the state.

We hold the view that as far as politics are concerned this is a small country. It is made small by the traditional ability of the people to arrange compromises, to talk things together, by such traits as pakikisama and pakiusapan. More significantly, the protagonists know one another. The leading lights of the administration and the opposition used to run the business of government together, had shared parties, in fact.

Felixberto Olalia had been, before his arrest, in continual touch with the Ministry of Labor and Employment. Horacio Morales had been a high government official.

With the resources at its command, the administration could have known the political or ideological positions of such people. Once the positions were known, a dialogue with them could have been arranged. We do not see any difficulty, for example, in talking with Olalia and telling him that at this time his cooperation and assistance is needed by the administration on account of the critical times.

What happened was he was suddenly arrested and his house raided. There might have been good reasons for what may be called "preemptive action," but the result is Olalia is alienated from the administration. It would not have been necessary and the outcome might have had a lasting favorable effect on the administration because an adversarial relation was avoided.

When in an emerging adversary relationship, the government, which has the more powerful leverage, pleads, through a high representative with the other party for cooperation and assistance, the humility of the gesture is likely to be rewarded with a favorable response. It is more so in our country where the personal element in negotiations matters a great deal. Such an approach is not alien to particular leaders. Only last week, Gen Fabian C. Ver, chief of staff of the armed forces, was quoted as having said a military solution to our problems is not always proper. It is recalled that last year Minister Enrile personally talked with the militant student leaders and was able to persuade them to maintain the peace in the campuses.

It is in light of the power to achieve a political goal through pakiusap that we think the injunction to local government officials to fan out to the barangays to inform the people should include dialogues with known dissident leaders as much as possible as a means of easing tension at the grassroots. To do so would merely be asserting the Filipino way of resolving political differences.

It would not be advisable to close the door on those who still cling to the notion that better living conditions can be attained through violence. That was done in Chile a few years back and the government prevailed, but the cathedrals were filled with corpses.

The wisdom in a policy of easing political tension at an early stage is explainable by the tendency of tension to gather momentum if the positions are made unyielding by the absence of constructive and direct communication among the protagonists.

Government superiority can be asserted in a number of ways. There are no limits to ingenuity.

MARCOS' MOVE AGAINST SUBVERSION PLOT HAILED

HK190111 Manila Far East Broadcasting Company in English 2330 GMT 18 Aug 82

[Text] The propaganda campaign mounted by subversive elements has been effective in the countryside because it seems that nobody is there to counteract these efforts of the rebel elements. President Marcos, realizing the situation in the countryside, ordered public officials to leave their plywood chairs and their air-conditioned offices and go to the countryside to make the people feel the presence of the government. He urged them to go out to make contacts and counteract antigovernment propaganda by subversive elements. The president told local officials, particularly the governors and mayors, that they should not wait to be told, because it is their duty to maintain close contact with their constituents.

The move by the president is good and far-reaching. Especially those in remote areas where the presence of the government has not been really felt in terms of infrastructure projects and others, it is most necessary that local officials pay them regular visits and ask for their needs [sentence as heard]: it is through this sensitivity to the people's needs, and equally responding to these needs, that they are apt to appreciate what the government is doing for them.

GENERAL MISON COUNTERS PRESS CRITICISM

[Text] During a dialogue with press and radio people held recently in Tacloban City, EASCOM [Eastern Command] Commander Brig Gen Salvador M. Mison warned the mass media that "We (the military) are open to criticism. If we make mistakes, tell us. But if you start destroying (the military) to a point where people will not believe in us anymore, there will come a time when you will be running for your lives... all that I am asking from the press is a fair treatment. This was reported by THE REPORTER, a Leyte-Samar weekly publication in its July 21, 1982 issue.

Feeling alluded to, the chairman of the board of THE REPORTER, Gus Arnaiz, who has a string of military cases against him for publishing articles adverse to the military, said: "I don't think the majority of us in the mass media will be running away from what General Mison has in mind. General Mison does not need to threaten anybody, especially the mass media. What's really needed is to really impose strong discipline among the soldiers so that they will not commit abuses."

Arnaiz added that "the mass media isn't making the news. We only print or broadcast the news. The military is making the news, adverse or favorable."

In the same issue, the reporter also reported that "Mison admitted, reluctantly, that the NPA has a more efficient intelligence system than the military and even in propaganda, but we are trying our best to catch up if not overtake them.

Reaction to this, Arnaiz said: "It's a shame for the military commander of Eascom to admit the superiority of the NPA in intelligence and propaganda. There's really something wrong in the manner Eascom is being managed for being inferior to the NPA's in some critical aspects. By the very admission of General Mison, it appears that there should really be a revamp in Eascom."

BILL TO CLASSIFY CHURCH AS PART OF MEDIA PROPOSED

HK180329 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 15 Aug 82 pp 1, 9

[Text] Political Affairs Minister Leonardo B. Perez proposed yesterday that a law be enacted classifying the pulpit and similar religious forums as part of the media of the land.

He said the pulpit should be made available for use not only to religious preachers but also to any citizen who may wish to avail himself of the right of reply in accordance with a constitutional guarantee to free speech and free flow of information.

Perez expressed the view that when religious preachers use the pulpit to ventilate political issues outside the realm of religious teachings or for advocacy of ideas which more properly belong to Caesar than to God, then elements of the body politics should be granted the right to avail of the same pulpit or forum to express contrary views.

The political affairs minister also proposed that religious preachers who choose to stray into the more mundane or the rough-and-tumble world of politics and political activity "should be prepared to receive their share of political debris and blunt reputation from those whose domain they have invaded." This was one of the subjects Perez discussed in his speech, "The Political Agenda of the New Republic," at the weekly meeting of the UN walkers club at the Manila Hilton yesterday.

Perez said the ruling Kilusang Bagong Lipunan (KBL) Party is now in the midst of studies and discussions to resolve political issues preparatory to the election of members of the regular Batasang Pambansa in 1984.

He said among the political questions President Marcos and the KBL are now considering are "turncoatism," accreditation of a second political party after the KBL, apportionment of regional representatives, block voting, synchronization of elections, and the manner of election.

Perez, who is also chairman of the Batasan Committee on Revision of laws, codes, and Constitutional Amendments, said that as soon as the 1983 budget is approved, his committee will conduct a series of nationwide public hearings on these issues.

He said several bills on "turncoatism" are now pending before his committee. These include proposals made by Perez himself, Assemblymen Arturo M. Tolentino, Ronaldo Zamora, Frisco San Juan, Salaonib Baternia, Carlos M. Padilla, and others.

The political affairs minister explained that in the June 1981 presidential election, President Marcos and NP [Nacionalista Party] candidate Alejo Santos obtained the first two highest number of votes. However, he said, the votes of Santos did not constitute 10 per cent of the votes cast as provided in the constitution.

For this reason, there is need for the Batasan to pass a law which would provide guidelines for the Comelec [Commission on Elections] to follow in determining which second political party should be accredited, Perez said.

MARCOS DISMISSES NPA, MNLF THREATS AS MINOR

HK140028 Manila Domestic Service in English 2300 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] President Marcos has dismissed the threat of the remaining dissidents in the country. In a talk with newsmen, the president stressed that they posed no real challenge to the government. He said the New People's Army has lost its leadership, while the MNLF rebels are a fragmented group fighting among themselves. He said the hard-core leaders of the New People's Army, down to the third rank of command, have either been captured or locked up in jail facing charges. What has been left, he added, are young kids desperately trying to make a name for themselves by staging ambuscades and pursuing desperate tactics that don't hurt much but make headlines. The president made the assessment when asked by newsmen to comment on the reported upsurge in NPA activities in the countryside. He described them as pure and simple terrorism.

On the Moro National Liberation Front, the president said the erstwhile sessionist movement has become so fragmented in its leadership that they have come to fighting among themselves. The MNLF has been divided into three or four factions, and the military is not fighting them, they are fighting among themselves, he added. The chief executive said that Nur Misuari, who is now only one of four leaders of the MNLF, has become so discredited in the Islamic Conference because of his reported liaison with the communists that the forthcoming meeting in Nigeria may just ignore him and his continuing demand for support. Apart from his communist leanings, the president said Misuari is also being accountable for a sizeable amount of funds. Besides, his insistence on an independent status for Mindanao is unacceptable to the Islamic Conference, President Marcos added.

President Marcos made this assessment after a meeting with officials of Region 2, where he urged them to cooperate with the military in the campaign against dissidents in the area. The president also said that he would look into complaints that some of the logging areas in the region were being operated by the dissidents.

SUZUKI URGES SPEEDY SETTLEMENT OF TEXTBOOK ISSUE

OW191307 Tokyo KYODO in English 1251 GMT 19 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 19, KYODO -- Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki Thursday instructed the Education Ministry and Foreign Ministry to speed up their work to compile a concrete government policy to settle diplomatically the school textbook issue.

Suzuki made the decision as he said he is confident ruling Liberal-Democratic Party Dietmen have already reached consensus on the issue with due consideration to diplomatic affairs. The prime minister told the press Thursday evening concrete steps only are left to be worked out.

The Education and Foreign Ministries are expected to seek the prime minister's approval for concrete steps the government is to take during the weekend.

Earlier Thursday, the Education Ministry showed some indications it may be relaxing its hardline stand against revision of the texts in question when Isao Suzuki, a senior Education Ministry official, suggested the screening committee may be open to revising the texts when they come up for review again in three years. Suzuki, director-general of the ministry's Primary and Secondary Education Bureau, was the first senior official in the ministry to suggest any change in the books at all.

Meanwhile, a senior Foreign Ministry official said he was optimistic about the issue and suggested a draft of measures to settle the matter diplomatically may be shown to reporters at a press conference Monday. He said the prime minister may be ready at that time to present concrete steps the government will take to defuse the controversy among China, South Korea and other Asian countries and Japan. The Foreign and Education Ministries will work hard over the weekend to reach some compromise which will meet the prime minister's approval, the senior bureaucrat said.

They are going to Seoul at the request of Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki who wishes to realize an early political settlement of the issue, according to an LDP source.

SAKURAUCHI, MALAYSIA'S ABDULLAH VIEW COOPERATION

OW191025 Tokyo KYODO in English 1009 GMT 19 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 19, KYODO -- Malaysian Minister Abdullah bin Haji Ahmad Thursday arrived in Tokyo for a six-day visit to Japan to pave the way for a planned visit by Prime Minister Datuk Sri Mahathir bin Mohamed in late October.

On his arrival, the minister without portfolio in the prime minister's department met with Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi to express thanks for Japan's cooperation in his country's vocational training, Foreign Ministry officials said.

As part of "the look-East policy," Malaysia is to send a total of 136 young men to Japan for a six-month course of vocational training. The delegation will be followed by another of 250 people next April.

Abdullah was quoted as saying that the 136-man-strong team represents only the beginning of a long-term program to provide vocational training in Japan.

Sakurauchi told him that Japan would do as much as it can for cooperation in the program, according to the officials.

The Malyasian minister is scheduled to stay in Japan until next Tuesday. Before returning home, he is to meet with the education minister, minister of international trade and industry and construction minister as well as representatives of institutions to take care of the trainees.

PLO SOURCE ON JAPANESE RED ARMY PULLOUT FROM BEIRUT

[Text] Beirut, Aug 19, KYODO -- Members of the Japanese Red Army (Nihon Sekigun) in Beirut will leave Lebanon together with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), a source close to PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat told KYODO News Service Thursday. He said Japanese Red Army members still were remaining in Beirut but added they will leave the besieged city with Palestinian guerrillas.

The Israeli Government approved Thursday the U.S. plan to evacuate the Palestinians from the Lebanese city, paving the way for implementation of the plan. The source declined to reveal the number of Japanese Red Army members still staying in Beirut, the time of their withdrawal and their destination. He said "They are not terrorists but are members of the PLO who fought against Israel." He declared that the PLO will never abandon them.

Israel had repeatedly claimed that some 700 international terrorists, including members of the Japanese Red Army and the Red Brigade of Italy, were hiding in Palestinian refugee camps.

SAKURAUCHI HAILS ACCORD ON ENDING LEBANON CRISIS

OW191305 Tokyo KYODO in English 1258 GMT 19 Aug 82

[Text] Tokyo, Aug 19, KYODO -- Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi Thursday welcomed the Israeli Government's formal approval of the Palestine Liberation Organization's withdrawal from west Beirut and called for Israel to withdraw troops from Lebanon immediately. The statement, issued in Sakurauchi's name, said it was "essential" for Israel to pull out unconditionally to allow the Lebanese to form a new and vital government free from outside influence.

The statement is the fourth in a series issued on the Lebanese crisis which started with the Israeli invasion of Lebanon on August 4. It is worded in the most critical tone of the four and cited the occupation by Israel of the West Bank and Gaza regions for the first time.

The statement said the Japanese Government strongly hoped that a government be established in Lebanon based on the will of the Lebanese people "following national reconciliation among the people." To make this possible, it went on to say, the withdrawal of the Israeli forces from Lebanon is "essential." The government, therefore, once again calls on Israel for an immediate and unconditional withdrawal of its forces from Lebanon, it added.

It also said that in order to attain a comprehensive settlement of the Middle East conflict, the rights to self-determination of Palestinians, including the right to build an independent state, and at the same time, the Israeli right of existence "needs to be recognized." It said Japan strongly hoped that the situation in the West Bank and Gaza Strip be improved "in a manner that the will of Palestinian inhabitants may be fully reflected."

NODONG SINMUN ON ACHIEVING NATIONAL INDEPENDENCE

[NODONG SINMUN 19 August special article: "Independence of Country and Nation is Prerequisite to Realization of Independence of Popular Masses" -- vernacular for "independence" is "chajusong" and its functional variations, except where other vernacular is provided]

[Text] In his historic policy speech "Tasks of the People's Government To Imbue the Whole of Society With the Chuche Idea," the great leader of our party and people Comrade Kim Il-song elucidated afresh the importance and significant of realizing the independence of the country and the nation in the struggle for the independence of the popular masses and gave a perfect answer to the principled problems arising from the work of realizing independence for the country and nation.

On the basis of the profound analysis of the essential problems of the nation, the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song has elucidated the great truth, for the first time in history, that the question of realizing independence for the country and the nation constitutes a part of the basic components in accomplishing the independent cause of the popular masses and that the independence of the country and the nation is the prerequisite to the realization of the independence of the popular masses.

The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught as follows: The independence of the country and the nation is the prerequisite to the realization of the independence of the popular masses; the struggle for independence of the country and the nation is the struggle for independence of the popular masses.

The original ideology that the independence of the country and the nation is the prerequisite to the realization of independence of the popular masses -- which was elucidated afresh by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song -- is the great ideology which elucidates the truth that before we realize the independence of the popular masses, we should realize independence for the country and the nation and that the popular masses should, first of all, struggle to realize the independence of the country and the nation.

As the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught, the country and the nation are units of living, which have been formed over a period of time and are indestructible, collective bodies of people. Man, a social entity, forms a community along with the collective bodies called nation and class. Within the community, man struggles to defend and realize his independence. Incidentally the individual class -- a certain group of people -- forms a part of the nation; the nation is the collective body of the class and the circles. As long as countries and borders dividing them exist on the earth, the popular masses' struggle for independence is waged with nation-state units; the destiny of the popular masses is pioneered on a national or countrywide scale. In other words, as long as people live in nation-state units, we cannot think of the destiny of the popular masses, separate from the destiny of the country and the nation.

If the nation loses independence, then the country perishes; if the country is subordinated, the popular masses cannot escape slavery, either. Only when the independence of the country and the nation is guaranteed, can the popular masses successfully pioneer their fate in conformity with their aspirations and demands. Therefore, in the people's struggle to defend independence, the highest cause is to regain independence of the nation and to defend the country's independence.

Past experience shows us that in countries under national subordination and oppression, the struggle of the popular masses to defend independence should, above all, be directed toward the realization of independence of the country and nation, and, only when the question of regaining independence of the nation is resolved, can the struggle to defend independence be meaningful in a practical way.

The idea that the independence of the country and nation is a prerequisite for realizing independence for the popular masses is a most just ideology that has clearly illuminated the road capable of hastening the realization of people's creative and independent life by closely linking the struggle to achieve independence for the country and nation to the struggle to achieve the popular masses' independence.

In his historic policy speech, the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught that in order to achieve the independence of the country and nation we should achieve national independence [tongnip], that we should establish an independent government and that we must maintain independence in national activities. The situation a country and nation comes to be in depends mainly on what kind of government the country and nation adopt.

An independent government is a political weapon guaranteeing independence to a country and nation. Independence of a country and nation is guaranteed by national sovereignty and is realized by an independent government. Only by an independent government can the independence of a country and nation be defended, the independent rights of the popular masses -- their first life -- be safeguarded and all the policies be enforced in accordance with their independent aspiration and demand.

To achieve independence for a country and nation means to establish all the lines and policies independently, suiting them to the nation's situation, to implement them by the people themselves in the nation and to exercise a complete sovereignty in external relations. In other words, the question of achieving independence for a country and nation is to firmly establish national sovereignty free of domination and subjugation by outside forces, flunkeyism and doctrinism. It is also a question of embodying the aspiration and demand of the popular masses who want to live as a free master of the world without ever binding themselves to anything.

This being the case, the independence of a country and nation is not naturally generated by simply achieving national sovereignty and establishing a government. Even after a nation has achieved the independence of a nation and established a government, it loses the life of an independent nation if the nation fails to maintain independence in its national activities and neither can it avoid political and economic domination by outside forces nor achieve a complete independence of country and nation. Only when we maintain the independence in all sectors of national activities can we successfully expel pressures and interference from outside forces, achieve the principles of independence, self-reliance and self-defense and energetically accelerate the revolution and construction in accordance with the popular masses' aspiration and demand.

Indeed, the idea on achieving national independence [tongnip] establishing an independent government and maintaining independence in national activities is a key guideline that the nations and countries should firmly adhere to in achieving independence.

The idea that the independence of a country and nation is a prerequisite for the popular masses' independence, that in order to achieve independence of a country and nation we should achieve national independence [tongnip] and establish an independent government and that we should maintain independence in national activities -- all elucidated by the respected and beloved leader Comrade Kim Il-song -- is a unique elucidation of the legitimacy of the popular masses' struggle to realize independence and a banner of encouragement that gives a strong driving force to the people's struggle to achieve the independence of a country and nation and build a new and independent world.

In his historic policy speech, the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song, elucidating before our republic's government the tasks to achieve the independence of our country and nation, has taught that we should achieve a complete national sovereignty throughout the nation by reunifying the divided fatherland. Anti-U.S. struggle for independence in South Korea and independent reunification of the fatherland are the only ways to achieve a complete national independence in our country. To root out the tragedy of national division in our country and achieve a firm national sovereignty throughout the nation is a noble national cause to make South Korea independent and to defend the South Korean people's independence.

The social phenomenon mainly trampling upon the national sovereignty in a colonial state is the suppression of the nation by the imperialists. When the nation is subjugated by the outside forces and when national sovereignty is trampled upon, the popular masses become slaves, they suffer from suppression and exploitation and their independence is completely trampled upon.

In a bid to maintain a colonial rule in South Korea, the U.S. imperialists are now ruthlessly trampling upon everything that is national and progressive and robbing the people of their fundamental democratic rights and freedom, while practicing a fascist military rule in terms of politics. It is clear that independence of the people cannot be guaranteed in a place where things progressive, popular and national are regarded as crimes, the rights to existence and democratic freedom are trampled upon and slave-like obedience and subjugation are forced on the people. The only true way to preserve national dignity and defend the South Korean popular masses' independence is to put an end to the U.S. colonial rule in South Korea, where the people are forced to suffer from national repression and subjugation, and regain the national sovereignty.

Because of this very situation, a struggle to reunify the country and regain national sovereignty in South Korea is a righteous struggle to make South Korea independent, safeguard independence of the South Korean people and to guarantee an independent and creative life to them.

The most important and urgent problem for the Korean people to regain a complete national sovereignty and for the South Korean people to live independently is to force the U.S. imperialist troops of aggression to withdraw from South Korea and reunify the divided fatherland. As long as the U.S. troops continue to occupy South Korea and force division on our nation, neither national reunification nor independent and free life are conceivable for the South Korean people. The forcible occupation of South Korea by U.S. troops is the source of all misery and unhappiness suffered by the South Korean people and the whole nation.

Based on the forcible occupation of South Korea, the U.S. imperialists are flagrantly scheming to keep our fatherland perpetually divided so as to achieve their ambition of aggression. They also are trying to provoke a new war in Korea.

Forcing the U.S. troops to withdraw from South Korea is a basic requirement for making South Korea independent and reunifying the fatherland and an indispensible prerequisite for founding an independent and reunified nation and for the preservation of peace.

All of the Korean people today are energetically struggling to force the U.S. troops to withdraw from South Korea. Anti-U.S. struggle is unprecedently being strengthened among the people of all walks of life in South Korea. This is a just, patriotic struggle to achieve the independence of the nation. When the U.S. troops are withdrawn from South Korea, the path for our country's independent reunificaion will open wide.

The proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo [DCRK] put forward by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song is a rational proposal for reunification in which the nation's fundamental interests are placed at a premium and in which national ideology is replete.

The question of our country's reunification is a matter of putting an end to domination and interference of outside forces, achieving a complete sovereignty of the Korean people, eradicating distrust and confrontation between the North and South and of achieving national unity. It is a question of national character but not a question of ideology or system. For this reason, a solution to the question of reunification of our country and our nation is a pannational question that all the classes and walks of life of the country are interested in, regardless of their ideas, systems, religions and wealth. It is a question of first priority that should be solved ahead of all other questions in the struggle to achieve the independence of our people.

The existence of a nation takes precedence over ideas, ideology, systems, factions, independence of man, revolution and construction. For this reason, whether we are nationalists or communists or whatever ideas and ideologies we may worship, we should defend independence of a country and nation ahead of all other things.

Only the proposal for reunification that subjects all the problems arising in reunifying the fatherland to the basic interests of the whole nation and to the accomplishment of independence of the nation can be the just one. The proposal for founding the DCRK, a proposal put forth reflecting such basic demands and basic positions, is a most unique proposal for reunification that put forth the question of nation in its preamble and elucidated the most straight forward path to found a unified state on the basis of national ideology and achieve independence of our nation in its entirety.

When the DCRK is founded and the 10-point policy for a unified state is enacted, then the independence of the nation will be firmly established on the Korean Peninsula as a whole and a complete sovereign, independent nation with dignity not depending on any outside forces and not participating in any blocs will emerge on it.

Our people will make every effort possible to achieve the national aspiration of establishing an independent and unified state and of living a happy and dignified life in a reunified fatherland not suffering from division. Our people who are vigorously struggling, upholding the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song with loyalty and following the leadership of the glorious party center, will see to it that they achieve the holy cause of forcing the U.S. troops to withdraw from South Korea, reunifying the divided fatherland and of achieving national sovereignty throughout the nation.
